The House of Lords on the 7th inst. disregarded the Ministerial commendation of the bill which proposed to give Ireland permission to enrol Volunteer Corps, and negatived the second reading by 39 to 16 votes. Their Lordships have taken but a languid interest in the few questions that have arisen since. On Monday the Lord Chancellor and those usefully ornamental peers, Earl Beauchamp and Lord Skelmersdale, resolved themselves into Royal Commissioners, and from the woolsack signified her Majesty's assent to a number of bills. Disrobing themselves, the noble Lords subsequently took part in advancing several measures. On Tuesday further progress was made with the multitude of bills; and the Lord Chancellor gave their Lordships something to amuse themselves with during the recess in the shape of a measure to amend and consolidate the Municipal Corporations Acts.

All the miscellaneous subjects which have occupied the time of the Lower House we need not touch upon. But it may be mentioned that on the 8th inst. Mr. J. Holms's motion to reduce the P. and O. contract from eight to three years was negatived by 142 to 54 votes; and Sir Wilfrid Lawson initiated another discussion on the vexed question of placing a monument of the late Prince Imperial in Westminster Abbey, the Chancellor of the Exchequer authoritatively denying that the idea had originated with her Majesty, and deprecating the notion that there was any political feeling in the matter, but many hon. members stoutly protesting against the statue being put up in the Abbey. Mr. Justin McCarthy joined in this conversation, and made good the ground he had taken up as a quiet but singularly effective debater. On Monday the Chancellor of the Exchequer explained that the Royal Commission on Agricultural Distress was not complete, but gave the following list of members who had accepted seats on the Commission:—

The Duke of Richmond, who will be the President, the Duke of Buccleuch, Earl Spencer, and Lord Vernon; Mr. Goschen, Mr. H. Chaplin, Colonel Kingscote, Mr. H. Rodwell, Mr. Joseph Cowen, Captain Ritchie, and Mr. M. Henry; Mr. Jacob Wilson, near Morpeth; Mr. Robert Patterson, Scotland; Mr. Charles Howard, Bedford; Sir William Stevenson, late Chairman of the Board of Inland Revenue; Professor Bonamy Price; Mr. William Stratton, of Kingston, near Warminster; and Mr. John Clay. [The name of Mr. John Rice, tenant farmer, of County Cork, was on Tuesday added.]

Mr. Cross the same day intimated that the capital sentence passed on a Mr. Mainwaring for the murder of a policeman in Derby would not be carried into effect by reason of the peculiar mode adopted by the Jury to decide his guilt. It appeared that half were in favour of a verdict of "manslaughter," half for "murder." To settle the matter they did not "toss," as was at first reported, but hit upon the expedient of electing a chairman, whose casting vote should settle the fate of Mainwaring! The Home Secretary seemed nettled by Mr. Callan's query whether, under these circumstances, the convict would be hanged. Sir Julian Goldsmid had tarried too long with his motion censuring by implication the Government for their policy in Egypt. But faint interest was evinced in the motion on Monday, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer had little difficulty in showing that the Government had simply acted as they had in order to prevent anarchy in Egypt. Thereafter, the Irish University Bill was read the third time, amid general cheering. Tuesday afternoon found hon. members scarcely in the humour to prolong discussion on any point. Hence, the Banking Bill, rendered innocuous as possible, was rapidly pushed through Committee; the Corrupt Practices at Elections Bill, amended in one or two clauses, was read the third time; and Mr. Lowther succeeded in getting the Irish National School Teachers' Pension Bill reported.

To enable Parliament to separate on the date fixed the House of Lords had a Wednesday sitting, and pushed a budget of bills through various stages. In the Lower House Sir George Campbell, seldom a mirth-mover, raised a laugh by correcting an error in the notice-paper whereby he was made to say that the Government invested a large staff of persons in India with "great families," and then suddenly reduced them. For "families" read "privileges." The Attorney-General, challenged by Mr. Bicke, then administered a mild rebuke to Lord de Lisle for making use of his privilege as a peer to escape payment of a debt of £2 8s. The Home Secretary felt bound to admit that the London water was not all that could be desired when Mr. Fawcett had in a long and able address supported his motion:—

"That, in view of the fact that the Metropolitan Board of Works has been unable to pass any measure dealing with the water supply of London, this House is of opinion that it is a subject which ought, without further delay, to be dealt with by the Government.

The speeches of Mr. Sclater-Booth and Mr. Cross showed that the Government were fully alive to the importance of remedying the defects complained of; and the Home Secretary prevailed upon Mr. Fawcett to withdraw his motion by promising to look into the matter further during the recess. Captain Gosset was then enabled to announce that, at the eleventh hour, Mr. Grissell had surrendered himself to answer to the charge of breach of privilege. The Banking Bill, Public Works Loan Bill, and Appropriation Bill were then read the third time.

Whether it was that they were braced by the plunge into the London water supply on Wednesday afternoon, or that they entertained cheerful souvenirs of the Whitebait Dinner in the evening, certain it was that a tendency to jocularity was to be observed on the part of Ministers in the House of Commons at the commencement of Thursday's sitting. The Upper Chamber had but to assemble to read the second or third time such measures as had reached Lord Redesdale from the Commons. Previously, however, Lord Skelmersdale and a few other curious Peers gathered in the Lords' gallery in the Lower House in the hope, possibly, of viewing Mr. Grissell brought up in custody of the doughty Sergeant-at-Arms. But, if such was their anticipation, they were disappointed. Mr. Anderson having, amid a chorus of disapproving ejaculations from the Ministerialists, moved the adjournment in order to animadvert in strong terms against the barbarity of setting a price on Cetewayo's head, albeit Sir Michael Hicks-Beach had disavowed all knowledge of the rumour, the Secretary for the Colonies again threw doubt on the report, and was emphatically supported by the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Mr. Anderson thereupon withdrew his motion. Mr. Monk had prior to this cleared Lord De Lisle from an aspersion cast upon the noble Lord's character to the effect that he had made use of his privilege as a peer to avoid paying a small debt; and the same hon. member occasioned some laughter by pointing out the anomaly that the Upper House had read the Deaf and Dumb Children's Education Bill a first time before it had been read a third time in the Commons. Mr. Grissell's breach of privilege then came on, and was very quickly disposed of. Premising that the House would have the right to arrest Mr. Grissell again next Session, the Chancellor of the Exchequer moved that he be confined to Newgate for the remaining hours of the present Session, a course which was supported by the Marquis of Hartington, and unanimously agreed to. Then, with a freshness of manner and an ingenuousness of questioning that suggested that the Afghan War was quite a new topic, Mr. Grant Duff, undaunted by empty benches, lifted his voice on high and seriously criticised the policy which led to the war and the results of the campaign, Sir George Campbell remaining in ambush in a back seat ready to spring likewise on the front Ministerial Bench, whereon Sir Stafford Northcote and Mr. E. Stanhope sat with unruffled composure, serene in the knowledge that the morrow would free them from the hostile attacks which have ever been gallantly repelled.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

At Shoeburyness on the 7th inst. the competition with the 10-in. muzzle loading gun took place. Prizes of the value of £66 10s. were won by the first and second detachments of the 4th Durham, the 4th Forfar, and the 1st Edinburgh corps. An order has been issued by the camp commandant on the departure of the first division, praising the conduct and military efficiency of the men. The Camp was formally taken possession of by ninety-four detachments of the Second Division on Saturday last, and on Sunday about 1000 men attended Divine service. The aggregate value of prizes to be competed for during this week is £389, and £60 for repository competitions. The competition began on Monday with 64-pounder Palliser muzzle-loading rifled gun. The first prize of £25 was won by the second detachment of the West Kent Corps; the second prize of £20 went to the first detachment of the 1st Durham; the third prize of £15 was taken by the second detachment of the 9th Kent; the fourth prize of £10 by the first detachment of the 4th East York; and the fifth prize by the first detachment of the 12th Kent. The score of nineteen made by the 10th Kent detachment being the highest in either week in the shell competition, that detachment wins the Cinque Ports Challenge Cup and £10, given now for the first time. The score of 11 of the 2nd Durham detachment was tied on Monday for the Scotland's Cup by the third detachment of the 3rd Middlesex, but the Durham men won the cup on the tie. The following are the winners of the prizes on Tuesday:—First prize, £50 (N.A.A. silver cups), 3rd Middlesex, first detachment; second prize, £20 (N.A.A.), 3rd Middlesex, sixth detachment; third prize, £15 (N.A.A.), 2nd Middlesex, fourth detachment; fourth prize, £10 (Captain Rutley's), 10th Kent, third detachment. The metropolis was again successful on Wednesday, taking all four prizes in the Armstrong contest. No. 8 detachment, 3rd Middlesex, won Sir Richard Wallace's prize, ten silver cups, value £50; No. 1 detachment, 10th Kent, Messrs. Elkington's prize of £21; No. 6 detachment, 1st London, third prize of £15; and No. 3 detachment, 3rd Middlesex, the fourth prize. The Queen's Prize of £100 for the highest average scores throughout the meeting was won by the Hull detachment of the 4th East York.

At the close of the grand field-day held at the Volunteer Engineers' Camp, Chatham, on Saturday, General Bulwer, the General commanding the district, addressed the men in very flattering terms. He expressed the astonishment he felt at the celerity and neatness with which they had performed the difficult task of fortifying a wholly undefended position, and concluded by saying that their orderly conduct in camp was throughout all that could be desired.

The annual prize-meeting of the 3rd London, which began last Saturday at the butts of the City regiments at Rainham, was resumed and brought to a conclusion on Monday. The list of prizes was a long and valuable one, thanks to the liberality of the various City companies, the battalion prizes being contributed by the Grocers' Company, the Ward of Farringdon, the Saddlers' Company, Drapers' Company, Mercers' Company, Fishmongers' Company, and Merchant Taylors' Company. In addition to these, a handsome challenge cup, presented to the regiment by General Napier of Magdala, honorary colonel of the corps; and a challenge cup for officers, presented by Captain Hayne, of the 13th Hussars; and a cup, given by Lieutenant-Colonel Laurie, were also competed for; as well as a series of prizes for recruits who had joined since last year, and consolation prizes for men who had not won a prize at the meeting. The officer in command of the firing party was Captain and Adjutant Boyce, who also acted as umpire. The first prize, the Grocers' Company Challenge Cup, which entitles the winner to wear the regimental badge for the year as the best shot in the regiment, was won by Private Briggs. The prizes presented by Farringdon Ward were won by Private Watts, Private Bartholomew, Corporal Spilling, Sergeant Clifford, Private Sorrell, and Corporal Bennett. The prizes given by the Saddlers' Company were taken by Colour-Sergeant Harvey, Sergeant Peters, Private Minihan, Lance-Corporal Scarborough, and Sergeant Hills. The prizes presented by the Mercers' Company were won by Colour-Sergeant Wells, Assistant Sergeant-Major Rattey, Colour-Sergeant Gray, Sergeant Groves, Private Bruce, Private Remman, Private Tratt, and Sergeant Morley. The prizes given by the Fishmongers' Company were won by Private Sharp, Colour-Sergeant Brown, Corporal Turpin, Captain Doll, Private Sunman, Private Redgrave, Lance-Corporal Sherwin, Colour-Sergeant Ruel. Other prizes in the battalion series were won by Private Adlington, Private Cubit, Lieutenant Hepworth, Private Randall, Corporal Greenfield, Private Wright, Private English, Captain Brockwell, Private Carr, Private Ashwell, Private Woodstock, Private Ford, Private Howell, Sergeant Tomkins, Sergeants Maynard, Smith, Wright, Privates Lambert and Clarke, of G company, and Private Moor. In the first stage of the competition for the Napier Challenge Cup five shots were fired at 200 yards, five at 500, and five at 600 yard, three chosen men from each company competing; a prize and the Napier badge being given to each man in the winning squad, and the losing companies to fire independently by squads for two minutes at 200 yards. The cup was won by letter A (Captain Crosland's Company) letter B (Captain Pollock's Company) being next; and in the independent, or rapid, firing the prizes were won by D G and M companies. In the second stage of this competition, shot for at 600 yards, seven shots, Colonel Laurie's Cup was won by Lance-Corporal Bruce. After an exciting competition the Challenge Cup for Officers, presented by Captain Hayne, was won by Lieutenant Hepworth; the next in order of merit being Captains Brockwell and Doll.

A rifle-match took place on the 7th inst. between the London Scottish R.V. and the Civil Service R.V. at the ranges of the former on Wimbledon-common, the result being a victory for the Scottish by thirty-seven points. The four highest scorers who won the sweepstake prizes in connection with the match were Captain Tytheridge (Civil Service), Lieutenant McKerrell, Privates Jamieson and Sutherland (all London Scottish).

The nineteenth annual meeting of the Essex Rifle Association was opened at the range, Danbury, on Tuesday, under the presidency of Sir W. N. Abdy, Bart. The prizes include a valuable challenge shield, given by Mr. O. E. Coope, M.P., a silver cup, a medal, and about £180 in money. A melancholy interest attaches to one of these latter prizes, from the fact that it is the gift of the late Frances, Countess Waldegrave, who offered it on the occasion of distributing the prizes last year, when Lord Carlingford was president of the association. The prizes will be distributed by Mrs. Abdy, wife of Dr. J. T. Abdy, Judge of the Essex County Court.

At the annual meeting of the Oxfordshire Rifle Association, held at Oxford on Monday, the bronze medal of the National Rifle Association, with £10, was won by Private Danar, of the Oxford City Corps. Colonel North's prize and Lieutenant-Colonel Hall's prize were won by Sergeant Jones, of Henley. Private Ferris, of the Oxford City Corps, won Major Fane's prize. The Grand Challenge Cup was carried off by the Deddington detachment.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The Greenwich District Board of Works have affixed their seal to a memorial to the First Commissioner of Woods and Forests praying that the horticultural works of Greenwich Park may be increased, thus making it equal to the other parks in the metropolis as regards floral attractions.

The elders of the Scotch Church, Crown-court, having received the resignation of Dr. Cumming, have asked the representatives of the Church of Scotland to supply ministers worthy to maintain the reputation of the Church in London. Expressions of the deepest regret and sympathy have been forwarded to Dr. Cumming.

In reply to a congratulatory address from the congregation of the Oratory, Birmingham, on Sunday, Cardinal Newman said the Pope, in his first audience, told him it was his wish that he should not separate himself from his duties and responsibilities at the Oratory. It was some consolation for him now to know that he should die as he had lived—Father of the Oratory, the priest and pastor of the Oratory Mission.

The City Press says:—The Sir John Bennett Board School Scholarships, founded by Sir John Bennett and open to all boys in the Board Schools of the London educational district, has been awarded to William Skevington, aged twelve, educated at the Jamaica-level Board School, under its head master, Mr. Greenwood. The scholarship is of the value of £24 5s. per annum, and held for four years, giving admission to the City of London School.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that on the last day of the fifth week in July the total number of paupers was 77,221, of whom 40,825 were in workhouses and 36,396 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks of 1878, 1877, and 1876, these figures show an increase of 1012, 608, and 477 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 552, of whom 374 were men, 138 women, and 40 children under sixteen.

The National Carnation and Picotee Society's show was held on Tuesday at the Royal Horticultural Gardens, South Kensington. The lateness of the year is evidenced by the fact that this exhibition was held on Old Lammas Day. The "Gardeners' Dictionary" gives its directions for exhibiting carnations under the date of June and the beginning of July. July 22 was this season appointed for the exhibition; but even from that date a postponement of three weeks became necessary. Tuesday's show was a very good one, and there was a large attendance.

The council of the Royal Agricultural Society has resolved to sell out £10,000 New Three per Cents, to meet the claims arising from the Exhibition at Kilburn. Colonel Kingscote said it had been found impossible to state the exact loss resulting from the Exhibition; but, so far as could yet be ascertained, it would come to about £10,000. But they congratulated themselves that the holding of the show in London had, among other advantages, enabled them to add about 1000 names to their permanent list of membership. The committee adjourned till October, when the fund will be finally closed.

The Central Executive Committee of the St. John's Ambulance Association has received £60 from the Blackheath Centre as a contribution towards its head-quarter expenses. A similar amount has also been sent by the Ladies' Council of the Metropolitan Centre. The City Police Class, held at the Snow-hill Police-Station last week, underwent a satisfactory examination, and several new police classes have been formed. Certificates of proficiency have lately been distributed to classes at Hampton Court Palace, Ashford, Bexley, Liverpool, Oxford, Portsmouth, Hanworth Park, Isleworth, Esher, Burton-on-Trent, Leeds, and Malvern.

The Lord Mayor presided at the annual conference of the Association for the Reform and Codification of the Law of Nations, which was opened on Monday at the Guildhall. Sir R. J. Phillimore, president of the congress, in the course of his inaugural address asserted that there never was an epoch in which the life of States, and of individuals which composed them, was so incapable as the present of isolation, and so necessarily brought into mutual communication and contact. It was no longer competent to any State to refuse to take cognizance of foreign laws and foreign administration of justice. Every work which went to show that the interest and the duty of States were one conferred some benefits upon the commonwealth of nations.

At the meeting of the Royal National Life-Boat Institution, held on the 7th inst., rewards amounting to £118 were granted to the crews of life-boats for services rendered during the stormy weather experienced in July. Payments amounting to nearly £4000 were likewise made on life-boat establishments. Receipt of contributions and legacies was announced, including £850 from "D" for a life-boat to be named the May; £100 annual subscription from the Ancient Order of Foresters, in aid of the support of their two life-boats, the Forester at Tynemouth, and the Foresters' Pride at West Hartlepool; and £26 5s. from the underwriters of a cargo by the Austrian barque Andima V. The late Mr. Richard Vandeleur, of Baden; Mr. G. H. Fletcher, of Carshalton; and Mrs. Danby Harcourt, of Swinton, had each left a legacy of £500 to the institution.

Last week 2327 births and 1223 deaths were registered in London. Allowing for increase of population, the births were 49, and the deaths 422, below the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths included 5 from smallpox, 54 from measles, 43 from scarlet fever, 9 from diphtheria, 34 from whooping-cough, 14 from different forms of fever, and 90 from diarrhœa. The deaths from lung diseases, which had been 182 and 188 in the two preceding weeks, declined to 139 last week. Different forms of violence caused 72 deaths; 55 were the result of negligence or accident, including 23 from fractures and contusions, 3 from burns and scalds, 9 from drowning, 4 from poison, and 11 of infants under one year of age from suffocation. Twelve cases of suicide were registered, being more than the average. The Astronomer Royal reports that the registered bright sunshine in the last week was 22·9 hours, the sun being above the horizon during 105·5 hours. The recorded amount of ozone considerably exceeded the average on each of the first five days of the week.

BUDDHIST REMAINS IN AFGHANISTAN.

We present two more of the Sketches of ruins of the ancient Buddhist topes in the Cabul valley, by Mr. William Simpson, our Special Artist lately at Jellalabad with the head-quarters of General Sir Samuel Browne's army in the Afghan war recently concluded. Mr. Simpson's extensive knowledge of this and other departments of Oriental archæology is recognised by the highest authorities in "such branches of learning;" and it is very likely that he will be called upon to give a connected account of his late observations in Cabul before one of the London societies devoted to these recondite studies, when they meet again for the winter session.

The subjects of antiquarian interest, shown in two of our Illustrations this week, are the Ahin Posh Tope, with its Vihara, near Jellalabad; and the Kona-deh Tope, in the Kunar Valley.

Mr. Simpson's View of the Ahin Posh Tope shows the mound formed by the ruins of that building, with the ridges of earth and stone marking where the Vihara or Buddhist Monastery stood. The Tope was the great Shrine or Temple of the Monastery. The Sketch shows partly the excavations made by Mr. Simpson where he uncovered what remains of its architecture. In a communication made by him to the Civil and Military Gazette, published at Lahore on June 3 of this year, he gives a short description of his discoveries among the Buddhist Remains of the Jellalabad Valley. We quote the following:—"The Ahin Posh Tope was nearly 100 ft. on each of its four sides, at the base, and had pilasters of the 'Indo-Corinthian' style. The arrangement was that of fourteen pilasters on each side. Originally there were two stairs, on north and south, by which the square platform was reached; but at a later date similar stairs had been added on east and west. Only a part of the first course of masonry was left, but this was sufficient to indicate that the diameter had been 80 ft., thus showing that it had been one of the second-class topes in this district. The large tope at Ummer Kheyl is the largest, being about 100 ft. in diameter." Mr. Simpson made a tunnel, 45 ft. long and about 7 ft. high, into the centre of this structure, and found the relic cell, in which was some dust—probably ashes of a Buddhist saint—a golden reliquaire and twenty gold coins. Three of these were Roman—one belonged to the reign of Domitian, another to Trajan, and the third had the head and name of "Sabina Augusta," the wife of Hadrian. The other seventeen were Indo-Scythian, among which is one declared to be quite unique, with the word Buddha in Greek characters. All these were sent to Lord Lytton, and will be deposited in the collection of the Indian Government. With reference to the term "Indo-Corinthian," in the above description, it must be remembered that the Indian architecture and sculpture of the Buddhist period derived its artistic character from the Greek examples which were introduced by the conquests of Alexander the Great in Asia. Even the term "Greco-Buddhistic" is now used by some connoisseurs.

The second of these views of Buddhist ruins now presented to our readers is that of the Kona-deh Tope, in the Kunar Valley. The stream of the Kunar Valley is one of the largest tributaries of the Kabool River, bringing down the drainage of the Hindoo Koosh through Kaffiristan. It may be recollected that about the middle of January, Sayid Mahmud Khan, the Badshah of Kunar, came to the British Camp at Jellalabad to make his salaam to Major Cavagnari. A sketch of this incident, with his portrait, appeared at that time. He is the most important man in that part of the world. He lives at a place called Pashet, on the Kunar River. There is an old fort on a hill called Kunar, which is most likely the ancient capital. In describing this place to Major Cavagnari the Khan said that its name, Kunar, came from "Koh-i-nur," the male mountain, and not from "Koh-i-noor," the mountain of light. The name Kona Deh means old village, and it is evidently the site of a town which existed in the Buddhist period. The quantity of mounds and fragments of "Buddhist masonry" may be taken as proof of this. Prominent in the foreground is an old Buddhist Tope. It is about 30 feet in diameter, and was partially excavated by Masson, but the Khan of the period stopped him. Kona-deh is about thirteen or fourteen miles from Jellalabad. A few miles higher up are the remains of Islampoor, where Buddhist masonry is also visible, indicating, along with the word "poor" in the name, that a pre-Islamite town existed at that spot.

AFGHAN PORTRAITS.

The four portraits shown in a page of our Engravings were drawn by Mr. Simpson, our Special Artist, during the late military campaign in the Cabul Valley. One of them represents a personage who was for the time of some apparent consequence in the undetermined state of Afghan politics, when it was by no means certain who would be the successor of the Ameer, Shere Ali. The Sirdar Wali Mohammed Khan, another son of Dost Mohammed and half-brother to Shere Ali, voluntarily went over to the British side in the late war. He came to the head-quarters of General Roberts in the Khurum Valley soon after the forcing of the Peiwar Pass, which will be in the recollection of our readers. He was directed thence to repair to the head-quarters of General Sir S. Browne to meet the Political Agent, Major Cavagnari. Accordingly he arrived at Jellalabad on Feb. 16, and remained there till the conclusion of peace.

The other three portraits are types, like those previously given, of different classes and races of people in Afghanistan. We may first notice that of Hayat Khan, formerly a Kaffir, which is merely the term for infidel, heathen, or Christian, at any rate non-Moslem, used by Mohammedans all over the world. Hayat Khan has become a "Nimcha," which is the name given to Kaffirs converted to Mohammedanism. His Kaffir name was Isti Kan. This man visited our camp at Jellalabad, where Mr. Jenkyns made use of him to glean some details of the race he belonged to, and of the language of the Kaffirs. He had never seen an elephant; and as the Elephant Battery of heavy forty-pounders arrived while he was in camp, he went out to see them. He expressed to Mr. Jenkyns his satisfaction and wonder at the great beasts; but he added, "I did not go too near them, in case they would eat me." This man had a tolerably fair complexion, and his hair was not quite black. He had a delicate face, which was well formed, of a pure Aryan type, showing, if he is a good representative of his people, that Kaffiristan has not a Turanian population.

To the west of Cabul is a region called Hazara—to be distinguished from another on the left bank of the Indus east of Attock. The people of this country belong to an almost pure Turanian race, and this is very strikingly exemplified in our portrait of the man Adal. Mr. Simpson met him at Gundamuk, and seeing his strongly-marked Mongolian features, asked him if he was a Hazara Wallah. The old man was very pleased at being sketched, and smiled in evident satisfaction at the operation.

Mahomed Din, an Ummer Kheyl of Darunta, is the last subject of the portrait sketches. "The Faith of Mahomed" is the translation of this man's name. His forehead and nose are evidence of a good type of race, but the small eye and rather heavy underlip might lead to doubt that the individual might not be a very brilliant light of the Prophet's faith. A number of the Ummer Kheyl tribe are settled near Darunta, which is at the north-west corner of the Jellalabad valley.

A DEFENCE OF FAT.

Though there is certainly no class in the world so peaceable as that of fat men, it does at length seem time that even they should arouse themselves, and resent the crowning insult which now each morning they suffer at the hands of every daily paper of importance. Two columns a day, in Times, Daily News, Telegraph, and Standard, of advertisements of some impertinent extract of seaweed known as Anti-Fat, are more than gentle Daniel Lambert himself could have endured; and his followers will have the fullest excuse if they return this outrageous and voluminous attack.

But should their reply seem less brilliant, less overpowering, than might be expected, it must be remembered that their opponent has cunningly chosen a season when they are almost defenceless. How is a fat man to fight in hot weather? How can you move swiftly and fiercely to combat when you find it none too easy to breathe? No! A gentleman would have advertised his Anti-Fat in the winter.

It is not that for these many centuries the Fat have not been attacked and ridiculed; the Great (in most other senses) and the Good have shared this fate—which is, indeed, a compliment, high in proportion to its violence and frequency of repetition. Shakspeare has almost exhausted even his overflowing imagination in bestowing ridiculous nicknames on Falstaff—the "horse-back breaker," the "bed-presser," the "huge hill of flesh;" but our great knight remains the most brilliant of his author's creations—the most delightful, witty, sagacious, original and easy of all possible companions. A fat man is a born judge: he has not that constant itch for hasty action which overbalances the thin. His breadth enables him to see both sides of a question; and that which a sharp hawknosed fellow impatiently cuts through like a knife, he embraces, enfolds, and wholly takes possession of. Falstaff sees everything; he criticises everybody; he gives pleasure to all who know him; and if he does nothing—why, many more active men have done worse.

And Shakspeare has elsewhere nobly atoned for his irreverence to this greater Rabelais of his creation. It is Cæsar who says,

> Let me have men about me that are fat, and who very wisely notes that men with "lean and hungry looks" are dangerous. More than all, Shakspeare himself was fat—at all events, in those pleasant days when he went back to Stratford-on-Avon, there to finish his life in genial contemplation of burgesses and drovers, plump and jolly country lads and lasses. This was his happiest, and therefore his wisest time; and with him, as with many other great people, wisdom and fat increased together.

The wits, I repeat, have often scoffed at fat. In an early number of the Spectator Addison thinks it a fine joke to invent a story of a certain market-town, in which there was a Club of Fat Men "that did not come together (as you may well suppose) to entertain one another with sprightliness and wit, but to keep one another in countenance. The room where the club met (he tells us) was something of the largest, and had two entrances, the one by a door of moderate size, and the other by a pair of folding-doors. If a candidate for this corpulent club could make his entrance through the first, he was looked upon as unqualified; but if he stuck in the passage, and could not force his way through it, the folding doors were immediately thrown open for his reception, and he was saluted as a brother. I have heard that this club, though it consisted but of fifteen persons, weighed above three ton."

Most fat men who read this will probably think only that it is fun of a very obvious and easy kind, and will take it as no great argument either for or against the habit of body which they affect. But its sequel is much more than this—it is a triumphant confirmation of Cæsar's theory, a proof that Shakspeare was right when he taught us to prefer Falstaff to Cassius.

For, what was the fate of this Club of Fat Men? Mark! "In opposition to this society, there sprung up another composed of scarecrows and skeletons (Addison was always famed for the justice and grace of his epithets) who, being very meagre and envious, did all they could to thwart the designs of their bulky brethren, whom they represented as men of dangerous principles (!); till at length they worked them out of the favour of the people, and consequently out of the magistracy." Thus, all that the satirist can find to laugh at in fat men, is their fatness; but "meagreness," as he postulates, carries with it envy—and the lean kine, of their very nature, are given to swallowing the fat. Yet, so complete is his story, he shows that these corpulent citizens do not allow themselves to be defeated, though, with a noble magnanimity, they care not to defeat. "These factions," he concludes, "tore the Corporation in pieces for several years, till at length they came to this accommodation—that the two bailiffs of the town should be annually chosen out of the two clubs; by which means the principal magistrates are at this day coupled like rabbits, one fat and one lean."

And, as in the case of Shakspeare, yet more with Addison, one may use the Tu quoque argument—though he gently ridiculed the enormous, he was stout himself. Indeed, except Pope, all the wits of that great time, as Thackeray tells us, were fat. "Swift was fat; Addison was fat; Steele was fat; Gay and Thompson were preposterously fat"—and they were the shining lights of perhaps the most "clubbable" age that London has known. To genius, to wit, to the strongest sense, they added a breadth of humour that made life not only complete but pleasant—even Swift could be most pleasant when he liked, though he hardly comes naturally into the noble fellowship of the Fat.

And yet now—now, after centuries of pleasant reputation, of satire which is truly the highest flattery—an advertiser, a vender of nostrums, and (though I have no desire to say anything severe) an American, comes among us, places himself on our breakfast-table with our coffee and our rolls, and without condescending to argue the question tranquilly assumes that fat is an evil, and tells us that he knows how to get rid of it! He sums us up in pounds (which never convey the faintest idea of weight to my mind) and he tells us that Mrs. Elijah Bangs (with countless intermediate initials), of Iliadville, Mass., lost fifty pounds in a fortnight and hopes to lose fifty more!

Very likely it will kill the woman—and serve her right; but hecatombs of Mrs. Bangs would not wipe out the insult—the begging the question as to the evils of fat, or rather the assuming that they are not to be questioned. And the worst of it is that one cannot condescend to argue the matter: one cannot stoop, from one's height (and breadth) seriously to prove to this mistaken person how entirely he is in the wrong, how he is throwing away his money in his attempt to introduce Scragginess into a sound, comfortable, and steadygoing country like England. People never value what they have not experienced: and this quality of fatness—going with middle age, repose, and a proper amount of deliberation—is just what a young and mercurial nation like the American cannot be expected to possess and care for. But "a time will come;" and we, who are fat, can be content to bide it.

For—and this is the gist of the matter—contentment and a reasonable allowance of fat go together. The Irishman was surely plump as well as Irish, who originated that delightful proverb, "Take it aisy; and if ye can't take it aisy, take it as aisy as ye can." We have the authority of Mr. Weller the elder for the statement that "Width and wisdom always grows together;" and Mr. Weller senior certainly ought to have known. "Laugh," saith the proverb, "and grow fat"—thereby propounding stoutness as an aim in itself, and one worthy to make even so admirable a thing as laughter more admirable still. In Africa fatness is a cardinal beauty in a woman; even in England, a fat woman at a fair commands a certain number of spectators, at twopence a head. When Napoleon was a thin young man, hardly any cared to look at him; a stout emperor, he was the cynosure (whatever that may be) of the eyes of Europe.

But to make a number of small isolated statements in lieu of a broad and connected argument is to nag; and nagging is peculiarly a vice of the thin. Voltaire would have nagged; not so Rabelais—whose very name carries fatness with it, though I know not what record History has kept of its owner's girth. Let me only recapitulate, sum up, and conclude. Fat is dignified, contented, placid, witty and (what is more) humorous, not given to be fidgety, not envious, not slanderous, not mean or grudging, not precipitate. Choose the Fat as your confidants, your companions, your advisers, your friends—and your enemies; and (if you have any choice in the matter) your fathers and mothers.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

"By the Waters of Babylon" (Psalm 137) is a composition—for soprano solo, chorus, and orchestra—by the late Hermann Goetz, whose celebrity only began to be extended just as death removed him, at a premature age, in the maturity of his powers. In his opera, "The Taming of the Shrew" (produced, in English, at Drury Lane Theatre in October last, and then noticed by us), Goetz scarcely appears to such advantage as in the fine orchestral symphony in F minor played at Madame Viard-Louis's excellent concerts. The psalm now referred to is another evidence of how much has been lost to musical art by the death of Goetz. It is a fine composition, conceived in a serious and impressive style, and treated with masterly skill and power in all its details, solo, choral, and orchestral; and it produced a marked impression on its recent performance at the first private concert of the newly-formed London Musical Society. The work is published by Messrs. Novello, Ewer, and Co., who have also brought out another composition by Goetz, a cantata entitled "Nœnia." This is a setting of a poem by Schiller for chorus and orchestra, and contains some fine contrasts between the instrumental and the choral effects. Such works can scarcely remain long without public performance, and when this takes place we shall have further opportunity to speak of their merits. The same firm has also published "Out of the Darkness" ("Aus der Tiefe"), a setting of the 133rd Psalm by Herr Henschel, the eminent baritone. The work consists of a series of movements for solo voices and chorus, in combination and alternation, and the writing is throughout that of a highly-trained and skilled practical musician. All the works just referred to will be specially welcome to choral societies, both public and private. The original German text has, in each instance, been skilfully rendered into English by the Rev. J. Troutbeck.

The excellent series of Music Primers published by Messrs. Novello, Ewer, and Co., has received a valuable addition in a tutor for the violin, compiled by Mr. Berthold Tours, who is in every way qualified for the production of such a work, not only by his general musical acquirements, but also by his practical knowledge of the instrument referred to. In the compass of little more than a hundred quarto pages, and at the price of two shillings, we have here a comprehensive course of instruction, from the simplest directions to mere beginners to the acquirement of high technical skill. Musical exercises of various degrees of difficulty, diagrams of the position of the player and the instrument, explanations of the elements of music and of terms used therein, with a vast amount of other valuable information, make up an excellent treatise.

From the same publishers we have the fifth course of a work that has previously been commended—a translation by Herr Mannheimer, from the twenty-fifth German edition, of Aloys Hennes's "New Method for the Piano." This portion begins with the 201st and closes with the 250th lesson, and includes pieces and preludes in various keys, each intended for the practice of some special executive difficulty. The method is well adapted for popular instruction.

"Cramer's Vocal School," edited by J. Wilbye Cooper, is a comprehensive system of instruction in singing, compiled by a well-known vocalist, and published by Messrs. J. B. Cramer and Co. It is based on a work of the late Mr. Tom Cooke, entitled "Singing Exemplified," that was long held in great esteem. Mr. W. Cooper has judiciously retained the best portions of this, and has added much information calculated to enhance the value and importance of the work, which is equally well adapted for school or special private tuition. Full directions are given, with the authority of long practical experience, as to the production and management of the voice; and these are followed by exercises in scales and passages, the assiduous study and the command of which can scarcely fail to form a thorough vocalist. The moderate price of the book places it within easy reach.

Two songs by Franz Abt—"Golden Sunshine" and "How dear thou art to me"—will be welcome in many drawing-room circles. The melody in each case is pleasing and expressive, although simple, and lying within a moderate compass of voice; and both songs are worthy the reputation of a composer who has produced so many successful pieces of a similar kind, and who has as yet shown no signs of exhaustion. They are published by Messrs. R. Cocks and Co.; who have also issued a work of much value for singers—a series of "Daily Vocal Exercises," by Ciro Pinsuti. Its intention is not that of a singing method, but to produce a number of scale and other passages, the practice of which, in the several inversions and transpositions, will tend to the development of the pupil's voice and to certainty and readiness in execution. This is accomplished in the compass of a few pages, the study and mastery of which cannot fail to produce good results. From the same firm we have an effective transcription for the pianoforte, by W. Smallwood, of Stephen Glover's admired melody, "I love the merry sunshine."

"Ländler," op. 152, by Carl Reinecke, is the title of a series of seven characteristic pieces (with a finale) in a German dance form, by the excellent Leipzig Capellmeister, who is also eminent as a composer and a pianist. They are full of quaint grace, numbers six and seven offering examples of the facile use of the scientific form of the canon. They are published by Messrs Metzler and Co.; who have also issued an effective and brilliant pianoforte piece entitled "La Reine de Saba, Chœur des Sabéennes, Transcription. Georges Bizet."

Six songs by Chalton T. Speer, published by Messrs. Weekes and Co., are pleasing pieces for as many varieties of voice. No. 1, "Deserted," is for a soprano; No. 2, "The Leaf," for mezzo-soprano; No. 3, "A Wish," for contralto; No. 4, "To Mary," for tenor; No. 5, "A Glimpse," for baritone; and No. 6, "The Sea King," for bass. The melody of each is essentially vocal in character, and limited to a moderate compass of voice.

Six songs by Joseph F. Duggan, also published by Messrs. Weekes, are the first set of a series of "Rhythmic Tentatives." The first is entitled "Anacreon" (Ode to Temperance); the second, "Elleree;" the third, "The Lily of the Lake;" the fourth, "La Lushingha;" the fifth, "Filomela;" and the sixth, "Dalla Profonde." The motto prefixed to the series is, "Rhythm alone is sufficient to recast the entire fount of musical idea," and the composer has illustrated this axiom by some ingenious varieties of musical treatment in the six songs here collected. The same publishers have also issued a cheap edition of Mr. Chatton Speer's cantata, "The Arsenal, or War and Peace," the text from Longfellow. The work consists of seven movements, for solo voices and chorus, written in a style that will render it acceptable to amateur choral societies.

"Honneur et Gloire—Marche Militaire," published by J. B. Cramer and Co.), is a very spirited piece for the pianoforte, composed by Miss Lillie Albrecht, the eminent young pianist. It has been performed with great success by the band of the Royal Horse Guards, and was recently introduced at a concert at Marlborough House, besides having been given elsewhere. It has the true martial tone; the march movement proper (in G major) being well contrasted, and relieved by a very melodious trio (or "alternativo"), in the subdominant, the whole being especially suitable for military use and as a spirited piece for the pianoforte.

"Rigadon" and "Passepied" are two effective pianoforte pieces by Florian Pascal, in which the quaint style of the dance forms named in the titles are well preserved amid modern surroundings. Mr. Joseph Williams is the publisher, as also of "La Harpe Eolienne," a graceful nocturne, and a brilliant fantasia, on subjects from Weber's "Preciosa," both effective pianoforte pieces, by J. Leybach.

Ordsal Park, which cost the Corporation of Salford about £15,000, was on Saturday last dedicated to the public use. The borough of Salford now possesses four public parks.

The High Court of Foresters concluded their sitting at Sheffield last Saturday, when Belfast and Cardiff were selected as the district to elect auditors for 1880, and Northampton was decided upon as the place of meeting in 1881. The High Court goes to Dublin next year.

The twenty-sixth annual meeting of the Durham County Agricultural Society was opened at Durham yesterday week, under the presidency of Earl Ravensworth. The weather was fine, and there was a large attendance. There was, however, a decrease in the number of exhibitions in some of the classes.

The annual show of the Irish Royal Agricultural Association was held at Newry last week. The weather was most favourable, and the show was a great success. Many of the prize animals at Kilburn were exhibited and took prizes. The total number of animals shown was 460. The shorthorn exhibits were very good. Lord Rathdonnell's well-known roan bull, Anchor, getting first prize. This animal was first prize at Kilburn and at the Highland Society. The Lord Lieutenant visited the show, and was received by a guard of honour of the 105th Regiment. The Newry Town Commissioners presented him with an address of welcome, to which his Grace replied, congratulating the Commissioners on the prosperity of their town.—At a déjeûner given by the association in Newry the Lord-Lieutenant said that the Irish agricultural prospects were, on the whole, satisfactory. He complimented the Government on the Intermediate Education Act, which had proved so valuable, and added that the University Bill would be of great advantage in quieting religious differences. The bill in favour of Irish national teachers would also be of high value, and was appreciated by Irish people.

POLITICS.

The annual convention of the Home-Rule Confederation was held last Saturday at the Crystal Palace, under the presidency of Mr. Parnell, M.P. Among the Home-Rule Members of Parliament who were present were Mr. O'Connor Power, Mr. J. Biggar, and Mr. L. Finigan. After the business of the Convention had been transacted a public meeting was held, when a resolution was adopted affirming that the votes of Irishmen in Great Britain should be kept independent of both the Conservative and Liberal parties, and be given only to candidates prepared to vote for a Parliamentary inquiry into the nature and extent of the demand made by the Irish people for a native Legislature. A further resolution was agreed to, thanking the "active section" of the Irish party in Parliament.

At a meeting of Conservatives held at Mavan the same evening it was resolved to support Viscount Reidhaven as a candidate at the forthcoming election for the united counties of Elgin and Nairn, where there is a vacancy in consequence of the accession of Viscount Macduff to the peerage.

It was unanimously resolved at a meeting of Liberal delegates at Knighton, one of the Radnor Boroughs, last Saturday, that every effort should be made to secure the return of Lord Hartington at the next election, in case he should be unsuccessful in North-East Lancashire; and at a meeting of the Liberal One Hundred and Fifty, held at Pembroke Dock, Mr. Henry George Allen, of Heywood, Tenby, barrister, was unanimously chosen as the Liberal candidate to contest the Pembroke Boroughs at the general election.

The Liberal party in Chester have selected the Hon. Beilby Lawley, eldest son of Lord Wenlock, to contest the city at the next election in conjunction with Mr. Dodson, who has represented the city since 1874.

Colonel the Hon. A. W. A. N. Hood, one of the Conservative members for West Somerset, will not seek re-election at the next general election; and Mr. Fenwick Bissett, the master of the staghounds in the district, will be submitted as a candidate to a meeting of the Conservative electors.

Baron Henry de Worms was waited upon last Tuesday at the Cannon-street Hotel by a deputation from the Greenwich Conservative Association, for the purpose of inviting him to become a candidate for the borough at the next general election in conjunction with Mr. Boord, the sitting member, and accepted the invitation.

This Company has been established for the purpose of lending money on Freehold and other Securities in New South Wales and other Australian Colonies, a mode of employing capital which, when prudently conducted, has been found by experience to be exceedingly profitable.
The formation of a Company of this kind specially identified with New South Wales, the oldest and richest of the Australian Colonies, is calculated to contribute to the development of its vast resources. It is proposed to invest the moneys of the Company in Registered First Mortgages on Freehold and Leasehold Landed Estates and other Securities, chiefly in that Colony, yielding a present income, and to make the advances only to such an amount as will leave an ample margin of security. The rapid extension of the railways of the Colony by the Government has opened out an almost unlimited field for the employment of capital in this manner.
Titles to land are simplified by the Registration Acts under which mortgages are effected at a very trifling expense, which is borne by the borrower.
The Company will be prepared to act as Agents for the Government and Town Boards requiring the transaction of financial business in England, also for landed proprietors to receive rents, negotiate and effect sales of property, and further to conduct any business pertaining to a loan company of a sound and non-speculative character.
It is intended to call up only £2 per share, and, adopting the principle of the most successful of the Australian Companies, to issue Debentures in England. Any Shareholder, however, wishing to pay up his shares in full may do so, and will receive interest on the amount of capital uncalled at the rate of not less than 5½ per cent per annum. The average rate of interest on the investments will, it is confidently believed, be not less than 8 or 9 per cent; and, as money can be raised in England on Debentures, for fixed periods, at an average rate of 5 per cent, the profits resulting to the Shareholders on this margin will be sufficient to admit of the payment of remunerative dividends, together with the establishment of a good Reserve Fund.
The undoubted character of the Securities, and the freedom from risk or speculation in the nature of the business proposed to be conducted by the Company, should ensure for it complete success.
The following table, compiled from the Investor's Monthly Manual, shows the dividends paid by existing Companies of a similar nature:—

Name of Company.	Amount Paid-up on Shares	Present Price.	Rate of last Annual Dividend Paid.	Reserve and Balance after last Dividend.
Australian Mortgage Land Company ..	5 0 0	9 0 0	15 per cent	185,020
New Zealand Loan and Mercantile Agency	2 10 0	4 10 0	15 ,,	163,824
Trust and Agency of Australasia	1 0 0	2 10 0	20 ,,	50,944

Should no Allotment be made, the application money will be returned without any deduction; and should a less number of Shares be allotted than are applied for, the surplus deposit will be applied in payment of the amount due on Allotment.
The only contract entered into is one between W. H. Staveley and W. S. Ogle on behalf of the Company, dated July 28, 1879, providing for the payment of the preliminary expenses of the Company. This contract provides that £2000 is to be paid in reimbursement of estimated actual expenses, including advertising, brokerage, and expenses whatsoever up to allotment, and a further sum of 1 per cent on such portion of the present issue of £400,000 as may be actually allotted.
Copies of the Articles of Association and of the above-mentioned Contract may be seen at the offices of the Solicitors, in London; and Prospectuses and Forms of Application can be obtained from the Bankers, Solicitors, and Brokers of the Company, or from the Secretary, at the offices.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE, post-free.
OETZMANN & CO.,
HAMPSTEAD-ROAD.

"BUILDING NEWS" says:—
"These extensive premises (James Epps and Co.'s newly-erected cocoa and chocolate mills) have a total frontage to Holland-street of about 320 ft. The heights from the semi-basement floor to the parapets vary from 60 ft. to 72 ft., while the clock-tower stands about 110 ft. above road level, the whole forming an imposing building, whether viewed from the River Thames or the bustling thoroughfare. The total area of the various floors, &c., amounts to nearly two acres, while the area of glass in the windows is about 11,000 ft.

"CIVIL SERVICE GAZETTE" says:—
"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast-tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly-nourished frame."

"NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE" says:—
"The nutritive qualities of cocoa over either those of tea or coffee are now so generally acknowledged that the steady increase shown by official statistics in its consumption during recent years ceases to be a matter of surprise. One of the first firms to popularise this now indispensable adjunct to our breakfast-table was Messrs. Epps and Co., whose name, since 1839, has been so continuously before the public, and whose Homœopathic Cocoa is as familiar in our homes as the proverbial 'household words.' Those whose business it has been to watch at Messrs. Epps's works the elaborate and complex processes, and to note the care and labour bestowed before the crude cocoa bean is considered ready for consumption, cannot but admit that the popularity Messrs. Epps's productions have secured is fully deserved. The vastness of these works may be imagined when it is stated that five millions of pounds of prepared cocoa alone are prepared there yearly. The reputation gained, now many years since, for Mr. James Epps's preparation, both for its purity and its value as a dietetic, has been more than maintained. A constant increasing demand fully testifies to this—which must be as gratifying to Messrs. Epps as it is certainly flattering to the good faith they have kept with the public to secure so gratifying a result."

"ALL THE YEAR ROUND" says:—
"Having now disposed of fancy chocolate, let us stroll to Epps's cocoa manufactory, at Blackfriars, where may be studied the making of cocoa on a stupendous scale, giving a just idea of the value of these articles, not as luxuries, but as actual food."

"COURT JOURNAL" says:—
"In a climate so varying and trying as our own, to maintain sound and uniform health, our daily diet cannot be too carefully and attentively studied. Advancing science and recent discoveries have within the last few years been instrumental in adding several most valuable additions to our comparatively short list of dietetic foods. Foremost among these should be ranged cocoa, which, although known here several centuries previously, only came into general use within the last forty years. One of the first to popularise this now indispensable adjunct to our table was Mr. James Epps, whose 'Prepared Cocoa' has gained such just repute for its excellent and nutritious character. Prepared originally on homœopathic principles, in a soluble and convenient form, and easy of digestion, it met a public demand, speedily became popular, until now Messrs. Epps produce over five millions of pounds of their cocoa a year, and their manufactory is the largest of its kind in this country."

"CASSELL'S HOUSEHOLD GUIDE" says:—
"We will now give an account of the process adopted by Messrs. James Epps and Co., manufacturers of dietetic articles, at their works at Blackfriars, London."

"MORNING ADVERTISER" says:—
"In the middle of the seventeenth century an announcement appeared in one of the few journals of that period, to the effect that 'out of Bishopsgate-street, at a Frenchman's house, is an excellent West Indian drink, called chocolate, to be sold at reasonable rates.' This is the first record we have of the introduction of cocoa into England. For a time it flourished as a fashionable drink, and then, like all fashions, subsided. Nearly two centuries after, in 1832, the duties, which had been almost prohibitive, were greatly reduced, and one of the first to take advantage of re-establishing the popularity of cocoa was Messrs. James Epps and Co., the Homœopathic Chemists. Under the name of 'Prepared Cocoa' they introduced a soluble and convenient preparation, which required no boiling, and was palatable and highly nutritious. It met a public want, speedily became popular, and year by year has increased in demand, till the consumption now exceeds five millions of pounds yearly."

"CHRISTIAN WORLD" says:—
"'If I am to take cocoa,' said I, 'I must know what it is made of; I must examine the process; I must dive into the mystery of its manufacture; I must see and judge for myself what are the ingredients of which it is composed. With this view I made my way to the manufactory of James Epps and Co., at Blackfriars.'"

"JOHN BULL" says:—
"In no branches of industry are recent scientific and chemical discoveries more generally applied than in those upon which our food supply is so largely dependent. The luxuries of the last generation have in many cases become the daily necessaries of the present. A forcible illustration of this is to be found in the enormous increase in the consumption of cocoa year by year—in exact proportion to the increased facilities for its manufacture. An idea of the vast extent of this industry may be gained from the fact that one firm alone—that of Messrs. Epps and Co.—now sell over five millions of pounds annually. The 'Homœopathic Cocoa' of Messrs. Epps has, during the many years it has been before the public, gained great and just repute, which its excellent quality and careful preparation certainly entitle it to. A cocoa in soluble form, and combining what are technically known as 'flesh-forming' and 'heat-giving' properties, is clearly an invaluable addition to our scanty list of dietetic foods. Such Messrs. Epps claim for their prepared cocoas, and such analysis and—most valuable of all—experience has proved it to be."

"LAND AND WATER" says:—
"Through the kindness of Messrs. Epps, I recently had an opportunity of seeing the many complicated and varied processes the cacao bean passes through ere it is sold for public use; and, being interested and highly pleased with what I saw during the visit to the manufactory, I thought a brief account of the cacao and the way it is manufactured by Messrs. Epps to fit it for a wholesome and nutritious beverage, might be likewise of interest to the readers of 'Land and Water.'"

"MINING WORLD" says:—
"The preparation of pure and nutritious articles of diet is, in point of philanthropy, noble work. The wear and tear upon brain and muscle in this age is growing more and more intense, so that without some compensating influence the end must be hopeless collapse in individuals and national decay collectively. Fresh air and more wholesome and nutritious diet must be had at any price. Both food and drink need great improvement. A few chemists have done great public service in this respect. Mr. James Epps, in the preparation of cocoa in its various forms, has done more, perhaps, than any other person to supply the tables of even the poorest with a most agreeable and wholesome article of diet. The application of modern science at his extensive works has brought cocoa, once the dear-bought luxury of the higher classes, within the reach of all; and there may now be found on the labourer's table cocoa in better and more nutritious form than the Royal breakfast-tables of early kings could boast. Cocoa as prepared by Mr. Epps is palatable refreshing, strengthening, and inestimably preferable to the trashy tea and coffee in general use."

THE NEW JERUSALEM CHURCH.

The annual Conference of the New Jerusalem, or Swedenborgian, Church, has been held this week, at their church in Palace Gardens-terrace, the Mall, Kensington. The President elected was the Rev. Dr. Jonathan Bayley, whose portrait is given in this Number of our Journal. It is now rather more than a century since Emanuel Swedenborg died in Coldbath-fields, Clerkenwell; and rather less than a century since five admirers of his writings met together (Dec. 5, 1783) to take steps towards the establishment of an organisation whereby those writings should be promulgated in the world. The general conference of the New Church is a body composed of all the ordained ministers of the organisation, and of lay representatives from the various Societies in the United Kingdom. Its functions consist mainly in the administration of funds given or bequeathed for the general advantage of the church, which amount at the present time to about £50,000.

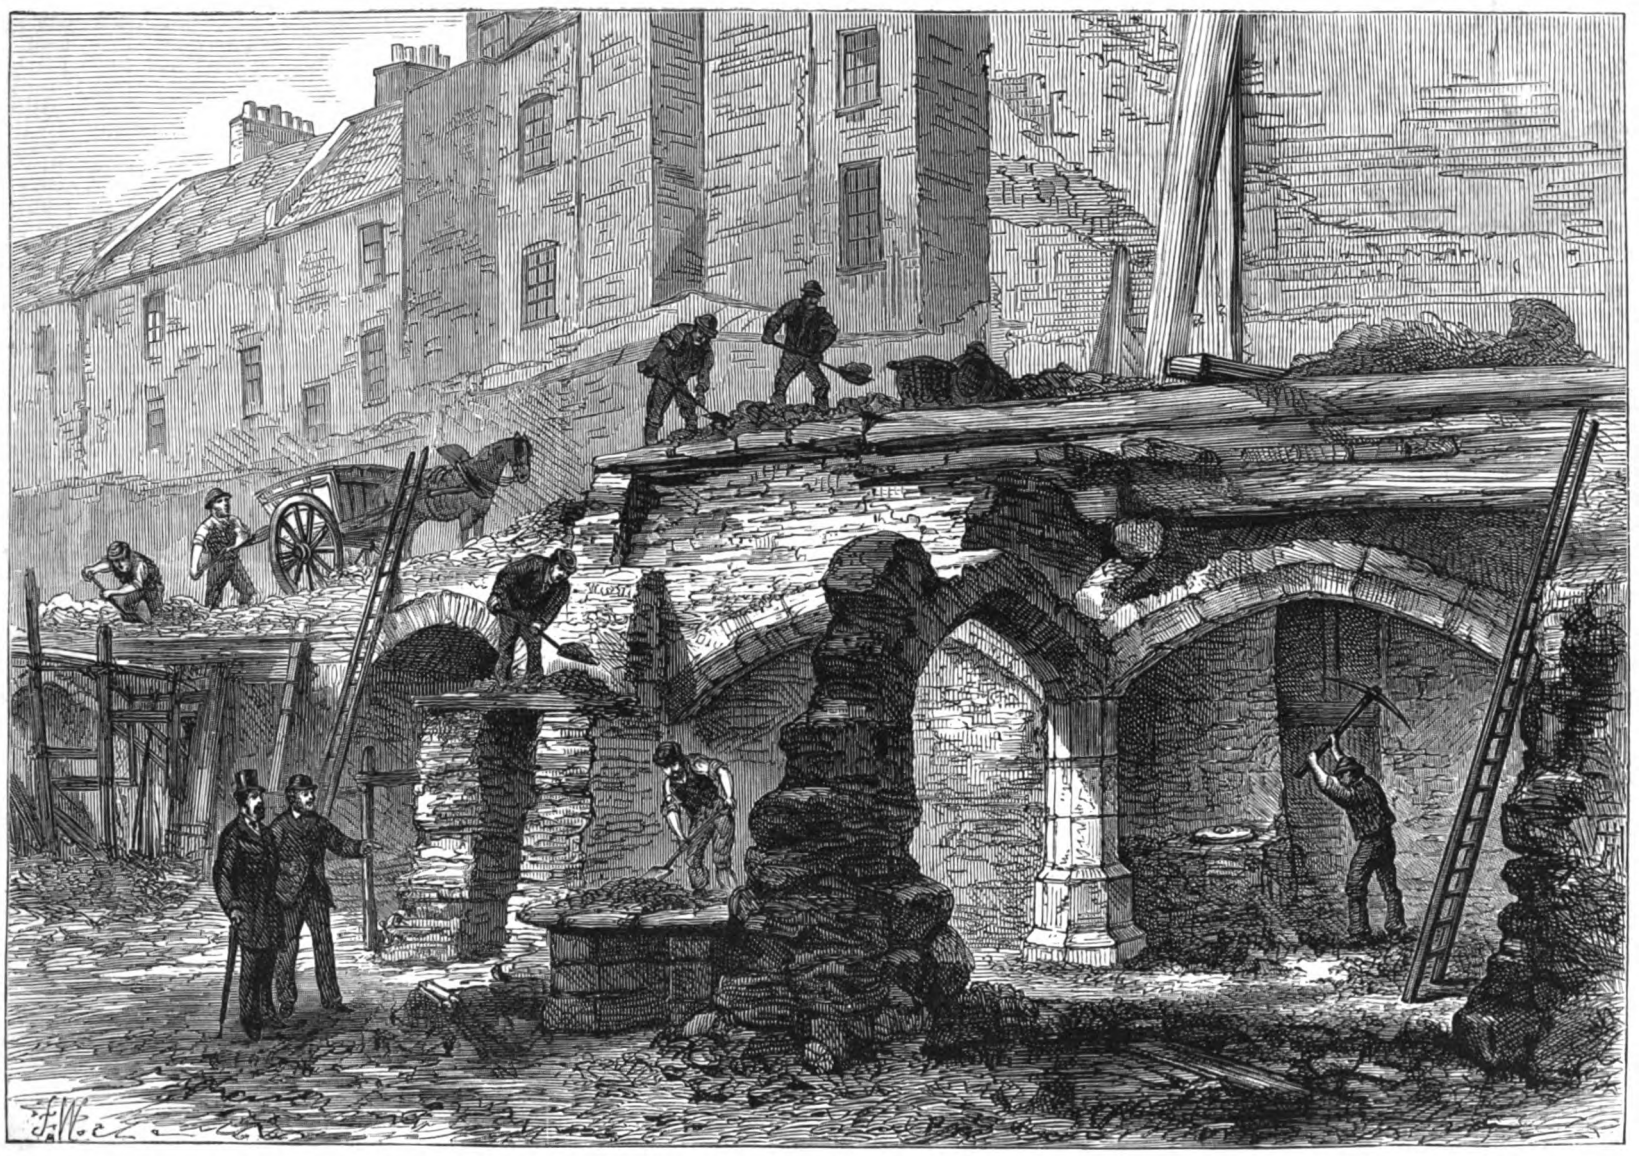
CAPTAIN J. B. CAREY.

It also superintends the education of candidates for the ministry and the ordination of ministers, the publication of a liturgy and hymnal, and other church works. Its meetings are annual, and are held in various parts of the country. The last time that the New Church Conference was held in London was in 1874.



The Rev. J. Bayley, A.M., Ph.D., who is the pastor of the Palace Gardens Church, has been President of the Conference six times. He is reputed to be the most popular preacher in the Swedenborgian connection. Dr. Bayley was born in Salford, Manchester, in 1810. His first ministerial charge was taken at Accrington, in Lancashire, when he was twenty-four years of age. The Accrington society flourished under his auspices, becoming, as it still continues to be, one of the largest and most influential congregations of the community in the kingdom. After a sojourn of twenty years at Accrington, Dr. Bayley accepted an invitation to become the pastor of the church in Argyle-square, King's-cross, London. During the next eighteen years he laboured in connection with the Argyle-square society; the congregation increased considerably, and an enlargement of the church was rendered necessary. When the Palace Gardens Church was presented to the Conference by a wealthy gentleman, with a sufficient endowment for the minister's support, Dr. Bayley undertook the duty of forming and ministering to a society in connection with it; and his efforts have met with abundant success. He is a constant contributor to the periodical literature of the New Church, and has also published several separate works which have met with wide acceptance. Among these are the "Brighton Lectures," which set forth Swedenbourg's leading doctrines, and which have passed through many editions. The other writings are "The Divine Word Opened," "From Egypt to Canaan," "Scripture Paradoxes," "The Divine Wisdom in the Histories of the Bible," and "Discourses on 'Essays and Reviews.'"

ILLUSTRATED NEWS:

A SKETCH OF THE RISE AND PROGRESS OF PICTORIAL JOURNALISM.

The growth of illustrative art in connection with news culminated in the Illustrated London News, the first number of which was published May 14, 1842. The majority of those persons who thought about the matter at all shared in Mr. Charles Knight's opinion that the "rash experiment" would prove a failure. The projector, however, had deliberately calculated his chances of success, and he persevered in his enterprise with unshaken resolution. Regardless of the fears of timorous friends, he clung to the belief that he would ultimately succeed, and in a few years his highest hopes were realised. He secured at the outset the services of an artist who afterwards proved himself the greatest master of the illustrative art that has appeared in our day. Sir John Gilbert was then at the beginning of his career, and it was most fortunate for the new enterprise that an artist of such great and varied abilities was found to give his powerful aid to the undertaking. The best drawings in the first number were by him, and for nearly twenty years he was a constant contributor to its pages. His wonderful facility and bold picturesqueness were exactly suited to the requirements of an illustrated newspaper. The first enabled him to do his work with marvellous quickness, and the second was an excellent counterpoise to the damaging effects of hurried engraving and rapid printing. Many other distinguished artists contributed to the paper in its younger days, but most of them have now forsaken the path—the path through the wood—that led them to early distinction.

The first editor of the Illustrated London News was Mr. Bailey, who was nicknamed "Alphabet Bailey," on account of the great number of his Christian names, and the consequent multiplicity of his initials. He was also called "Omnibus Bailey," from his having edited a periodical called the Omnibus. These names were given to him to distinguish him from Mr. Thomas Haynes Bayley, the sentimental song-writer, author of "I'd be a Butterfly," "The Soldier's Tear," &c. The Illustrated London News was the first illustrated newspaper properly so-called, and it no sooner became an assured success that it was imitated. The Pictorial Times was the first competitor that entered the field, and under its banner a very strong literary phalanx was marshalled to contend for the new path that had been opened. Douglas Jerrold wrote the leading articles; Thackeray was critic and reviewer, in which capacity he reviewed Macaulay's essays and Disraeli's "Coningsby." Mark Lemon was dramatic critic, Peter Cunningham art critic, while Gilbert A'Beckett was the humorous contributor. Knight Hunt, author of the "Fourth Estate," and afterwards editor of the Daily News, was the sub-editor. One man who has since become famous as a journalist was amongst the artists employed on the new paper. Those who only know Mr. George Augustus Sala as a brilliant writer will be surprised to learn that he is also a facile sketcher, and was on the artistic staff of the Pictorial Times in 1847. The Pictorial Times was continued for several years; but it never achieved such a measure of success as to become permanently established.

Wood-engraving, which was an essential agent in the creation of the pictorial newspaper, scarcely existed as an art in this country before the time of Thomas Bewick. The first woodcuts printed by Caxton were probably executed by the printers whom he brought to this country. Caxton's successors illustrated their books in the same way; and, even after wood-engraving was practised in England as a distinct profession, many of the illustrations in books and pamphlets were the work of printers. When something of superior design and finish was wanted, ready-made woodcuts were procured from Nuremberg or Lyons, then the chief marts for such productions. The blocks so obtained were used without much regard to their suitableness, so that there was sometimes an odd mixture of the sacred and the profane. Cuts originally designed for an edition of "Ovid" were used as illustrations to the Bible without the smallest attempt to explain the incongruity. Albert Dürer's influence on the art of wood engraving was very great, but it never extended to this country. Hans Holbein, who came to England two years before Dürer's death, made a few designs for the wood engravers during his long residence here. His transient use of the art, however, could not raise it to a better condition, and printers continued to be the chief producers of woodcuts. In the time of Queen Elizabeth there flourished a printer and engraver named John Day, who took for his mark an emblematic device of the day spring of the reformed religion, with the motto "Arise, for it is Day." About this time the art was rapidly declining in other countries, but in England it was in a better condition than at any previous period. It soon, however, declined in this country also; but was kept alive by Edward Kirkall, John Baptiste Jackson, and others, until it was revived by Thomas Bewick.

The low condition of the art in this country was chiefly owing to the want of good designers, and it was not until a man arose who possessed the power to draw as well as to engrave that an English school of wood engraving was created. Bewick possessed the artistic faculty as a direct gift from nature; but it was from accidental circumstances that he was led to exercise this innate power in drawing and engraving on wood. He drew such things as he understood and had studied from nature, and, thoroughly comprehending the capabilities of wood engraving, his work was perfect of its kind. His pupils followed in his footsteps, and have contributed to bring the art to its present state of perfection.

There was a contemporary of Bewick, also a self-taught wood-engraver, who instructed several pupils and founded a school of his own. This was Robert Branston, who died in London in 1827. The existing school of English wood-engraving may therefore be said to derive its origin from two principal sources—the Newcastle school, founded by Bewick, and the London school, founded by Branston. The influence of both these masters has now nearly died out, but they each understood the true scope and power of their art better than many of their successors.

Some account of the history and practice of wood-engraving was given in this Journal thirty-five years ago, since which time the resources of the art have been greatly developed, chiefly through the influence of illustrated newspapers. The revival of wood-engraving in Germany and France has been even more rapid than in our own country. Germany may be considered as the cradle of the art, and it is therefore not surprising that it should again flourish in that country. In France little more than forty years ago the art was so low that the blocks of the Magazin Pittoresque were sent from Paris to London to be engraved. Now, the works of Pannemacker and others show that they do these things better in France.

The numerous illustrated magazines and newspapers that are now published have made wood engravings familiar in every household, yet very few persons have any clear idea how such engravings are produced. When the woodcuts of the Penny Magazine began to attract notice, a nobleman of that day spoke of them as the productions of a new art. Of course no educated person would now make such a mistake, yet no art is less understood than wood engraving. It is no uncommon occurrence for sketches to be sent to this Journal under the evident belief that they can be published as engravings within an hour or two of their receipt, just as a scrap of news is set up in type and circulated by the evening papers. The public, as a rule, are unable to realise the fact that long hours of patient labour are necessary to produce an engraving of the event that interests them. It is also sometimes imagined that a drawing or sketch on paper is in some way destroyed in the course of its reproduction as an engraving—as if it were put into a machine, ground into pulp, and turned out a complete woodcut.

Although the production of a wood engraving takes, as a rule, a much longer time than most persons imagine, some very rapid things have been done to meet the requirements of a newspaper. The charge of the heavy cavalry at the battle of Balaclava—a page engraving published in the Illustrated London News, Nov. 18, 1854—was drawn by Sir John Gilbert in little more than an hour, engraved during the night, and printed the next day. A double-page picture is frequently engraved in twenty-four hours, a feat that could not have been performed in Bewick's time in as many days. A very different state of things prevailed not very many years before the advent of illustrated newspapers. I have heard the late William Harvey relate that when Whittingham, the well-known printer, wanted a new cut for his Chiswick Press series, he would write to Harvey and John Thompson, the engraver, appointing a meeting at Chiswick, when printer, designer, and engraver talked over the matter with as much deliberation as if they were about to produce a costly national monument; and after they had settled all points over a snug supper, the projected cut, measuring, perhaps, two inches by three, did not make its appearance for months afterwards.

The "special correspondent" is an important member of the staff of a modern newspaper. In the case of an illustrated journal he becomes the "special artist." When an event or a place is of sufficient interest to require illustration in a pictorial journal the first step taken is to procure a sketch. The "special artist" travels about and supplies sketches to the paper he represents. Wherever there is any "moving accident by flood or field," wherever the potentates of the earth are met in conflict, there the "special artist" is found "takin' notes." He is at the marriages of Princes and the funerals of Kings, and with battles and banquets he is familiar. No event of interest escapes his ever ready pencil. He endures fatigue, overcomes formidable difficulties, and often incurs personal danger in fulfilling his mission. He has hunted tigers with the Prince of Wales in India, elephants with the Duke of Edinburgh in Africa, and he has followed the war-path among the American Indians. Even the brother of the Sun and Moon could not keep him out when that celestial potentate took unto himself a wife, and the special artist made nothing of stepping over from London to Pekin to attend the nuptials of the Chinese Emperor.

The special artist may be said to have commenced his career with the Crimean War. While the signs of the coming storm were yet distant the Illustrated London News sent correspondents to the expected scene of action, and during the whole course of the war special artists were on the shores of the Black Sea and in the Baltic to chronicle the great events of the time. The world had scarcely forgotten Balaklava and Inkerman when the war between Italy, France, and Austria broke out. Solferino and Magenta were fought, Garibaldi conquered Sicily, and wherever the interest was greatest there the special artist was found. Special artists went with the contending armies when Denmark opposed herself single-handed to the united forces of Prussia and Austria, and delineated every important incident of the campaign. When the present Emperor of Germany was crowned King of Prussia at Königsberg special artists travelled to that ancient city to furnish sketches of the ceremony. The gigantic civil war in America gave active employment to the special artist; and when a British force advanced into Abyssinia a special artist was with that most romantic expedition, and sent home numerous sketches of the remarkable scenery of the country, as well as of all the principal events of the campaign. The assault on Magdala, the dispersion of King Theodore's broken army, the customs and dwellings of the people, were all noted and illustrated. When the great war of 1870, between France and Prussia, broke out, the Illustrated London News had special artists on both sides, who encountered all sorts of hardships and passed through all kinds of adventures in fulfilling their duties. Besides being frequently arrested as spies, and undergoing the privations of beleaguered places, they had also to run the risk of shot and shell, and sometimes they were obliged to destroy their sketching materials under fear of arrest. The danger of being seen sketching or found with sketches in their possession was so great that on one occasion a special artist actually swallowed his sketch to avoid being taken up as a spy. Another purchased the largest book of cigarette papers he could obtain, and on them he made little sketches, prepared in case of danger to smoke them in the faces of his enemies. The townspeople of Metz became quite wild when they heard of the French defeats at Wörth and Forbach, and when they saw the artist of the Illustrated London News sketching the Emperor's carriage they pounced upon him as a Prussian spy, and he and several other newspaper correspondents were marched off in custody amid the hootings of the mob. When they were told that an English newspaper correspondent could not possibly be a spy, they answered that that was just the character that a cochon of a Prussian spy would assume. A special artist being in the neighbourhood of Mezieres, he was compelled at nightfall to seek a lodging in a very lonely and villainous looking inn. The occupants of the place looked upon him with evil eyes, and, dreading lest one more should be added to the numerous graves already near the cabaret, he betook himself to a neighbouring wood, where he spent the whole night surrounded by the carcases of dead horses. At Lyons the same gentleman penetrated into the theatre, where the people were storing corn and flour, in anticipation of a siege. He had made some hasty notes in his sketch-book, when he was observed and obliged to retreat, followed however, by several men. He had noticed an umbrella shop round the corner in the next street, and into this shop he rushed, seized an umbrella, opened it, and kept it expanded between himself and the door, as if examining the quality of the silk, while his pursuers ran past, when he demanded the price of the umbrella, paid the money, and walked off, glad to escape at so small a cost. When the German armies were closing round Paris an artist consented to be shut up in the devoted city for the purpose of supplying the Illustrated London News with sketches, which were sent off by balloons during the siege. Photographic duplicates of the sketches were taken and dispatched by other balloons to provide against the chances of miscarriage, so that sometimes two and even three copies of the same sketch reached my hands by balloon post. Considering the danger and difficulty of this mode of communication, the intercourse between the Illustrated London News and its artist in Paris was kept up pretty regularly during the whole siege.

When the effects of a deadly climate are added to the usual chances of war, the courage and endurance of the newspaper correspondent are doubly tried. The "specials" of the principal London journals joined the Ashantee expedition with as much alacrity as if they had been going to a review in Hyde Park. Among them was the artist of the Illustrated London News, who landed at Cape Coast Castle before the arrival of the British troops, marched with them to Coomassie, and remained in that place till it was destroyed by the victors. But the long march in such a climate had exhausted the strength of many, and the special artist was among the number. On nearing Coomassie he could no longer trust to his own unaided powers of locomotion, so he laid hold on the tail of a mule which he saw ambling before him, and so was helped forward. The gentleman who was riding the mule turned round, when it proved to be Sir Garnet Wolseley himself, who, in answer to the exhausted artist's apologies, good-humouredly told him to "hold on."

During the late war between Russia and Turkey, one of the special artists of this Journal overcame the difficulties he encountered in getting to the front by assuming the character of a camp follower, and professing to sell composite candles, German sausages, Russian hams, dried fish, Dutch cheese, &c., and when passing Cossacks became importunate they were propitiated with a candle or two, a slice of cheese, or a packet of Roumanian tobacco. In like manner the artist who went to the port of Ferrol to accompany Cleopatra's Needle to London shipped on board the tug Anglia as a coal trimmer, and signed the usual articles as one of the crew, there being no room for passengers. After the successful voyage of the tug the artist left her at Gravesend, being anxious to bring his sketches to head-quarters; but until he was legally discharged from service he ran the unpleasant risk of being taken up for absconding from his ship.

Such are a few of the special artists' experiences abroad. When he exercises his vocation at home, though he lacks the excitement of danger, he meets with many amusing incidents. An artist who attended the meeting of the British Association at Lincoln many years ago desired to sketch the house which was reputed to have been the residence of John o' Gaunt, and asked the waiter at the hotel if he could direct him to it. "Johnny Gaunt, Sir?" said the waiter, evidently puzzled; "I don't know him, Sir; but I'll inquire." In a few minutes he returned and said he had inquired at the bar, but that no such person as Johnny Gaunt resided thereabouts. Another, who was something of a wag, was once making a sketch in the heart of St. Giles's. School boards had not then been thought of, and numbers of idle little street boys surrounded our sketcher, performing all manner of bewildering gymnastics. Not at all disturbed, however, he amused himself by asking his young friends numerous questions, all of which were answered with rapid pertness. At last he inquired of one active imp if he could read. "No, I can't read," said the young gentleman; "but I can stand on my head and drink a quartern o' gin." M. J.

CAPTAIN CAREY.

We present the portrait of this unfortunate officer, whose general character and services have been exceedingly meritorious, but whose professional career has been severely checked by the incident of the Prince Imperial's death in Zululand, and the subsequent court-martial. He is a son of the Rev. Adolphus Carey, Vicar of Brixham, in South Devon, but his family, we believe, came from Jersey. His maternal grandfather was Admiral Sir Jahleel Brenton, who greatly distinguished himself in the naval warfare, under Nelson and others, at the beginning of this century, being First Lieutenant of H.M.S. Cæsar, and afterwards Commander of the Spartan frigate. Jahleel Brenton Carey, the subject of this notice, was educated at a French Lycée Impériale, and at the Military Staff College, Sandhurst, where he obtained a free commission. He entered the service in 1865, in the late 3rd West India (negro) Regiment, and was placed in command of the fort at Accra, on the Gold Coast. Having returned with his regiment to Jamaica, he served in the expedition on the Mosquito Coast, or in Honduras, and was favourably mentioned in despatches. When his regiment was disbanded he came to England on half-pay, and went through the Hythe course of musketry instruction, for which he gained a first class certificate. He volunteered in 1870 to serve with the English ambulance in the war between France and Germany, and received special thanks, with a cross and ribbon, for his conduct in the relief of the French wounded. He afterwards studied in the Staff College, which he left with high testimonials, and volunteered this year for the Zulu war. He was appointed to a Lieutenancy in the 98th, or Prince of Wales's, Regiment of infantry, and went out in the transport Clyde, which was wrecked in Simon's Bay. Lieutenant Carey was specially commended for his conduct on board that vessel, which conveyed military reinforcements. Having arrived in Natal, he was employed in surveying the route for the troops, and in the selection of camping-grounds, all the way up the country. He was placed on Lord Chelmsford's staff with the appointment of Deputy-Assistant-Quartermaster-General, and rendered much useful service.

We are indebted to the London Stereoscopic Company for the photograph of Captain Carey, who is still awaiting the decision of the Commander-in-Chief upon the verdict of the late court-martial.

THE LATE MR. FECHTER.

The death of this eminent member of the theatrical profession was lately recorded in our Journal. He died at New York, having been chiefly resident in America since 1870. Charles Fechter was half a German, half an Englishman, having been born in London, in 1823, of an English mother, but he was educated in France. When, therefore, in 1860, he appeared on our stage in leading dramatic parts, many critics seemed to regard him as a foreigner. But his performances, inspired by a highly intellectual conception of Shakspeare, won the esteem of reflecting spectators. In the characters of Hamlet and Othello, at the Princess's Theatre, Mr. Fechter's dramatic powers were most forcibly put to the test. His reputation was fairly sustained in England until he left this country, which he more than once revisited in later years.

The portrait is from a photograph by the London Stereoscopic Company.

ANCIENT REMAINS UNDER CHILDS' BANK.

The rebuilding of the old premises at Temple Bar, occupied during two centuries by Messrs. Childs' bank, has more than once engaged our attention. An interesting discovery was made several weeks ago in the excavation of the basement by the workmen of Messrs. George Smith and Co., the contractors for this building. A piece of buried masonry, having the form of one side of an arch, had previously been detected in the wall of the bank cellar. The removal of the wall, which was of rubble, 2 ft. 6 in. or 3 ft. thick, has disclosed a well-built pier, with four Early English arches springing from it. The style of architecture is that of the thirteenth century. The masonry is of pure greensand or Surrey firestone, with Kentish rag filling in the space above the arches. Our Illustration, which is a view looking westward across the excavation, shows the pier and arches uncovered. There was also a well in one corner of the place, but its depth has not been ascertained. The back of the houses in Thanet-place, Strand, is seen in our Illustration; it shows also, towards the left hand, some other arches, which belong to the building lately demolished, and which are of a date not earlier than the reign of Elizabeth. Mr. F. G. H. Price, of Childs' Bank, is author of "The Marigolde," an interesting historical essay upon the old house and the business carried on there since the time of Charles II. We are indebted to him for suggesting how to account, with some likelihood, for the remains of a more ancient building now discovered. He informs us that a quantity of burnt ashes, with traces of blackness as from burning, was found at the base of the pier and arches. There seems to have been a fire when the building was destroyed. Now, the buildings of the Temple, he observes, formerly extended much farther to the west than its present limit. The rioters from Essex and Kent, who invaded London under the leadership of Wat Tyler and Jack Straw, in the reign of Richard II., are stated, in Stow's Annals of England, to have attacked the Temple, on account of their hatred of Sir Robert Halles, the Prior of St. John of Jerusalem, and his connection with the Templars. They pulled down the Master's house, and burnt the archives which had been kept there. It is possible that the remains which have just been brought to light may bear witness to that act of violence nearly five hundred years ago. The Middlesex Archæological Society will no doubt be glad to receive a communication from Mr. Price upon this subject.

FINE ARTS.

By the removal of the Art-Union of London from its old quarters, 444, Strand, to the handsome new premises, which have been designed and constructed specially for its use, at No. 112 in the same street, the society gains not only increased accommodation for general purposes, but sufficient space—in two large well-lighted galleries on the first floor—to exhibit the pictures and drawings selected by the prize-winners of the year, instead of having to hold this exhibition in some gallery rented for the purpose. The exhibition thus formed by works selected by the prize-holders of the year is now open, and on the whole is not unsatisfactory. If the selection of many of the prize-winners can hardly tend to encourage or promote good art, the choice in some cases is much to be commended, and we may mention that the owners of the works bearing the following numbers are much to be commended for the good taste they have displayed, viz.:—Nos. 2, 30, 36, 45, 53, 60, 65, 70, 77, 83, and 106. Among the principal prize works are Mr. C. Robertson's "Door of a Mosque in Lower Egypt," Mr. James Peel's "Eagle's Crag in Borrowdale," Mr. A. de Breanski's "The Waterhen's Haunt," Mr. Stuart Lloyd's "The Abbey Trees," M. H. Schaeffels's "In the Oldest Street in Antwerp," and Mr. F. C. Newcome's "Wild Wales." There are also on view Parian reproductions of Mr. Stephens's "Little Boatbuilder," a bust of the late Princess Alice by Mrs. Thornycroft, and the group of "America" by Mr. Bell, from the Albert Memorial. A number of these are to be included in the next prize drawing. The plate offered to subscribers for the current year is the fine line engraving (which we have already reviewed) by Mr. Lumb Stocks after Mr. Ward's picture, "Dr. Johnson Awaiting an Audience of Lord Chesterfield." The receipts of the Art-Union for the past year were £12,482.

"Ouida" has written to the Times expressing regret, that must be shared by all who know and love Rome, at the destruction of the Ponte Sisto fountain—a regret which must naturally be felt with peculiar bitterness by the novelist, that charming mimic cascade of the Renaissance forming the centre of her whole story of "Ariadne." A writer in Blackwood last month also draws attention to the ruthless destruction of the Farnesina gardens in the questionable works now in progress on the Tiber. Avenues 300 years old are being levelled, and ruin is threatened to the frescoes by Raphael in the villa, to say nothing of the destruction of the exquisite view from the Ponte Sisto. Such vandalism cannot be condoned, and can hardly be compensated for by the accidental discovery of ancient wall paintings in the Farnesina grounds, although all accounts concur in representing these paintings as equalling, if not surpassing, in artistic beauty and delicacy any remains of classical painting hitherto brought to light either at Rome or Pompeii. But everywhere in Italy the national monuments and sites are being effaced or ruined under pretext of "restoration" or pretence of modern improvement. Everywhere the Government authorities—still more, perhaps, the municipalities great and small—are manifesting the same mischievous tendency, arising generally from cupidity and ignorance, and resulting in shameful jobbery, till they become hopelessly insolvent, like Florence. It is not long since we spoke of a monstrous proposition then made to remove the frescoes by Fra Angelico and Fra Bartolommeo from the Convent of San Marco to a new museum in Florence. When ourselves at Assissi last year we noticed some glaring instances of the meddlesome mania which possesses the Italian officials. We allude more particularly to the removal of the stall-work of the famous upper church of San Francesco, which has been carted off into a spare salle of the adjoining convent. This most interesting and important work of art in wood of the late fifteenth century (it was terminated in 1501) is by Domenico Antonio da Sanseverino, and consists of 102 stalls. The carved crockets and pinnacles are very elegant. The backs of the stalls contain, executed in intarsiatura, portraits alternating with the "stemma" of the Order of St. Francis—i.e., the hand of Christ and that of St. Francis (with the stigmata) crossed. The portraits include those of the donor of the stalls belonging to the Order and of the Emperor converted by St. Francis at Constantinople, who became a member of the Order. The stalls are clearly a part of the history of the church; in style they harmonised quite well enough with it; they hid nothing, for they stood about two yards from the walls, and behind them was only an unimportant painted dado running beneath the subject pictures above. The church looks miserably bare without them; in short, we are utterly at a loss to conceive what motive, except the most pedantic purism, could have prompted their banishment. It was unquestionably bad taste also to remove the fine grille from the lower church to the east end of the upper one; its semi-classic style suited the more Byzantine character of the lower church, but not the advanced Gothic of the upper. We were astonished to learn from one of the dignitaries of the Patriarcale Basilica that these and other changes are due to the Government official, Signor Cavalcaselle.

An exhibition of ancient and modern art-needlework is to be held in Glasgow next month.

The Royal Archæological Institute has been continuing its annual congress this week at Wells. Monday was devoted to an inspection of the general features of the cathedral church of Wells and its sister structure, the once noble Abbey of Glastonbury. In our last Number we gave some illustrations of Wells Cathedral and locality. It was finally settled that the congress of 1880 shall be held at Lincoln.

The British Archæological Congress was opened on Monday at Great Yarmouth, under the presidency of Lord Waveney, who gave the inaugural address. The congress closes to-day, Saturday.

An Art-Treasures Exhibition—the object of which is to obtain funds for the erection of a building for the School of Art in Chester, a site having been promised by the Duke of Westminster—was opened on Monday night by Mr. Gladstone. In the course of his speech he said that as long as America suffered from the present fever of Protection the English manufacturer would not have a great deal to fear from rivalry in that direction; but when America learnt to trust entirely to her own splendid natural resources, to the great genius of her people, and to her marvellous proficiency in the adoption of labour-saving appliances, in which she was at the head of the world, then America would be a formidable competitor of England. What England suffered from was, not so much competition as the limitation of foreign markets protected by hostile tariffs. The British producer must endeavour to make his work true—not professing to be better than it was. The English were not defective in the matter of beauty and taste, but in the quality or habit which connected the sense of beauty with the production of works of utility. We wanted to make the English workman understand that by learning to appreciate beauty in industrial productions he was improving his mind and increasing the value of his labour.

At the Royal Bank buildings, Bishopsgate-street Within, there is now on view, by permission, an historical painting, 14 ft. by 10 ft., representing the procession of George III. to St. Paul's in April, 1789, to return thanks for his recovery. His Majesty is accompanied by Queen Charlotte and family; and in the procession, shown as passing down Fleet-street, are Lord Mayor William Gyll, Sheriffs Curtis, Newman, and the representatives of the Corporation; also the Ancient Body of Toxophilites and the Hon. Artillery Company, the latter being under the command of Sir Watkin Lewis. Lord Mayor Gyll and others are on horseback. King George and family are in a coach drawn by six cream-coloured horses, similar to those used by her Majesty on state occasions. An excellent autotype has been taken of the painting.

Vice-Admiral Arthur Cumming has presented the Army and Navy Club with busts of the Prince and Princess of Wales, supported on sculptured Italian marble pedestals.

A monument, which has been erected by public subscription at Kilmarnock to the poet Burns, was unveiled last Saturday by Colonel Alexander, M.P. for South Ayrshire. The monument, which is in the Scottish baronial style of architecture, contains in an alcove a highly successful statue of the poet after the portrait by Naismith, by Mr. W. G. Stevenson, of Edinburgh. Colonel Alexander delivered an eloquent panegyric on Burns. Additional interest was given to the proceedings by the handing over of a park of forty-three acres on the estate of the Duke of Portland, provided for the town by means of a bequest left by Mr. Kay, of Glasgow.

The Liverpool Autumn Exhibition will open Sept. 1 and close Dec. 6. The arrangement of the pictures and drawings has been undertaken by Mr. Val Prinsep, A.R.A., and Mr. Luke Fildes, A.R.A., in conjunction with two local artists, Mr. J. Pedder and Mr. W. W. Laing.

Twenty-one of the paintings of the Luxembourg figure in the International Exhibition at Munich. The Luxembourg was closed for a short time in consequence of these vacancies, but their places have now been filled by pictures by some of the greatest French artists of the day, and the museum is again open to the public.

A museum of ancient and modern textile fabrics has been opened at Lyons in the Palace of Commerce. The collection already numbers more than 5000 specimens.

At Paris, the Grand Prize of Rome for Architecture has been awarded to M. Victor Auguste Blavette.

A magnificent Etruscan tomb containing some vases of great value has been discovered at Vico Equense, on the road from Castellamare to Sorrento.

The death is announced of the distinguished French painter Alexandre Hesse, at the age of seventy-three. He was an officer of the Legion of Honour, a member of the Institute of France, and in 1867 was appointed to fill the place vacated by the death of Ingres. Among his best-known pictures are "The Triumph of Pisani," now in the Luxembourg; "The Adoption of Godefroy de Bouillon by the Emperor Alexis Comnène," at Versailles; and "President Barthe," which was the great success of the Salon of 1861. He also executed the mural paintings in the Chapel of St. François de Sales in the Church of St. Sulpice. His fame, however, will perhaps rest principally on the work he painted at Venice in 1833, and exhibited in the Paris Salon, representing "The Funeral Honours Rendered to Titian," for which he received a first-class medal.

The National Welsh Eisteddfod at Conway, which began on the 5th inst., as recorded in our last issue, was continued on the 6th. The chief literary prize of 20 guineas and an oak chair for a Welsh ode were awarded to the Rev. Watkin Joseph, Independent minister of Ruabon. Other literary honours fell to Mrs. Thomas, St. Ann's Vicarage, and Miss Panay, Llandudno. The Llanrwst brass band won the competition in that class, and the Llanllechid choir the choral competition. Miss Parry, Birkenhead, and Mr. Roberts, Carnarvon, won prizes for pianists. At night the Bangor Choral Union gave a performance of "The Messiah." Under the presidency of Mr. Osborne Morgan, M.P., the session was concluded on the 7th. The chief prize of the day for a musical composition was awarded to Mr. William T. Rees, of Swansea, who was installed chaired minstrel for 1879. The Colwyn choir won the choral competition, and a Dolgelly harper was placed first in his class. The Eisteddfod, owing to the unfavourable weather, has not been a pecuniary success. It closed with a performance of Dr. Parry's Welsh opera "Blodwen," Captain Verney occupying the presidentia. chair.

EPSILON GUN-BOATS FOR CHINA.

The Chinese Government, feeling the necessity of providing for its coast defences when its neighbour Japan (having secured the services of Mr. E. J. Reed, C.B., M.P.) was constructing an ironclad fleet, was advised by Mr. Robert Hart, the Inspector-General of Chinese Imperial Maritime Customs, to order a few small steam-boats carrying heavy guns. Mr. Hart was, therefore, instructed to invite proposals from Sir W. Armstrong and Co., of Elswick, Newcastle-on-Tyne, a member of which firm (Mr. Rendel) had introduced the "Staunch" type of gun-boats. In the result, he intrusted to that firm the entire responsibility of producing four gun-boats representing a high development of the original type. Hence the now well-known Alpha and Gamma types of gun-boats, the latter of which we illustrated and described in our Journal of March 10, 1877.

We now give an Illustration of the Epsilon series, which are a further advance on the original type. Four vessel constitute this new series, and are identical in every respect. They measure 127 ft. in length, 29 ft. in beam, their draught is 9 ft. 6 in., and their displacement 440 tons. On their official trials they realised a mean speed of over ten knots (eleven and a half miles) with 430 indicated horse-power. They make nine knots going backwards, and, having bow rudders and suitable lines, can be equally well handled whether running ahead or astern. These vessels are wholly of steel; they have twin-screws, and separate engines and boilers, and tripod-masts. The engines and boilers, the magazines and shell-room, are all protected by being under the water-line. For further security the hull is divided by four transverse bulkheads and a longitudinal bulkhead forward of the engines, there being also a horizontal under-water deck over the magazines. The coal bunkers contain seventy tons, and the actual consumption at full speed is six cwt. per hour.

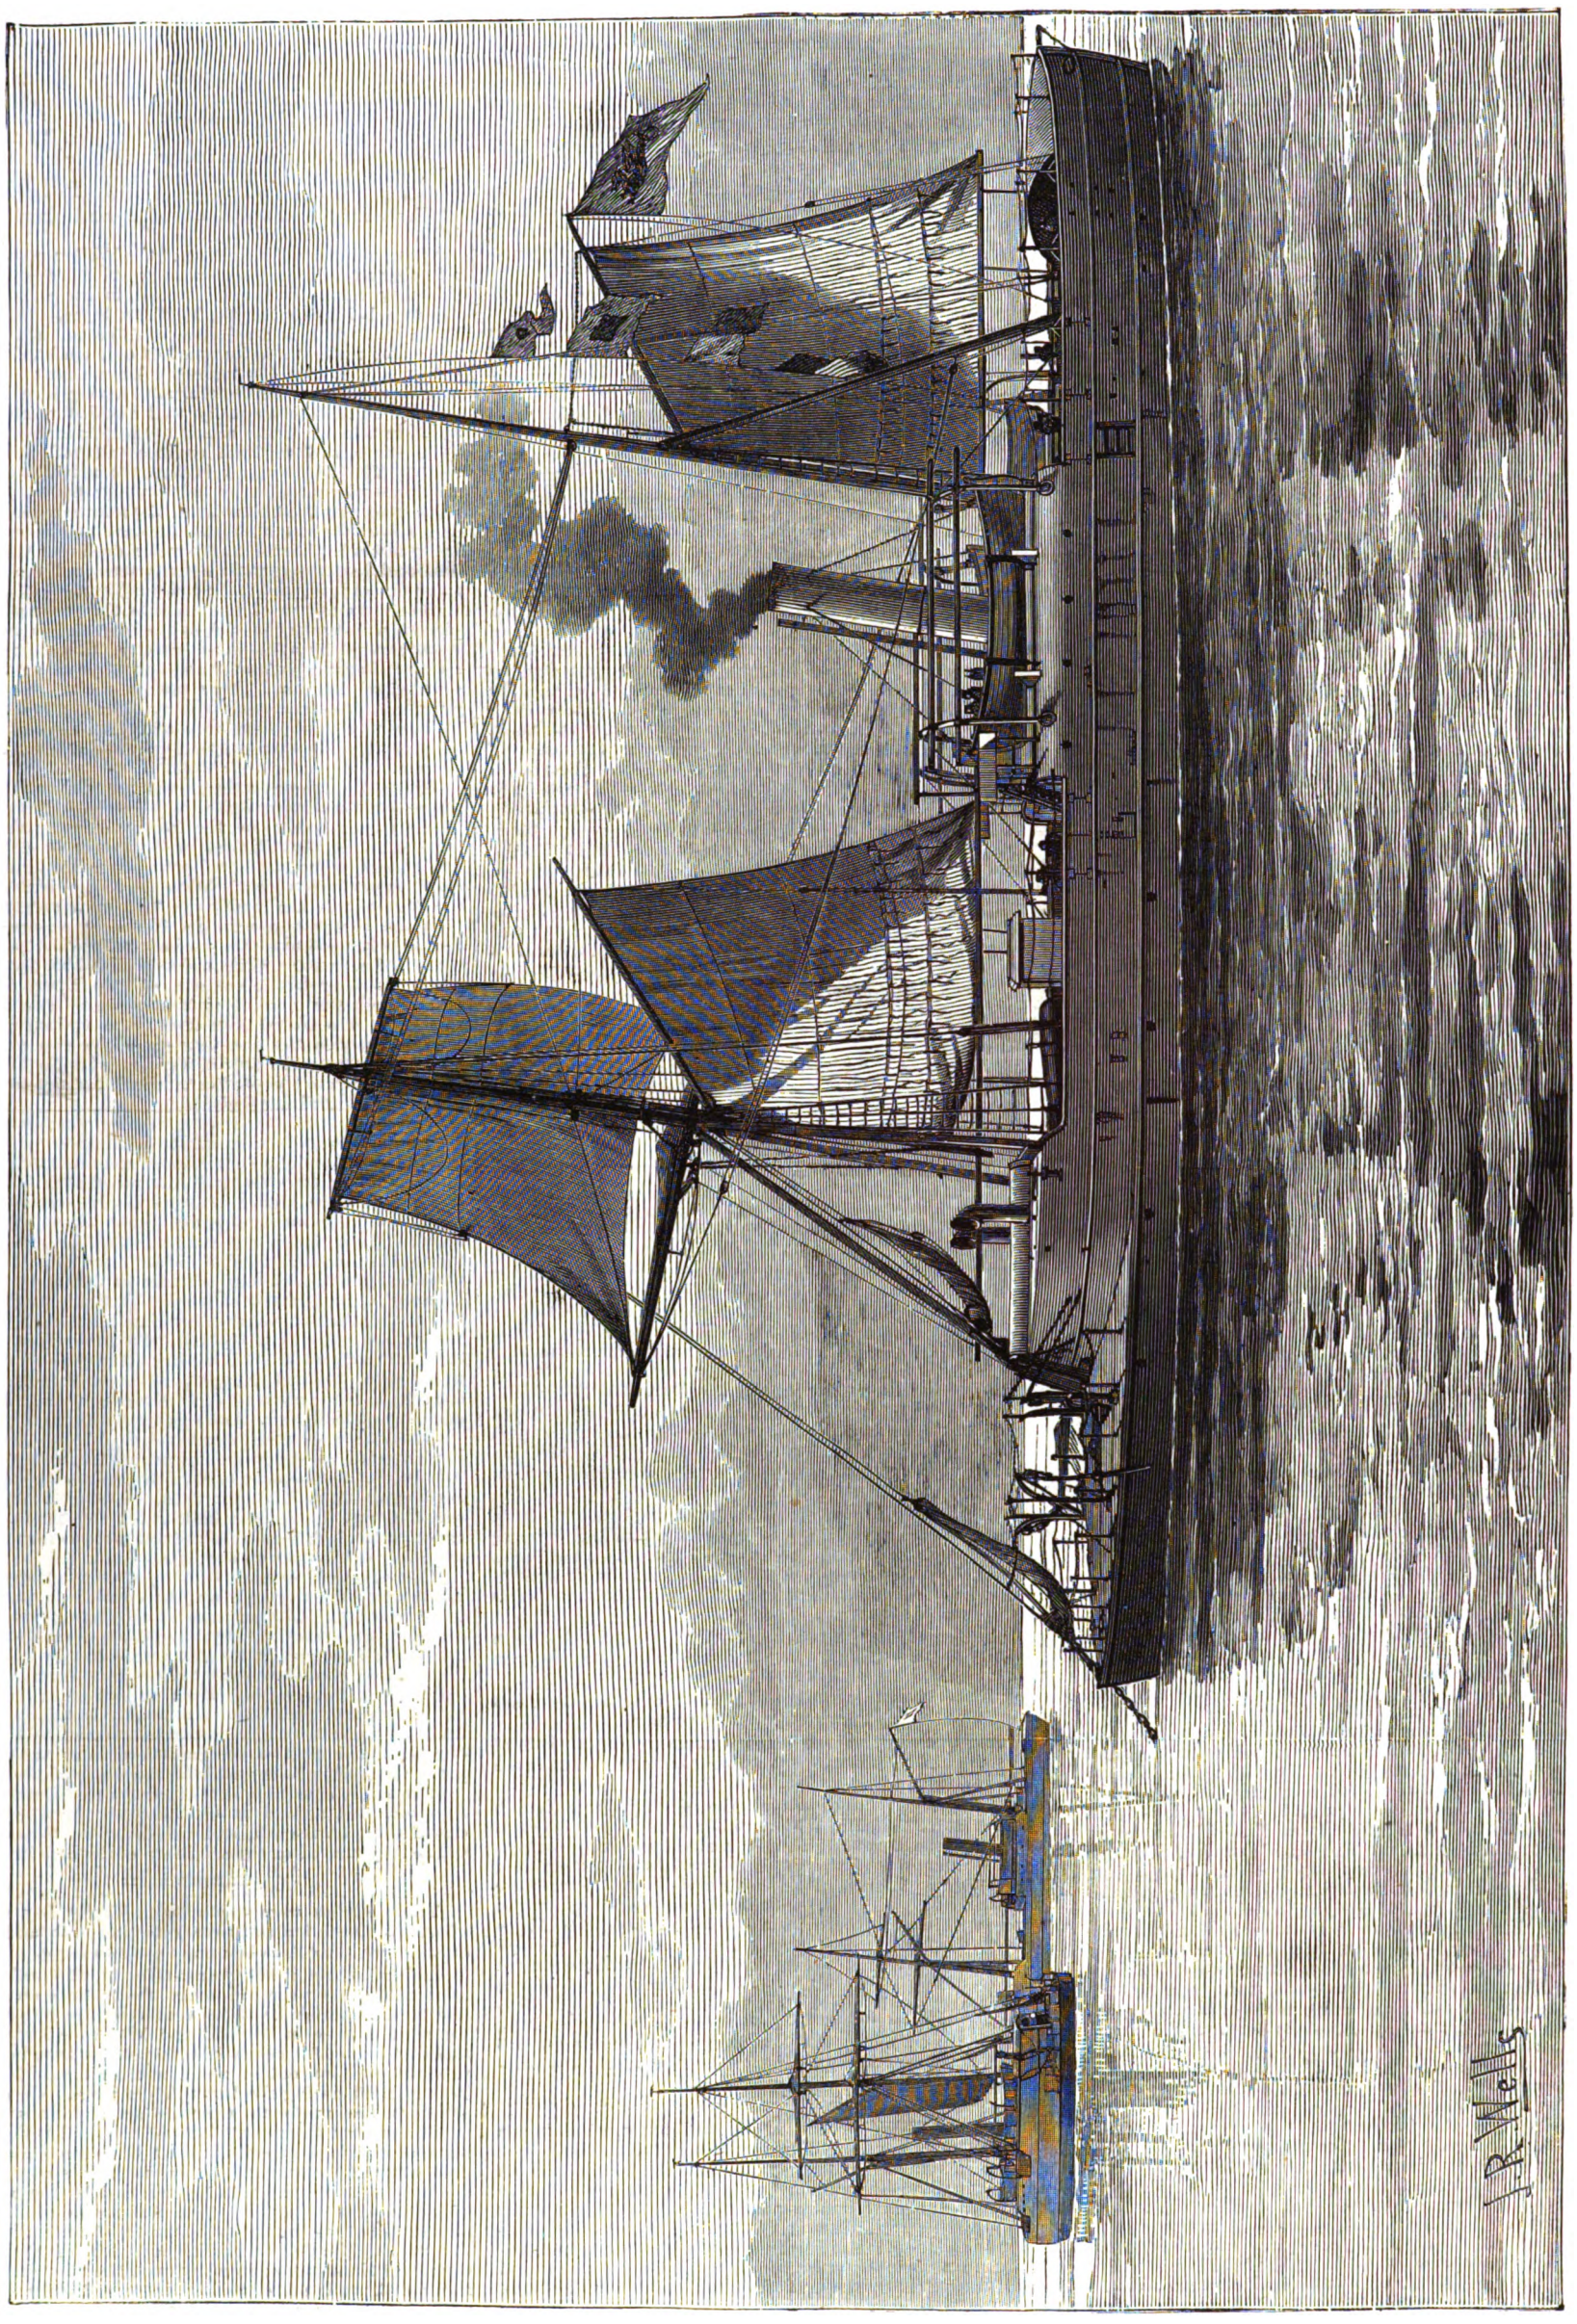
The main feature of the vessel is the great gun, which is placed on line with the keel, in the bow, and is mounted and worked wholly by hydraulic machinery. This enables five men to manage it efficiently, and at the same time gets rid of all complicated mechanism. There are no chains, wheels, cogs, or gearing—not even a gun-carriage. The gun lies on the deck between two great beams with two pistons sliding upon them, which take hold of the trunnions, and there is nothing more to be seen.

In the Epsilon series the great gun weighs thirty-five tons, whereas in the Gamma series the gun weighed thirty-eight tons. Nevertheless, owing to the recent extraordinary advance realised by the Elswick firm in the power of ordnance relatively to its weight, the new 35-ton gun is much more powerful than the old 38-ton gun. With the 235-lb. battering charge, the 35-ton gun has nearly one fifth more penetrative power than the 38-ton gun with its battering charge—the actual figures being 356 foot-tons per inch of shot's circumference as compared with 300. With a charge of 250 lb. the 35-ton gun has given its projectile a velocity of 1925 ft., equal to 400 foot-tons energy per inch of circumference. The high initial velocity of the 35-ton gun causes the trajectory of its projectile to be very flat, and thus gives the gun a much better chance of hitting any object, while also largely increasing the range of the gun. Thus, the Chinese Government now possess the most powerful guns afloat.

In addition to their big gun, the new gun-boats carry field-guns and Gatlings to keep off small enemies.

On July 24 these four vessels were inspected by H.E. Marquis Tseng, the Chinese Minister, and suite in the presence of almost all the higher British officials connected with the subject of our armaments, including Sir Cooper Key and Admiral Hood, Lords of the Admiralty, Admiral Hall, Secretary of the Admiralty, Admiral Hamilton, C.B., Director, and Captain Brown, Assistant Director of Naval Ordnance, Mr. Barnaby, C.B., Director of Naval Construction, Mr. Robinson, Chief Constructor at Portsmouth, Admiral Boys, Captain Bridge, and other naval officers. From the War Office came Sir Lintorn Simmons, G.C.B., Inspector-General of Fortifications, with Colonel Nugent, Assistant-Inspector, General Campbell, Director-General of Ordnance, &c. A numerous company of foreign naval attachés completed the party.

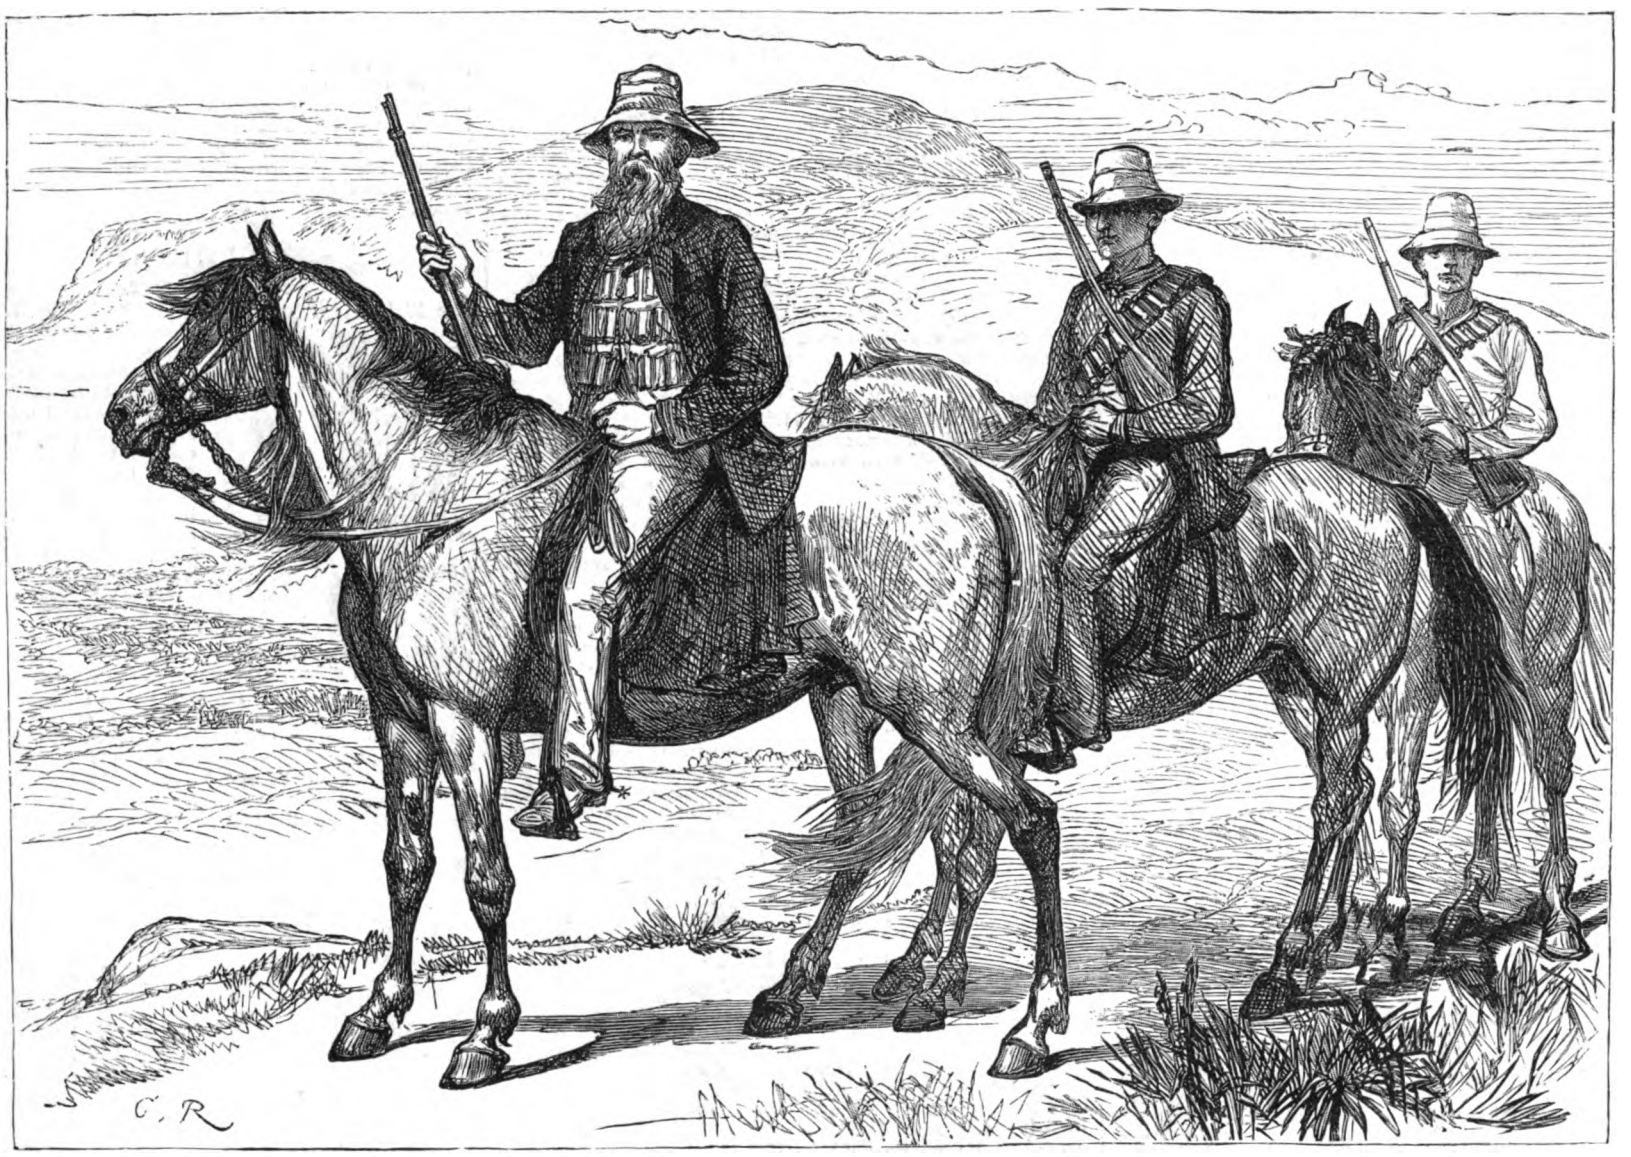
The vessels are under command of officers from the active list, an evidence of the great interest taken in them by the Admiralty. Commander Lang, R.N., commands the Squadron, Lieutenant Paul, R.N., the Zeta, Lieutenant Walker, R.N., the Eta, and Lieutenant Bell, R.N., the Theta. They are expected to reach Tien-Tsin in from three to four months, and are going out in man-of-war trim.



Great interest attaches to the part which these diminutive but most powerful vessels may be enabled to play in future naval warfare. The opinion as to their importance gains ground; and enough has been already universally admitted to evince the foresight of Mr. Hart, who has by a simple expedient saved the Government he serves from unwise and extravagant competition with a neighbouring Power in the production and maintenance of costly ironclads. Mr. Hart has been represented throughout in this country by Mr. J. D. Campbell, the head of the London office of the Chinese Imperial Customs, who has directed the whole of the business.

The small squadron left Plymouth on the evening of the 30th ult. and arrived at Gibraltar on the 5th inst. They coaled there on the 6th, and proceeded to Malta on the 7th, where they arrived on the afternoon of the 12th inst.

Three whales were captured in Tenby Bay on Monday afternoon. Each is about twenty feet in length, and one weighs about a ton, the others being not quite so large.



Major Graham, the Registrar-General, who is about retiring from office, has prepared some observations on the law of marriage, in which he states that marriage by civil contract has been in force in England and Wales for forty-two years, and that since 1841 nearly 850,000 persons have been married in register offices, out of which number nearly 500,000 have been married during the last thirteen years. He regrets that attempts are made to persuade such persons that these marriages are "improper," because the civil is the only legal form of marriage in several great Christian States. By the civil contract, he contends, there is greater security against clandestine marriages than is provided by the rites of the Church, and he states that on one Sunday the bands of ninety-nine couples have been published in the Church of St. Pancras, 125 in St. Mary's, Lambeth, and 202 in the Cathedral Church of Manchester; in many cases the names merely being mentioned, and no searching inquiry having been made respecting them; whereas the registration officer requires a solemn declaration upon all particulars, the slightest falsehood in which subjects the offenders to the penalties of perjury, and the notice, instead of being inaccessible, like the banns-book, is open to public inspection for three weeks. The Registrar-General relates that some years ago two persons called at a church in London at 10 30 a.m., requiring to be married immediately, but, having no license, they were told at the church they might obtain a license at Doctor's-commons, did so, returned to the church, and were married before twelve o'clock the same day.

THE LATE COMMANDANT PIET UYS.

Mr. Piet Uys, an influential Dutchman of the Transvaal, was among those killed in the fight of March 28 on the Zlobane Mountain, while in command of a corps of volunteer horsemen. His death is much regretted by the English officers with Brigadier-General Sir Evelyn Wood's column, and by none more than Lieutenant-Colonel Redvers Buller. He had been of the greatest service to the English force during the campain on the Transvaal border of Zululand. Mr. Uys was followed into the field by his two sons, both in their teens—indeed, the youngest, if in England would, have been intent only on cricket and football; but in South Africa the development is quicker, and in these stirring times no son of Piet Uys could stay at home in laager with the women, old men, and children.

Brigadier-General Wood's despatch telling of the affair of March 28, thus speaks of him:—"Mr. Piet Uys gave on the 28th a fine example to his men, as he always did, remaining behind to see them safe down the mountain. He was surrounded and assegaied." No one of the colonists of South Africa better deserves to have his memory kept alive, and we trust that the Government will show to his poor orphan children how we appreciate in England such men, English or Dutch fellow-subjects.

The drawing of Mr. Piet Uys on horseback, with two mounted native followers, is contributed by Colonel J. North Crealock, Military Secretary to Lord Chelmsford. The mountain behind is that called Piet Uys Kop, at the foot of which he lived; but his children now reside near Utrecht.

THE HOLLOWAY SANATORIUM.

The announcement has recently been made of another magnificent institution, a College for Women, to be erected on the Mount Lee estate, at Egham, at a cost of more than a quarter of a million sterling, by the liberality of Mr. Thomas Holloway, of Tittenhurst, Sunninghill, and of Oxford-street, London. Mr. Holloway has further promised an endowment fund of £100,000 for the support of this college; and the building, designed by his architect, Mr. W. H. Crossland, of Leeds, under his personal direction, will be constructed within the next four years.

We take the opportunity of presenting a view of the noble institution already erected at Virginia Water, Egham, at the sole expense of this munificent public benefactor—namely, the "Holloway Sanatorium," for persons of the middle class afflicted with mental disease. It is designed for the accommodation of one hundred male and the same number of female patients. The building, of which Mr. W. H. Crossland was likewise the architect, is constructed of red brick, with Portland stone dressings, and in the Gothic style, richly decorated. It stands just facing the Virginia Water station of the Staines and Wokingham Railway, on an eminence, and presents a façade of 640 ft., with a depth of 250 ft. There is a central tower, 150 ft. high, also turrets 60 ft. high at the back of each wing, and a portico, with two tiers of pillared arcades, at the chief entrance. In front is a terrace 45 ft. wide. The whole exterior has a very stately aspect. The adjacent grounds extend about twenty-five acres, laid out for an agreeable promenade. The interior is arranged with great care and skill for the use of the institution. The centre block, which divides the male from the female side, contains the administrative department, including the rooms for the staff and the visiting-rooms; also the general dining-hall, 54 ft. by 30 ft.; a grand recreation-hall, 84 ft. by 38 ft, and 50 ft. high, which is handsomely decorated; libraries and billiard-room. There are thirteen day-rooms for each sex, all spacious and convenient, 30 ft. long, 20 ft. wide, and 12 ft. high. Twelve dormitories, of the same dimensions, are provided for the men, and as many on the other side for the women; besides fifty rooms, 12 ft. by 10 ft., for single patients. The delay in opening the Holloway Sanatorium has been mainly caused by the length of time required to complete the decorations of the Recreation Hall and Dining Hall, and those of the principal entrance and staircase, as well as to finish the building. It will have cost Mr. Holloway more than £200,000.

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.

Although the weather during the past week has been by no means settled, nor the temperature such as we are wont to experience during the second week in August, some pleasant intervals of sunshine have occurred, which have been beneficial to the growing crops and serviceable to farmers in those districts where haymaking has been delayed. Cold nights have, however, militated much against the maturation of cereals, and it is only in the southern counties that the wheat is beginning to change colour. In Hampshire and Dorsetshire some promising pieces of barley may be seen, but these form the exception, as in most other parts of the country this delicate cereal has been sadly compromised by the unkindly season, and the prospect of even a light average yield is more than dubious. Weeds of all kinds have increased rapidly, choking the wheat plant above the surface of the soil and depriving it of nutriment below, so that the growth is thin and the ears poorly filled and decidedly short. The commencement of harvest will depend entirely upon the weather, but even under the most favourable conditions it is improbable that any quantity of home-grown wheat will be seen at Mark-lane before the first week in September. Where not washed away by the rain some quantity of hay has been secured, although in many instances in a most unfit state; but, with such precarious weather, farmers have had to choose the less of two evils, and cart the hay while it was damp rather than run the risk of losing it altogether. The ricks consequently smell badly, and require careful watching. The root crops vary considerably, swedes in some districts looking best, white turnips in others, and mangels generally being stunted and unhealthy. Potatoes appear to have been doing pretty well in Scotland and Ireland, and in the latter country the consumption of maize has decreased in consequence. Disease has, however, smitten the tubers in the Midland counties, as the water has stood in the furrows almost continuously throughout the season, and the present condition of the crop is deplorable. In short, the improvement in the agricultural situation is very slight, and the utmost farmers look for is that, with warmth and dryness between this and harvest, satisfactory condition may to some extent make up for a yield of cereals which no subsequent weather can render otherwise than deficient. The imports of foreign wheat into London continue on a liberal scale, last Monday's list showing nearly 67,000 quarters; while the subsequent arrivals up to Friday have amounted to 84,680 quarters. Liverpool has also been well supplied, and, the recent upward impetus in values having been checked by the somewhat improved character of the weather, business has ruled quiet, but steady, without material alteration in prices. A further advance is, however, by no means improbable, as, with a recurrence of heavy rain and storms, the English crop may turn out a total failure.—Mark Lane Express of Monday.

MUSIC.

Messrs. Gatti's new series of promenade concerts at Covent-Garden Theatre opened well on Saturday evening, when the performances were of the same efficient and interesting character as in previous seasons. As hitherto, a band of first-rate excellence is a prominent feature in the arrangements—between eighty and ninety of our best orchestral players being assembled, headed by Mr. A. Burnett as principal violinist; the list of solo vocalists and instrumentalists engaged comprising several eminent names. The programme on the opening night included Auber's bright and melodious "Exhibition" Overture, and that to Rossini's dramatic masterpiece, "Guillaume Tell," besides the graceful and piquant "Gavotte" from M. Ambroise Thomas's "Mignon," Weber's "Invitation à la Valse" (scored by Berlioz), the march from Wagner's "Tannhäuser," an entr'acte from Gounod's "La Colombe" and the ballet music from his "La Reine de Saba," the ballet music and march from Meyerbeer's "L'Africaine," and an orchestral selection from Verdi's "Aïda." The other instrumental performances included Madame Montigny-Rémaury's brilliant rendering of Weber's concert-stück for pianoforte (with orchestra), and of the "Scherzo" from M. Saint-Saëns's concerto, and a characteristic "Danse Pompeuse" for piano solo composed by Mr. A. Cellier. Mr. H. Reynolds's skilful cornet playing was also a feature in the programme. Vocal pieces were contributed, with great effect, by Miss Mary Davies, Madame Antoinette Sterling, and Mr. E. Lloyd. Mr. A. Cellier conducted with ability, and will continue to exercise that office entirely until the restoration of Mr. Arthur Sullivan's health enables this gentleman to divide the duties with Mr. Cellier. Monday's programme included Beethoven's first symphony, the seven succeding numbers being promised—in regular order—for the following Mondays. On the first of the Wednesday "Classical" nights—this week—the selection included Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony. The co-operation—in some of the pieces—of the fine band of the Coldstrram Guards, directed by Mr. F. Godfrey, powerfully enhances the full effects. The concerts can scarcely fail to be largely patronised.

The Carl Rosa Opera Company began a fresh provincial season at the Gaiety Theatre, Dublin, on Monday. "Maritana" was the opera; and it was performed with that excellence which has made the Rosa Opera Company popular throughout the kingdom. The principal artistes, Miss Burns, Miss Yorke, and Mr. Maas, were warmly applauded; and Mr. Rosa met with an enthusiastic reception. An English version of "Mignon" is promised as the first novelty.

THEATRES.

An American play, with a Backwoodsman for its hero, was produced at the Olympic last Saturday. The principal character was supported by Mr. Frank Mayo, an American actor who has played the part in the United States for nearly two thousand nights. The author is Mr. Frank Murdock, whose style is generally the familiar, occasionally indulging in a metaphorical vein, intending to suggest, under emotional influence, the turgid eloquence of an illiterate man. The piece is entitled "Davy Crockett, an Idyl of the Backwoods," and is divided into five acts. The performance is assisted by new and appropriate scenery, painted by Mr. John Brunton, and calculated to add to the attractions of the piece. Into the story it would serve no purpose to enter. It is common-place and obscure, and has no value beyond an incident or two. One of these consists of a snowstorm, during which the heroine, beloved by Davy Crockett, seeks, with her affianced companion, the shelter of the shanty of the backwoodsman, and both of them probably owe their lives to his care and attention. With night, however, a new danger arises. The howl of prowling wolves is heard and Crockett has to keep the door shut by inserting his arm in its rings, and thus becoming a living barrier against the threatened irruption. While in this position he wins the admiration of the heroine, Eleanor Vaughan (Miss Emma Ritta), and, conversing with her, digresses into passages of love, which inspire her with devoted affection. But the main incident is his imitation of the conduct of young Lochinvar in the ballad, which, in the course of their acquaintance, Miss Vaughan has read to Davy Crockett, who cannot read it for himself. This suggests to him the means of carrying off the lady, just at the moment of her being compelled to sign the marriage contract with Neil Crampton (Mr. Luigi Lablache). Davy exercises much cunning in the transaction, and procures a swift steed from her guardian, Major Royston (Mr. Clifford Cooper), under feigned pretences, to secure the means of escape. Dame Crockett, his mother, was well acted by Miss Maria Davis; and Little Bob, her clever boy, was admirably represented by Master W. Phillips. Many of the scenes are pathetic; and, indeed, the whole is a series of exciting positions that increase in interest to the conclusion. The chief performers were frequently called before the curtain, and Mr. Mayo himself at the end of every act. His assumption is full of merit and exceedingly natural.

The new comedy, "Betsy," by Mr. F. C. Burnand, at the Criterion, is founded on the "Bébé" of MM. Hennequin and Najac, originally produced at the Gymnase. The adapter has found it necessary to omit much of the French text, and has freed it, in a great measure, from objectionable suggestion. The interest is principally of a farcical kind, and relates to one Gaston, the only son of doting parents, a couple of stupid personages, who idolise him, and call him by the pet name of Bébé—in Mr. Burnand's version, Dolly. The father educates the boy after his own fashion, principally by means of newspaper articles, and the mother spoils him by admiration of his supposed virtues. The latter, however, finds him out in an intrigue, and is shocked at vices which she never suspected. The name of Gaston is in the adaptation changed to Adolphus Birkett, and his tutor, Petillon, here becomes Mr. Samuel Dawson. The latter encourages the young man in dissipation. An imbroglio naturally results from these complications, which it is impossible to give with clearness and brevity. Suffice it to say that Dolly gets entangled with Betsy, the maid-servant of his parents' household, and that she takes extraordinary pains to secure him for herself. In the end, however, he is extricated, and safely settled at last in a marriage of conventional propriety. The part of Betsy was humorously interpreted by Miss Lottie Venne. The comedy, produced under the direction of Mr. Charles Wyndham, was cordially received.

At the Lyceum, Miss Geneviève Ward has greatly improved her position by exchanging "Zillah" for "Lucrezia Borgia." The interest of M. Victor Hugo's gloomy play is well sustained by her acting of the part, which is not deficient in power. Her acting throughout is indeed energetic, and not seldom extremely striking. The entire performance has been received with repeated applause.

Mr. Wilson Barrett, the successful manager of the Grand Theatre, Leeds, and Theatre Royal, Hull, will open the Court Theatre on Saturday, Sept. 20, with Sutherland Edwards's version of Victorien Sardou's comedy "Fernande." The cast will be unusually strong. The theatre will be redecorated and new scenery will be provided. Mr. Robert Stoepel will be the musical director.

On Tuesday morning, upon the stage of the Princess's Theatre, and in presence of the company, Mr. Charles Reade presented to Mr. Charles Warner a handsome silver loving-cup of antique manufacture. Engraved at the foot is the inscription: "To Charles Warner, in memory of his 'Tom Robinson' and 'Jean Coupeau' and of how I profited by his humour, his tenderness, his passion, and that great art of keeping the stage alive and the audience fixed, in which he yields to no living actor, this loving-cup is presented by Charles Reade."

OBITUARY.

EARL FIFE.

The Right Hon. Sir James Duff, Earl Fife, K.T., Viscount Macduff; Baron Braco of Kilbryde, in the county of Cavan, in the Peerage of Ireland; and Baron Skene, of Skene, in the Peerage of the United Kingdom, Lord Lieutenant of Banffshire, died on the 7th inst. at his seat, Marr Lodge, in the county of Aberdeen. His Lordship was born July 6, 1814, the elder son of General the Hon. Sir Alexander Duff, G.C.H., of Delgaty Castle, Aberdeenshire, Lieutenant and Sheriff Principal of Elginshire, succeeded to the Irish peerage honours at the death of his uncle, James, fourth Earl Fife, K.T., March 9, 1857, and the same year was created a peer of the United Kingdom. He was formerly in the diplomatic service at Paris, and from 1837 to 1857 sat in the House of Commons for Banffshire. Earl Fife married, March 16, 1846, Lady Agnes Georgiana Elizabeth Hay, daughter of William George, seventeenth Earl of Erroll, by whom (who died Dec. 18, 1869) he leaves four daughters and an only son and successor, Alexander William George, Viscount Macduff, now Earl Fife, who is Lord Lieutenant of Elgin, and has sat for that county and Nairnshire, in the Liberal interest, since 1874.

LORD TRIMLESTON.

The Right Hon. Thomas Barnewall, sixteenth Baron Trimleston, of Trimleston, in the county of Meath, in the Peerage of Ireland, died at 38, Park-lane, on the 4th inst., aged eighty-three. His Lordship was born April 14, 1796, the only son of John Thomas, fifteenth Lord Trimleston, by Maria Theresa, his wife, daughter of Richard Kirwan, Esq., of Cregg, in the county of Galway, and and inherited the ancient Barony of Trimleston (created by Edward IV., 1461) on the death of his father, Oct. 7, 1839. The nobleman whose death we record was a magistrate and Deputy Lieutenant for the county of Dublin. He married, Nov. 3, 1836, Margaret Randalina, elder daughter of the late Philip Roche, Esq., of Donore, in the county of Kildare, sister of Lady Louth, and niece to Lord Dunsany, and by her (who died Sept. 4, 1872) leaves an only surviving child, Anna Maria Louisa, married June 4, 1868, to Robert Henry Elliot, Esq., second son of Robert Kerr Elliot, Esq., of Harwood, and Clifton Park, in the county of Roxburgh. The very ancient family of Barnewall was established in Ireland in 1172 by Sir Michael de Berneval, one of the companions in arms of Strongbow. At a very early period it became separated into three lines—first, Barnewall, of Crickstown Castle, now represented by Sir Reginald Barnewall, Bart., head of the house of Barnewall; second, Barnewall, of Trimleston, represented by the late Lord Trimleston; and, third, Barnewall, of Turvey, ancestor of the Viscounts Kingsland. Lord Trimleston having died without male issue, the barony appears to have descended to Christopher Barnewall, Esq., son of the late Charles Barnewall, Esq., of Meadstown, in the county of Meath.

The new concert-hall at the Spa, Scarborough, was opened yesterday week with a performance of Haydn's "Creation."

The Mohawk tribe, one of England's stanchest allies, has deputed Chief Annosothkap to visit our shores and endeavour to elicit sympathy and help in erecting schools on their reserves on the Bay of Quinté, Canada West. Their requests are modest and genuine, and are favourably entertained by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Prime Minister of the Dominion, Mr. T. Buxton, and other philanthropists. Contributions for "The Indian Fund for the Mohawks"—whose forefathers bled and died side by side with the British troops in many a hard-fought battle—will be thankfully received by the Colonial Society, 9, Sergeants' Inn, Fleet-street.

At the meeting of the Liverpool Local Marine Board, on the 7th inst., there were several presentations for gallantry at sea. A gold watch, awarded by the Board of Trade, was handed to Captain T. Hastings, of the ship M. and E. Cox, of Halifax, N.S., in recognition of kindness to the master and crew of the ship Epaminondas, whom he rescued from that vessel when she was wrecked in the Atlantic on Oct. 28, 1877. The Board of Trade also presented a silver medal to Mr. Colin Salmond, first mate of the M. and E. Cox, and bronze medals to M. Leaske, J. Clarke, J. Gardner, J. Stewart, and M. Dean, seamen of that vessel, for gallantry in manning a boat and rescuing part of the shipwrecked crew, at great risk to themselves, from floating wreck in a heavy sea. The rest of the shipwrecked crew were saved in their own boat.

The prevailing depression of trade is likely to send an increasing number of Englishmen to seek a livelihood or to invest a small capital in some colonial territory. None (with the only disadvantage of great distance) presents more advantages than New Zealand. That colony, which consists mainly of two islands, together nearly equal in size to Great Britain and Ireland, situated in the South Pacific, a thousand miles east of the Australian continent, has often been described. The "Official Handbook," edited by Sir Julius Vogel, Agent-General for the colony in London, is a methodical account of its topography, population, and industrial resources. A pamphlet entitled "The England of the Pacific" has been issued, being a lecture by Mr. Arthur Clayden, with a series of letters he wrote to the Daily News, upon the condition and prospects of English settlers there. He was out there some months ago, visiting the provinces of Otago, Canterbury, and Nelson, in the southern island (which is sometimes miscalled "the Middle Island," because a small one, not worthy of notice, lies further to the south), and those of Wellington and New Plymouth, with the Wanganui district, in the North Island. Having before given his attention to the state of English agriculture and its labouring class, and having already visited Canada with a similar object of inquiry, he was tolerably qualified for this examination of the matter in New Zealand. His letters and lecture are published together by Messrs. Wyman and Sons.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

F F B (Plymouth).—There is a chess club in connection with the Ladies' College, Little Queen-street, W.C. We have no knowledge of any other. Address the hon. secretary, Mrs. Down, at the above address.

J C (Bradford).—Variations springing from Black's play are not separate solutions of a problem. We have credited you with the solution of No. 1850.

F H B (Leeds).—Very neat, but very easy. If found to be correct on examination, it shall appear in due course. We shall be glad to hear from you again.

ALPHA.—You will see, by referring to the solution below, that you were on the right track, and stumbled over the most—perhaps the only—commonplace variation in the analysis. We are much pleased to note that you and many other correspondents, although absent from home in holiday time, manifest their interest in our Problems by sending the solutions, as usual.

H C (Penge).—If 1. Kt takes B, then 2. Q to Q 4th—mate. You have probably overlooked that the Queen cannot be taken because the black pawn is "pinned."

F T (Derby).—A black Pawn (Q R 6th) was omitted from the diagram of No. 1828. Our attention was directed to the ingenious defence, 1. R to Q R 6th, some time after the publication of the solution, and the matter was referred to the author. We are greatly obliged for your courteous attention in sending the slips of your very interesting articles.

G L M (Mayfair).—Your best course is to seek admission to a good chess club, and select a tutor yourself. We cannot possibly assume the responsibility of recommending teachers of the game.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Q to K B sq	B to B 5th*
2. Q takes B	Anght
3. Kt mates.

* If Black play 1. K to K 5th, White's answer is 2. Q to Q 3rd (ch); if 1. Kt to Q 3rd, or B to K 5th, then 2. Kt to B 6th (ch); and if anything else, then 2. Q to Q B 4th (ch), &c.

PROBLEM No. 1852.

By D. ALLINGHAM, Dublin.

BLACK.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

A Game played recently in Liverpool between Mr. STEEL, of Calcutta, and Mr. BURN.—(Sicilian Defence.)

WHITE (Mr. S.)	BLACK (Mr. B.)
1. P to K 4th	P to Q B 4th
2. Kt to Q B 3rd	Kt to Q B 3rd
3 Kt to K B 3rd	P to K 3rd
4. P to Q 4th	P takes P
5 Kt takes P	Kt to B 3rd
6. K Kt to Kt 5th	B to Kt 5th
7. Kt to Q 6th (ch)	K to K 2nd
8. B to K B 4th	P to K 4th
9. Kt to B 5th (ch)	K to B sq
10. B to K Kt 5th

We think Queen's 2nd is a better square for the Bishop.

10.	P to Q 4th

We have not met with this in practical play before, although it was suggested to us recently by Professor Wayte as a good reply to 10. B to Q 2nd. It is, in our judgment, equally effective against the move in the text.

11. B takes Kt

11. P takes P is certainly not good, because of 11. Q B takes Kt and 12. Q to R 4th, &c.

11.	Q takes B
12. Q takes Q P

White is now exposed to a strong counter-attack; but the alternative, 12. P takes P, is not a whit more promising than the line of play adopted.

WHITE (Mr. S.)	BLACK (Mr. B.)
12.	Q B takes Kt
13. P takes B	Q R to Q sq
14. Q to K 4th	R to Q 5th
15. Q to K 3rd	Kt to K 2nd
16. P to K Kt 4th	Kt to Q 4th
17. Q to K Kt 3rd	P to K R 4th

Black has broken the enemy's centre, and this well-timed assault upon his right decides the matter.

18. P to Kt 5th

He cannot defend the Pawn; and to capture the adversary's would bring the Rook into play at once.

18.	Q takes B P
19. B to Q 3rd	Q to K 3rd
20. K to B sq	P to R 5th
21. Q to B 3rd

21. Q to Kt 2nd is no better, to say the least of it. Mr. Steel has played a losing game with such surpassing spirit that we regret we have not received more favourable specimens of his skill during his brief visit to England.

21.	B takes Kt
22. P takes B	P to K 5th
23. Q to Q sq	Kt takes B P
24. Q to Q B sq	P takes B, and White resigned.

Played at "Cooper's," Norwich, between Mr. J. O. HOWARD TAYLOR and another Amateur.

(King's Knight's Gambit.)

WHITE (Amateur).	BLACK (Mr. T.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th
2. P to K B 4th	P takes P
3. Kt to K B 3rd	P to K Kt 4th
4. B to Q B 4th	B to Kt 2nd
5. Castles	P to Q 3rd
6. P to Q 4th	P to K R 3rd
7. P to Q B 3rd	Q Kt to Q 2nd

Although, like Fluellen's martial virtues, it "appears a little out of fashion," this move is little, if anything, inferior to the modern device, 7. Q to K 2nd.

8. P to Q R 4th

The game was an offhand skirmish, of course; but here White is guilty of laches that can only be compared to irrelevancy of speech, and, so considered, we are unable to interpret its meaning. 8. P to K Kt 3rd is the correct line of play.

8.	K Kt to K 2nd
9. P to K 5th	P to Q 4th
10. B to R 2nd	Q Kt to B sq
11. P to Q B 4th	P to Q B 3rd
12. P to Q B 5th	Q Kt to Kt 3rd
13. Kt to Q B 3rd	Kt to B 4th
14. B to Kt sq	P to Kt 5th
15. B takes Kt	B takes B
16. Kt to K sq	P to K R 4th
17. B takes P	Kt takes B

WHITE (Amateur).	BLACK (Mr. T.)
18. R takes Kt	Q to K Kt 4th
19. Kt to K 2nd	B to R 3rd
20. Kt to Q 3rd

Hitherto White has lost only time, but here he contrives to lose a piece, as it turns out, or, at the very least, the exchange.

20.	Q to Kt 3rd
21. Kt to Kt 3rd

His best course was to take the Bishop with Rook; but our readers will condone the error if only because it furnishes Mr. Taylor with an opening for a pretty combination.

21.	B takes Kt
22. R to K B 6th	P to K R 5th
23. R takes Q

If he had retreated the Kt to B sq, Black would have continued with 23. Q to K 5th, and he should then win easily with his superior force. The move in the text allows him to announce mate in seven moves, which is effected as follows:—

24.	B to Q 6th (ch)
24. K to R sq	P takes Kt
25. R to Kt 8th (ch)	K to K 2nd
26. R takes K R	R takes R
27. P to K R 3rd	R takes P (ch)
28. P takes R	B to K 5th (ch), and mates next move.

The North Middlesex Magazine is the title of a new illustrated monthly published by Richardson and Best, Paternoster-row. In the opening number, which appeared on July 1, there were a brace of paragraphs on the subject of chess, evidently intended for the amusement of the younger sort; but the number for August contains a chess article—the first of a long series we shall hope—intended for "children of a larger growth," comprising a problem upon a diagram, two games carefully annotated, and current news. The chess department is edited by Mr. Edward Marks.

The fourteenth game in the match between Messrs. Potter and Mason was won by the latter, and the fifteenth was drawn. The score is therefore—Mr. Potter, 3; Mr. Mason, 4; drawn games, 8. According to the terms of the match, all drawn games after the eighth shall be scored in the proportion of half a point to each player.

HAYMAKING.

In all the range of rural occupations—in those old-fashioned districts where old ways prevail—none equals haymaking for picturesqueness. The ring of the scythe, and the measured swish of the sweep, so welcome to hear and so pleasant to see, must, however, to keep pace with the day in cost and time, give way ere long to machinery, as one mowing-machine will do the work of a dozen men, and a "haymaker" take the place of many women and children; while, by the use of a horse-rake, the ground can be cleared for the carting. For clover-hay, though, some manual labour must be still required, as that has to be handled lightly.

But before the time comes for the grass to be cut some green crops have to be secured—Lucerne, Trifolium, Clover, Rye, and Vetches—as they are of much value to the farmer, the clovers especially; the white, or "Dutch," which is so good for sheep, being usually grazed, and the red cut as fodder for horses, or dried and ricked up as hay; for, as there are few plants to equal the red clover—the broad-leaved Trifolium—for nutriment, so is a good clover-rick one of the best of foods. The purple clover is a later kind, and comes in after hay. And Lucerne is a useful crop, as is well known in Kent, where the chalk soil suits it, as it can be cut every six weeks from May till November. Rye, too, is a welcome forage, and it is given to milch cows and ewes, and also to horses, as, when cut up into chaff with hay or straw, it is a good spring diet for them, and it is chiefly on that account that it is grown in this country. On the Continent, however, the rye is allowed to ripen, as it is used in the manufacture of the spirit called "Hollands," and its flour, mixed or unmixed with wheaten flour, is made there into bread. The straw of the rye, too, serves not only for thatching and other purposes, but, as being tougher and better than any other, it is used for the making of hats. There is a kind of rye "grass" that is also valuable, and the best sort is the "Italian," as it is earlier and more vigorous than the common rye-grass; and when, as in the neighbourhood of Croydon, it can be under stimulation, by being subjected to sewage irrigation, it is often grown by itself, as an enormous crop of it can be thus obtained, which can be cut six times in the year. It is of a very hardy growth, and live stock like it. Vetches form another useful fodder, and its value is acknowledged; and were it not that the ground for a crop needs extra management, and the cost of the seed is dear, there would be more vetches grown. Clovers merely require to be sown and harrowed in amongst young corn in spring, to grow up in the autumn so as to crop next year; but the ground for vetches has to be ploughed and worked.

The time for haymaking varies greatly, according to soil, situation, and climate, the period ranging as widely as from early in June till quite late in July; and it is thus, in an average season, no uncommon thing for hay to be "carried" in Kent, Surrey, and Middlesex before the mowers elsewhere have begun; and one reason for this is obvious—that, as the midsummer storms set in about June 23, the later grass which has not been mown will have in all probability to remain uncut until July 7 or July 12, or longer still, through stress of weather, for "washed out hay" means worthless hay, the wide world over. So, "better late than drenched" the farmers say, as choosing the lesser of two great evils. Nothing, however, will influence the quality of hay so much as the "time" of cutting; as even where it has been got together well and quickly—but not too quickly—a late ingathering must of necessity yield a less nutritious fodder than that which has been mown early, as the starch and sugar which are contained in the stalks while they are full of succulent juices, before the flowering of the plant is finished, gets changed to woody fibre; and in this way, from a scarcity of hands or a hindrance from the weather, good crops are often spoiled, and the yield from rich alluvial meadows becomes no better than the inferior herbage of the poorest uplands. Of course, when swathes are down, and wet weather comes, there is only one thing to be done, and that is to let it alone; and there has been a deal of that letting alone to be borne with in the past unfortunate season by those who could not or who would not use means at hand. We allude to the famed "hay-drier"—the invention, we believe, of Mr. Gibbs, of Chingford—which not only dries wet grass quickly, even at the rate of two and a half loads per hour, but also converts it from its soddened state to good and saleable hay—saleable because hay thus treated has been found to be in every respect equal to the best sun-dried. Thus, though the crop in each case had been equally wetted, while some of the farmers have drawn to the fold, others (thanks to the "dryer") have had such hay at market that it has already fetched £6 per ton, and the price is now rising rapidly.

The weather being settled and the grass quite "right," the crop is got in in this way: the mowers begin at the dawn of day, in the proportion of one man to every five helpers, and they work with a will for four hours, when breakfast-time gives a rest. The girls and women then come in, and try, with cheery laugh and chatter, to keep pace with the men—who go on mowing steadily—by tedding, turning, winnowing, and cocking each portion as it is ready; and this shaking and tossing is continued for the next three days, so as to get it all evenly dried; when "if the sun has kept out, and the rain has kept in," it will be usually fit to carry, when it is built up into ricks, and is afterwards thatched; and where coming storms have hurried the carrying, a "shaft" is sometimes driven through the rick while being built, to save the hay from heating and from firing.

The hay crop this year was above the average, for, as the early rains forced it, the grass was knee-high, and the swathes full heavy; but the long continuance of wet weather washed out the nutriment, and much of it was hopelessly flooded. Tons of hay thus damaged had to be carted into the folds; and where a few days' burst of sun enabled it to be carried in time the work was only effected by the use of extra hands and extra means—timber-waggons even, in bark districts, being impressed into the service, they being, with the aid of hurdles as a flooring, converted to hay-carts. With such a state of things, and where mechanical means are not available, it becomes a question with the farmers themselves, should they be again visited with a similar season, whether it would not be worth their while—as our own climate is in many respects the same—to do as they do in New Zealand in like emergencies—namely, to add rock-salt to the damaged hay. They use it there in this proportion, one ton of the salt to twenty tons of hay; and the mode of using it is to cast about one bucketful of salt on every load, as the hay is housed or ricked, which checks heating, prevents mildew, and makes the fodder so palatable that cattle eat it clean and readily.

Anything is better than letting good hay spoil; few things are worse than hay used as litter; but the worst of all bad things is that we see now—hay still out in the fields in August, when, with the aid of a "dryer," it might have been all got in. Machinery, as we know, has done many wonders; but we had yet to learn that it could beat the weather, by enabling the grass to be made and carried on the self-same day, and in a good and proper condition.

TESTIMONIALS.

THOMAS FAIRBANK, M.D., of Windsor, referring to Anti-Fat in the "British Medical Journal" of June 7, 1879, says:—
"I gave some of this extract (Fucus Vesiculosus) to a very corpulent lady, who in three months lost three stones in weight without any change of diet. Since then I have frequently given it for reducing weight, depending on the accumulation of adipose tissue, and have never found it fail. I may state that a patient who has been lately taking it as an anti-fat, and who always suffered very much from rheumatic pains about the body, has been entirely free from such trouble while she has been taking the extract, a fact which she quite independently noted."

EDWARD PARRETT, Esq., Chemist, of Market-square, Winslow, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 12, 1879:—
"One lady to whom I have sold Allan's Anti-Fat has decreased 9lb. in four weeks."

THOMAS NEWBOULD, Esq., Chemist, of Bradford, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 11, 1879:—
"The gentleman for whom I obtained four bottles of Allan's Anti-Fat has derived great benefit from the same, and has recommended it to a friend. Please send me one dozen at once."

C. J. ARBLASTER, Esq., Chemist, of Birmingham, writes, under date of June 4, 1879:—
"Have just received a capital account of the effects of Anti-Fat in reducing corpulency."

SIR G. DUNCAN GIBB, Bart., M.D.,
Physician to the Westminster Hospital.
"The value of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL as a therapeutic agent in a number of diseases, chiefly of an exhaustive character, has been admitted by the world of medicine; but, in addition, I have found it a remedy of great power in the treatment of many Affections of the Throat and Larynx, especially in Consumption of the latter, where it will sustain life when everything else fails."

DR. PROSSER JAMES,
Lecturer on Materia Medica, London Hospital.
"DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL contains the whole of the active ingredients of the remedy, and is easily digested. Hence its value, not only in Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, but in a great number of cases to which the Profession is extending its use."

LENNOX BROWNE, Esq., F.R.C.S.E.,
Senior Surgeon Central London Throat and Ear Hospital.
"The action of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL has proved, in my own experience, particularly valuable, not only in those diseases for which it was originally employed, but also in many cases of Weakness of the Singing and Speaking Voice, dependent on Bronchial or Laryngeal Irritation, and in all forms of Strumous Enlargement of Glands, and Discharges from the Ear."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S.,
Late Staff Surg., Army, Prof. of Hygiene, Birkbeck Institution.
"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of "hydro-carbons" in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy. one that cannot be too widely recognised."

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL is sold ONLY in capsuled IMPERIAL Half-Pints, 2s. 6d.; Pints, 4s. 9d.; Quarts, 9s.; by all respectable Chemists and Druggists throughout the World.

BILIOUS ATTACKS.—In bilious people, and what are called bilious attacks, the liver is employed in getting rid of excessive quantities of certain ingredients, and when it is unable to do so sick headache is produced by a retention of bile in the blood. ENO'S FRUIT SALT exercises a simple but special action on the liver, by which the secretion of bile is regulated. In deficiency, therefore, of the excretive powers of the liver into the intestines, biliousness is caused, and, as a natural consequence, great sluggishness of the body and apathy of mind. In any case where the liver is sluggish ENO'S FRUIT SALT will increase its action by natural means, and thus prevent what is termed "the blues."

HOW TO AVOID THE INJURIOUS EFFECTS OF STIMULANTS.—The present system of living—partaking of too rich foods, as pastry, saccharine and fatty substances, alcoholic drinks, and an insufficient amount of exercise—frequently deranges the liver. I would advise all bilious people, unless they are careful to keep the liver acting freely, to exercise great care in the use of alcoholic drinks; avoid sugar, and always dilute largely with water. Experience shows that porter, mild ales, port wine, dark sherries, sweet champagne, liqueurs, and brandies are all very apt to disagree; while light white wines, and gin or old whisky largely diluted with soda-water will be found the least objectionable. ENO'S FRUIT SALT is peculiarly adapted for any constitutional weakness of the liver; it possesses the power of reparation when digestion has been disturbed or lost, and places the invalid on the right track to health. A world of woe is avoided by those who keep and use ENO'S FRUIT SALT; therefore no family should ever be without it.

CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see the CAPSULE is MARKED "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without, you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation.
Sold by all Chemists.
Price 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d.

PREPARED ONLY AT ENO'S FRUIT SALT WORKS, HATCHAM, LONDON, S.E., by J. C. ENO'S PATENT.

BERDALLE'S "PHOSPHORIC WINE" (Trade Mark).—THE ONLY SAFE AND RELIABLE PREPARATION OF PHOSPHORUS KNOWN. Supplies vital force to the brain and spinal cord; cures nervousness, headache, and neuralgia; imparts vigour to the most debilitated, improves appetite and digestion, and regulates all the bodily functions. Forty-eight doses for 4s. 6d. Sold by all Chemists; or sent direct for P.O.O. for 5s. from the Proprietors, R. Berdalle and Co., 176, Albany-street, Regent's Park. Send three stamps for pamphlet.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, AUGUST 23, 1879.

The play is over. The players have left the stage. The curtain has fallen. In other words, the Parliamentary Session is closed, and the people who watched its sayings and doings are left to their reflections. The performance was long, confused, and dreary beyond precedent. The impression made by it was, on the whole, rather disagreeable. Whether the House of Commons is to meet again under the same management is left in doubt—has not, perhaps, been finally determined by the highest authority. The event alone will solve the problem.

There seems to be a general feeling of discouragement at the results of our Parliamentary Institutions during the past year. The country has certainly not become prouder of them, or of the mode of their working. As a consequence of the proceedings of last Session, everyone feels that they have temporarily fallen below the historical type. There has been no lack of oratorical talent; speeches of remarkable power have been occasionally delivered; a few useful measures have been passed; but the whole process of Legislation has become deteriorated, and even that which has been done, and which has gained public approval, loses much of its worth in view of the methods employed for effecting it. The business of the House of Commons, whether successful or otherwise, has been prosecuted loosely and, to the public eye, in a manner which but little conduces to the reputation of the House as a deliberative assembly. It would appear to have been governed by no law, to have been conducted upon no consistent plan, and to have been fruitful rather by chance than by pervading wisdom. Whereas the forms of the House have heretofore commanded the admiration and reverence of the nation outside of it, they have recently been perverted to the obstruction of rational progress, and relied upon rather as a weapon of offence than as a shield of protection. Hence, disorderly scenes have been but too frequent. Division lists have commonly showed, not so much the sum total of conviction as the word of command. Votes have been delivered, on the one hand, by platoons, and have been resisted on the other by incohesive squads. Few topics have been fairly discussed upon their merits. Few bills have reached maturity by orderly sequence, and although, within the last ten days of the Session, more legislation was achieved than during preceding months, it was achieved rather as the outcome of necessity than as the product of calm and enlightened discussion. The public rejoices that what may be described as the scuffle has come to a close, and, perhaps, will not be sorry when matters are somewhat adjusted by fresh exercise of authority by the constituent bodies.

It is, perhaps, partly owing to forgetfulness of the original mandate committed to the nation's representatives that Parliament has recently displayed so many symptoms of moral exhaustion. The will of the people is not very clearly known. It may be approximately guessed at, but even the happiest guess is, for the present time, of uncertain authority. All sorts of pressure, good, bad, and indifferent, are operating out of doors; and they who will, either this year or next, decide the policy of the country and the tone of its government are themselves unusually subject to changes of political opinion. This being the case, the course taken by the House of Commons, whether in regard to Foreign Affairs or to Domestic Measures, is somewhat erratic, and but feebly guided by the traditions of consistent experience. Nobody seems able to defer to, to aim at, or to abide by, an authoritative standard for the decision of most points in the present day. But, besides this, one cannot but notice an unusual lack of firmness in the management of the House. It may be that this is due to the personal characteristics of the several members of the Cabinet; but it may be also that want of unity in that quarter is rather imaginary than real. At any rate, the House has not latterly been sensible of the weight of command to which it had been accustomed. We are all aware how, in every engagement demanding concert, the absence of a distinct directing influence tends to demoralise those who take part in it; and we need hardly be surprised that, through the long and unproductive Session just closed, the effects of this deficiency have become so marked.

So much for the manner of public business of recent growth. It is an evil, no doubt, but it is one which may be expected to pass away before long. It is humiliating whilst it lasts, but it can hardly be of a permanent character. Meanwhile, when we come to count over our legislative gains, we are not altogether without something in the shape of compensation, though it is far less than we could wish. The country has passed through a season of severe trial to its faith and patience during the last twelvemonth. Successive crises in the relations of its Government to Foreign Powers have appeared to indicate a wide and substantial change in the principles taken to underlie the policy it pursues. The change may be for the better or not; it may have become necessary, or it may be factitious; but one thing is certain. It has largely troubled the surface of political affairs abroad, as well as in some of our colonies. Upon this transition from what was settled to what is novel in the spirit of our external policy, Parliament has, unquestionably, both directly and indirectly, exerted a perceptible influence. We will not now criticise its results. It may suffice to say that the line produced by the impact of political forces moving in opposite directions is not what it would have been under other conditions, and, in all probability, will become nearer to what reason would prescribe than if it had been the simple effect of either of the conflicting influences. In relation, however, to domestic affairs, the acquisitions of the country from the now concluded Session, though very few, are not without their value. They make but a poor show; but perhaps it may turn out that they will effectively consummate the ends for which they were ostensibly proposed. Such, however, is not the impression which a Parliamentary Session is generally expected to produce. The people look, and rightly look, for something larger and more determinate than this. They have seen much waste of time; they have witnessed many angry contentions; they have watched successive fluctuations of feeling; and now, when all is over, the prevailing idea left in their minds is that, while vast labour has been expended, comparatively little profit has been obtained. Of course they look for better things in future; but these, they think, can only be ushered in by a new Parliament.

THE COURT.

The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, inspected the 42nd Royal Highlanders, under the command of Colonel Macpherson, at Parkhurst last week. Her Majesty was received with a Royal salute from the regiment in line, after which she drove down the ranks. The regiment then marched past in open column of companies, and again in close column. Colonel M'Neill, C.B., V.C., was in attendance. Her Majesty drove in the afternoon with the Grand Duchess of Baden, Princess Victoria, and Princess Beatrice; and the Grand Duke drove out with the Duchess of Edinburgh and Prince Leopold. The Queen's dinner party included the Grand Duke, the Grand Duchess, and Princess Victoria of Baden, the Duchess of Edinburgh, Princess Beatrice, Prince Leopold, Lady Waterpark, Mdlle. Von Bibra, Lieutenant-General Sir Henry Ponsonby, Lieutenant-Colonel Pickard, and the Master of the Household. The ladies and gentlemen in waiting and the Hon. The Royal party embarked from the Admiralty Pier on board a special steamer and crossed to Calais.

The Prince of Wales, accompanied by the Duke of Edinburgh, arrived at Plymouth on Monday evening in the Royal yacht Osborne, which lay during the night in Barn Pool, beneath the slopes of Mount Edgcumbe, their Royal Highnesses passing the night on board. On Tuesday the Prince and the Duke laid the foundation-stone of the new Eddystone Lighthouse. The Princes proceeded in the Trinity yacht Galatea, convoyed by a flotilla of Royal Navy vessels and pleasure-yachts. The Royal party landed at noon, when the Rev. Prebendary Wilkinson opened the ceremonial with a short religious service, after which both Princes, having tempered the mortar, the Duke of Edinburgh laid the stone, and then declared it "well and truly laid." Only official personages were admitted upon the rock during the ceremony. The Princes dined with the Earl of Mount-Edgcumbe. Their Royal Highnesses spent Wednesday at Mount-Edgcumbe, and went out shooting in the park in the afternoon, on the clearing off of the rain.

The marriage of Mr. Lewis Vivian Loyd (Grenadier Guards) and Lady Mary Sophia Hely-Hutchinson, eldest daughter of Richard John, fourth Earl of Donoughmore, and sister of the present Earl, was solemnised on the 14th inst. at St. George's Church, Hanover-square. The bridegroom was accompanied by Mr. Henry St. John Mildmay (Grenadier Guards) as his best man. The bride on her arrival at the church was met by her brother, who gave her away. Her bridesmaids were Lady Margaret Hely-Hutchinson (sister of the bride); Miss Gertrude, Miss Evelyn, and Miss Gwendolin Loyd; Lady Eva Bourke, Miss Jocelyn, and Miss Tremayne. The bride wore a white satin dress, and over a wreath of gardenias and orange-blossoms, fastened to the hair by diamond ornaments, a veil of point d'Angleterre. The jewels were principally diamonds. The bridesmaids, who were dressed alike, were attired in dresses composed of white satin polonaise over skirts of Indian muslin trimmed with lace; bonnets of white satin and lace, ornamented with bouquets of forget-me-nots. Each lady wore a pearl and diamond arrow, with the initials of the bride, and fans, with "Mary" in forget-me-nots, the gift of the bridegroom. The marriage ceremony was performed by the Hon. and Rev. George Wingfield Bourke, M.A. After the ceremony the wedding party adjourned to the Dowager Countess of Donoughmore's residence in South Audley-street for breakfast. The newly-married couple left in an open carriage and four greys for Monk's Orchard, Mr. Lewis Loyd's seat, West Wickham, Kent, to pass the early days of the honeymoon. The wedding presents were very numerous.

Professor G. J. Allman, the President for the year of the British Association, opened its annual session on Wednesday evening at Sheffield with the customary address. His subject was the most recent researches into the nature and phenomena of protoplasm—the only form of matter in which life can manifest itself. He quoted a number of experiments as proving that there is no dualism in life—that the life of the plant and the animal are identical. But, while two particles of protoplasm between which science could detect no difference developed the one only into a jelly-fish and the other into a man, we were forced to the conclusion that deep within them there must be a fundamental difference of which we know nothing. In all this no progress had been made towards an explanation of the phenomena of consciousness; and the only fact in this region of which we were certain was that with every advance in organisation there is a corresponding advance in mind. This suggested the hope that under the continued operation of the great law of evolution, higher faculties may be evolved in the far off future which may reveal to man the great mystery of Thought.

The annual fête in aid of the funds of the Police Orphanage took place at the Alexandra Palace on Thursday. The programme included a display of fireworks, two performances of "H.M.S. Pinafore," by Mr. D'Oyly Carte's company, circus entertainments, concerts by police bands, police athletic sports, military assault at arms, and a ball.

The will of the Duchess of Castiglioni Colonna was read in one of the churches of Fribourg on Sunday, the 10th. She bequeaths her collection of sculptures to the town and a sum of money to be spent in obtaining copies of those of her works of which at the time of her death she possessed neither the originals nor copies. They are to be placed in a gallery to be called by her name. This gift will make the Fribourg Museum the most important art collection in Switzerland.

THE NEW EDDYSTONE LIGHTHOUSE.

On Tuesday, with a calm sea in the Channel off Plymouth, the ceremony of laying the foundation-stone of the new Eddystone Lighthouse, fourteen miles from shore, was performed by the Duke of Edinburgh, as Master of the Trinity House Corporation, accompanied by the Prince of Wales. They had come to Plymouth in the Royal yacht Osborne, from Cowes, the day before.

The Prince of Wales and the Duke of Edinburgh, who had slept on board the Royal yacht Osborne, embarked in a steam-launch for the Trinity yacht Galatea at ten o'clock, under a salute from the ships in commission in the Hamoaze and the Sound and the guns of the Citadel. For at least an hour before this, however, the various steamers which had been chartered for the Eddystone had been taking in passengers at the Dockyard, Victualling Yard, Millbay, the Barbican, and other points, and as they loaded they rapidly made their way into the Sound. There was quite a little fleet of steam-vessels speedily under way, the majority belonging to the Royal Navy, and including the Siren and Albert, Trinity yachts, the Enchantress, Vivid, Princess Alice, Bacchante, Carron, Trusty, and numerous smaller and private craft—several loaded with excursionists. The Corporation of Plymouth embarked on board the steam-tender Sir Walter Raleigh, which was placed at their disposal by the Great Western Railway Company; and the Corporation of Devonport in the Carron. It had been stated that there was to have been a procession, and that the principal steam-ships were to have attended the Galatea on her way as a guard of honour, and some disappointment was felt that this was not done. All the steamers officially connected with the ceremony were far in the offing before any movement was made by the Galatea, and then she steamed into Hamoaze and went to take on board the heads of Departments. The Osborne, which lay in Barnpool decked with flags, took no part in the proceedings, nor was it intended that she should do so, as her great size unfitted her to approach the rocks. Shortly before eleven the Galatea returned from the Dockyard, and as she steamed steadily on into the Sound there was much discussion among the puzzled onlookers on the Hoe and elsewhere as to whether the Royal party were on board, seeing that she did not carry the Royal standard. This, however, would have been contrary to all rule, as the Duke of Edinburgh was on board, and, in addition to St. George's ensign and the flag of the Trinity House, she carried his distinguishing flag as Master. On board the Galatea were the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh, Mr. W. H. Smith, First Lord of the Admiralty, Sir Richard Collinson, Deputy-Master of the Trinity House, Captains Inglis, Nisbet, Lambert, and Webb, Elder Brethren, Admiral Farquhar, Port-Admiral, General the Hon. Leicester Smyth, the General Commanding the Western district, Admiral Sir H. Keppel, Rear-Admiral Hope, the Earl of Mount-Edgcumbe, Lord Chamberlain, the Earl of Dalkeith, Lord Colville, Sir Allan Young, Captain Lord Charles Beresford, Captain Stevenson, Lieutenant Curzon Howe, and the Rev. Prebendary Wilkinson, D.D. In the Hercules, the Lighthouse tender, were Mr. Douglass, the architect and engineer, Mr. A. T. Douglass, and Dr. Smiles, author of the "Lives of the Engineers." The Galatea put out to sea from Plymouth Sound, and arrived at the Eddystone shortly before noon, the vessels lying around the reef dressing in column as she steamed up.

Directly the vessel reached the reef the Royal party, attended by the Engineers, landed upon the central rock in four boats, no one else being allowed to disembark except the workmen actually engaged. The ceremony, which was very short, now commenced. The Rev. Dr. Wilkinson, Vicar of St. Andrew's, the mother parish of Plymouth, having offered a few brief prayers, Mr. Douglass handed a handsome trowel, with silver blade and handle of Eddy stone, well and appropriately carved and inscribed, to the Duke, who formally spread the cement in the deep hole the stone was to occupy, the stones on both sides of it being already in their place. After the Royal Master of the Trinity House had spread the cement he passed the trowel to the Prince of Wales; then a bottle, in which was inclosed a parchment scroll, containing full details of the work and of all engaged in it, was placed in a cavity, and the first stone was lowered to its place. It is a fact worth noting that the stone was the identical one which was to have been laid in June, and which had been carefully preserved for this occasion. It was then declared by the Duke of Edinburgh that the stone was well and truly laid, amid the lusty cheers of the party on the rock, taken up again and again by the occupants of the vessels ranged around. The whole proceedings did not occupy more than a quarter of an hour or twenty minutes, and afterwards the party visited the old Lighthouse, which has now for nearly six score years honoured the memory of its great builder, Smeaton. The weather up to the laying of the stone had been favourable; but almost immediately after the ceremony it began to change for the worse, and ere long the rain descended in torrents.

The Galatea returned about half-past two; and in the evening the Prince of Wales and the Duke of Edinburgh dined with the Earl of Mount-Edgcumbe, at his residence, and with a large party of distinguished guests.

The projected new lighthouse, which is to supersede the one that was erected by Smeaton towards the end of the last century, is shown in our Illustration as it will appear when completed, standing about 127 ft. from the existing tower. The engineer, from whose designs and under whose direction this structure is to be carried out, is Mr. James Nicholas Douglass, member of the Institution of Civil Engineers. The new tower, which is to be constructed entirely of granite, will consist of a cylindrical base, 44 ft. in diameter and 22 ft. high, having its upper surface 2½ ft. above high water of spring tides. From this base will spring the shaft of the tower, 35 ft. 6 in. in diameter at the commencement, and 18 ft. 6 in. in diameter under the cornice, the top of which will be 138 ft. above the rock. On the cylindrical base there will thus be formed a level margin 4 ft. 3 in. wide for a landing-platform. The tower is to be a concave elliptic frustum, the generating curve of which has a semi-transverse axis of 178 ft., and a semi-conjugate axis of 37 ft. The tower is to be solid, with the exception of a water-tank, to the level of 25½ ft. above high water spring tides. At this level the walls will be 8 ft. 6 in. thick, diminishing to 2 ft. 3 in. at the top. The tower will contain nine apartments, 10 ft. in height, in addition to the lantern, the seven uppermost being 14 ft. in diameter. The whole of the work is to be dovetailed and cemented, both horizontally and vertically, on the system already adopted at the Hanois, Wolf, and Longships Rock Lighthouses. The total net quantity of granite in the work will be about 69,100 cubic feet. The cost of the work is estimated at £78,000. On the completion of the new lighthouse it is intended to take down the present lighthouse to the level of the top of the solid base, 29 ft. above high water of spring tides. This portion of the present structure is shown remaining in our Illustration of the proposed new lighthouse as it will appear when the work is finished. It has been determined that the elevation of the focal plane of the light shall be 130 ft. above high water, by which the range of the light will be increased from fourteen to about seventeen and a half nautical miles, so as just to overlap the range of the new electric lights at the Lizard. The new lighthouse will be provided with a first-order light and a fog-signal of maximum intensity, but the distinctive characters of these have not yet been decided upon.

It will be remembered that their Royal Highnesses, accompanied by the two naval cadets, sons of the Prince of Wales, were at Plymouth on June 21, for the purpose of laying the foundation-stone of this important structure. But the state of the weather and of the sea on that appointed day did not allow of the stone being laid, and the ceremony was therefore postponed. Their Royal Highnesses on that occasion did not go out to the Eddystone, as had been intended, but went to inspect the great stone-cutting establishment at Oreston, from which the materials of the new lighthouse are to be supplied. An Illustration of this subject will be given next week.

THE CHURCH.

The parish church of Shipton Bellinger, near Marlborough, which has been restored by Mr. Withers, has been reopened by the Bishop of Winchester; and that of Ferryfrystone, near Ferrybridge, by the Archbishop of York.

Two painted windows, executed by Mr. W. G. Taylor, of Berners-street, have been placed in the Church of St. Mary Elms, Ipswich. The subjects, Faith, Hope, Charity, and Mercy, fill the four lights, with appropriate floral ornaments in the tracery above.

The quaint little town of Painswick, among the Cotswold Hills, was on the 6th inst. the scene of much rejoicing, on the occasion of the reopening of the fine parish church, which has been for twelve months undergoing a careful restoration, under the direction of Mr. F. Waller.

The parish Church of St. Michael, Abergele, was reopened on the 13th inst. after restoration. The monuments have been carefully preserved, including one to the thirty-eight persons who met their death in the accident in August, 1868, when the Irish mail was burnt by the ignition of a cask of petroleum.

The fine old parish Church of St. Peter-Port, Guernsey, has been enriched with a handsome brass lectern, the gift of the Misses Lievre, of Hauteville, in memory of their brother, Mr. Peter Le Lievre, for twenty-one years churchwarden of the parish. The lectern is from the ateliers of Messrs. Hardman and Co., and is characterised by all their well-known qualities of finish and thorough solidity.

Meshaw church, North Devon, was reopened on Sunday. A new sacrarium has been built out and the chancel reseated as a memorial to the late Prebendary Karslake; and two windows, excellent in colouring and design, have been given by his son and daughters. The lady of the manor gives a handsome porch, and purposes re-hanging the bells. The porch and the other alterations are from drawings by Mr. Ashworth, of Exeter.

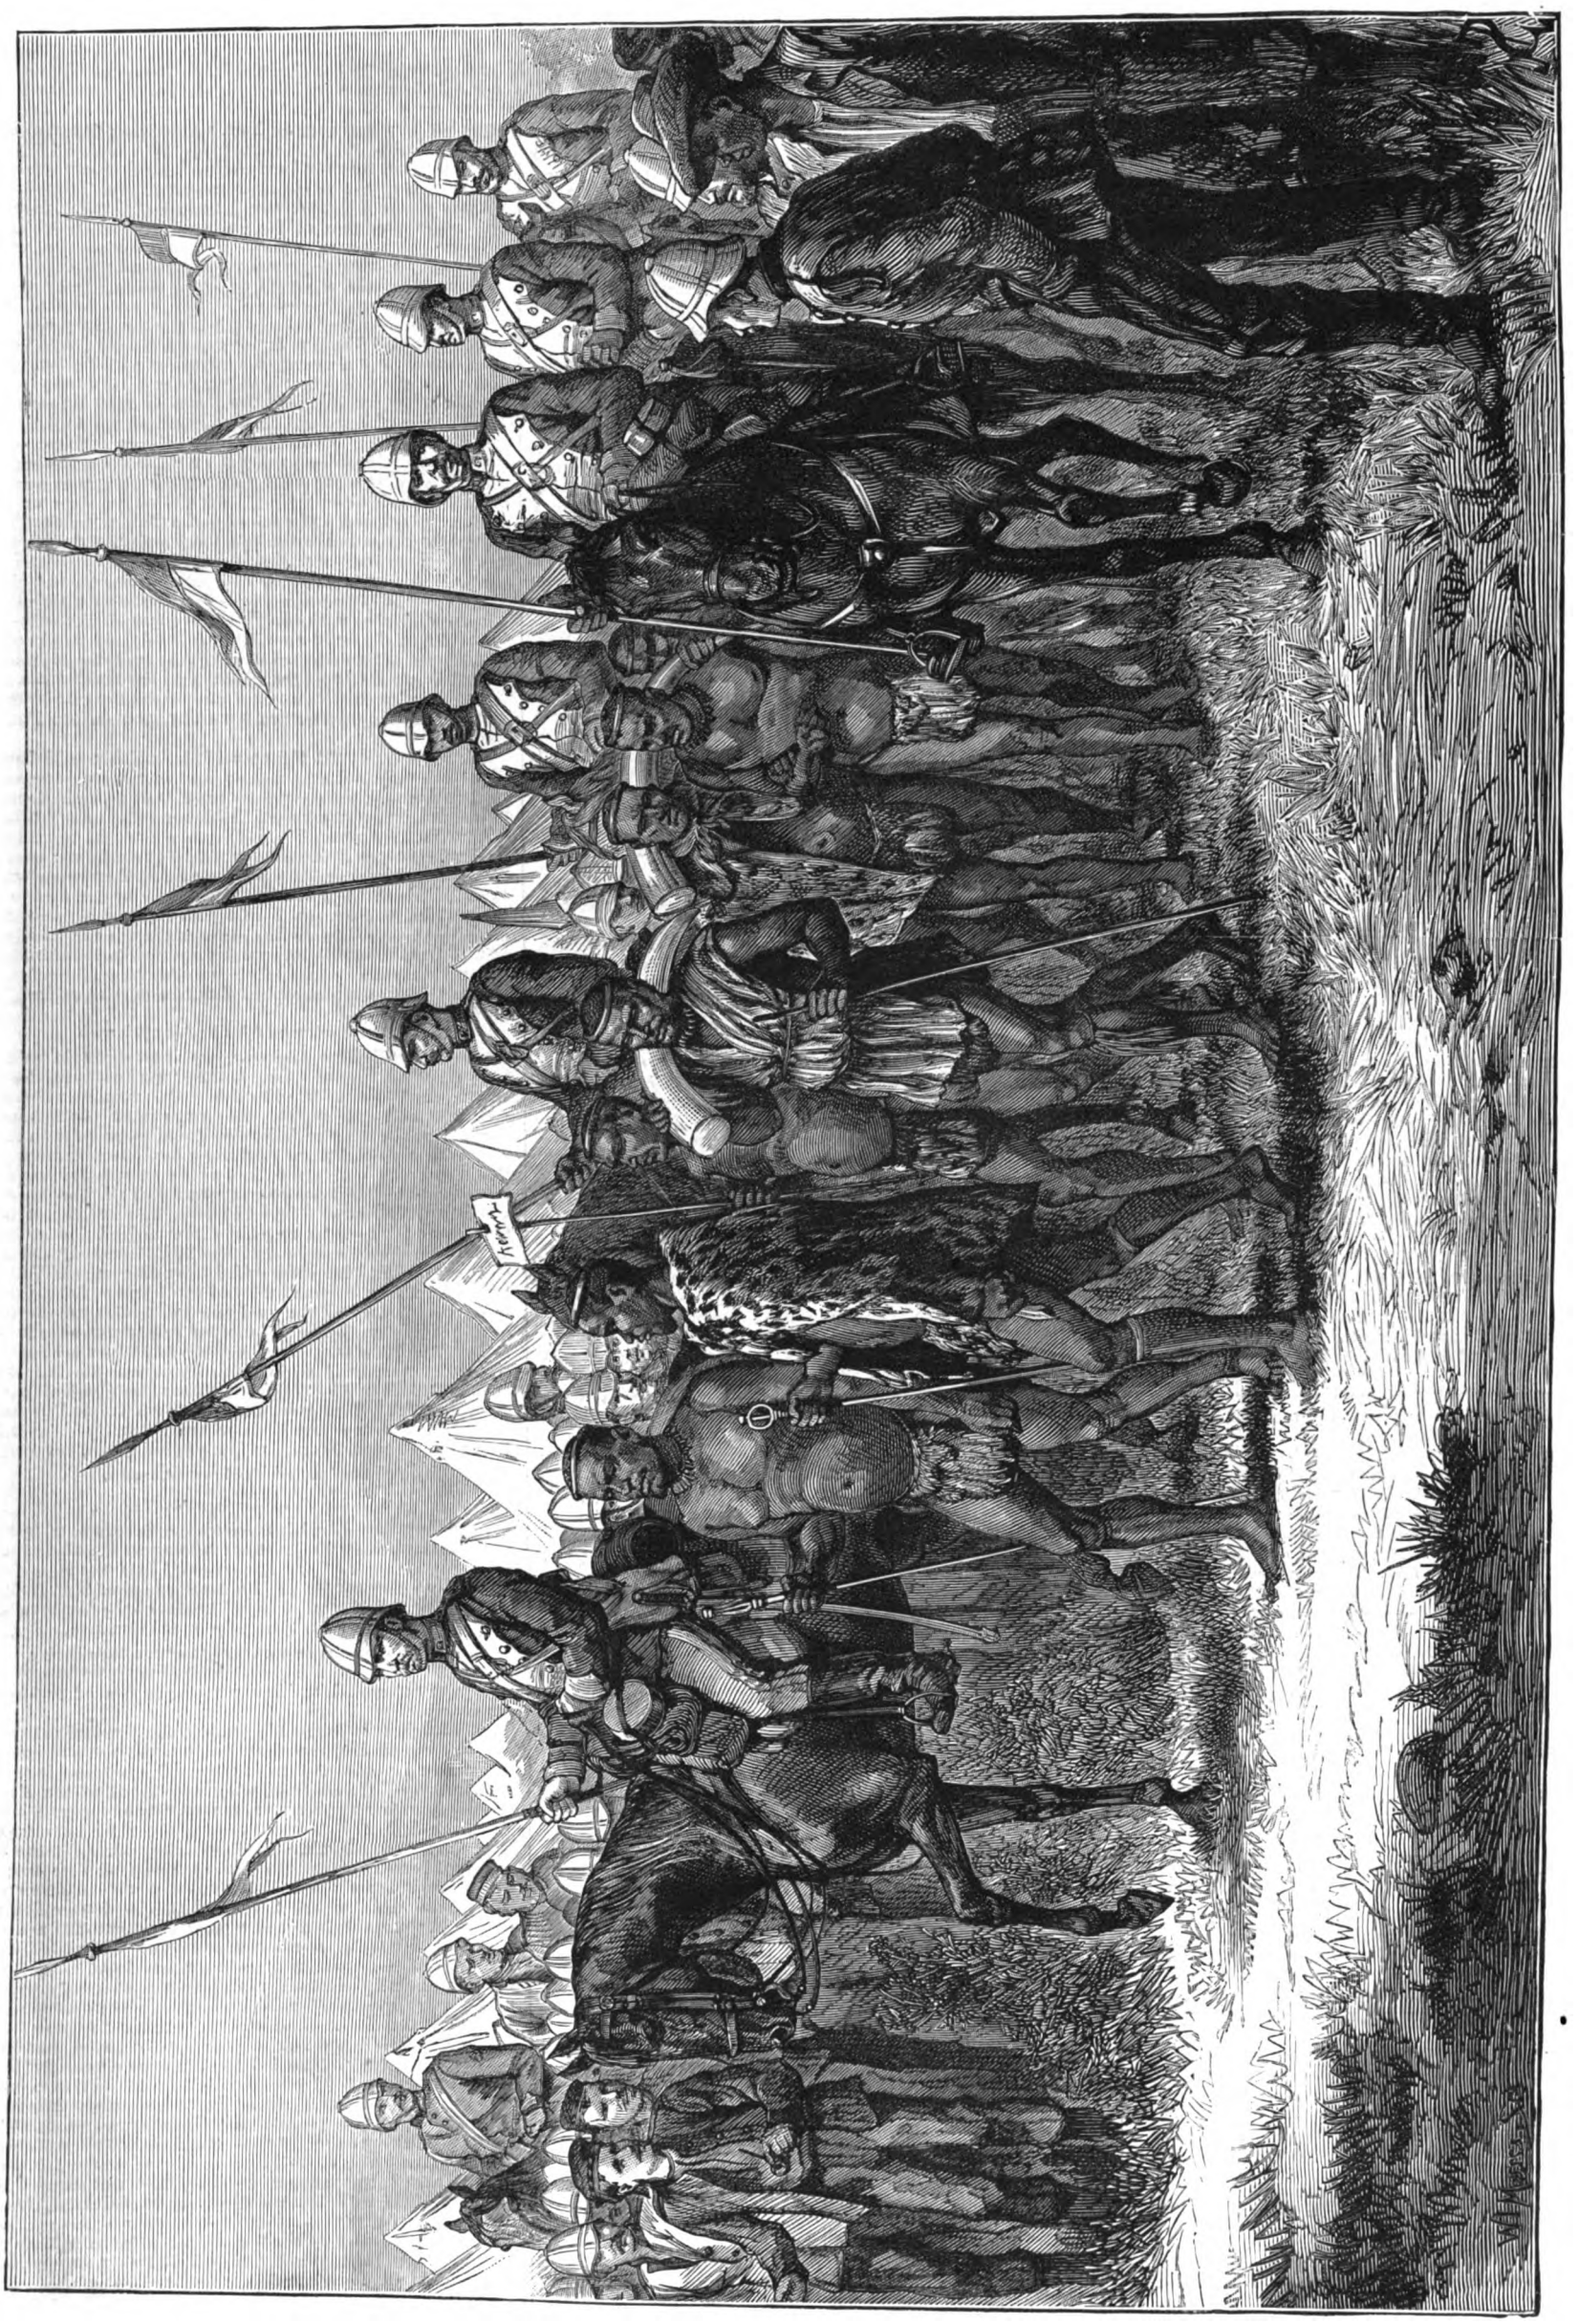
The new church at Altcar was consecrated on the 13th inst. by the Bishop of Newfoundland. This rural parish church is situated a few miles from Formby, to the right of the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway. The parish church of Altcar, which was built in 1742, had been for many years in a dilapidated condition. The Earl of Sefton offered to rebuild it at his sole cost. The new building is erected a little to the north of the former one, the church being enlarged.

The corner stone of the new chapel now building at Wynyard Park by the Marquis of Londonderry was laid on the 28th ult. by the Rev. William Cassidi, Vicar of the parish, in the unavoidable absence of the noble Lord. After the ceremony, a presentation was made by the members of the congregation worshipping in the Wynyard Chapel, of a very handsome silver salver, as a token of their esteem, to the reverend gentleman for his long and faithful services during thirty-eight years.

The Archbishops of Canterbury and York and the Bishop of London have nominated to the vacant bishopric of Jamaica the Right Rev. William George Tozer, D.D. Bishop Tozer, who graduated from St. John's College, Oxford, in 1851, was consecrated in 1863 as a missionary Bishop, and worked for ten years on the East Coast of Africa. In 1873 he resigned his post on the ground of ill-health. His health being now re-established, it is his intention to proceed without delay to the new diocese to which he has been appointed.

Under the care of Mr. Street, R.A., Guilsfield church has undergone a strictly conservative restoration, and it now presents the aspect of a handsome church, mainly of the fourteenth century. The old pews and galleries have been swept away, and the choir is separated from the nave by a splendid oak screen. The stalls, sedilia, and altar are in the Perpendicular style, to correspond with the large east window and the Tudor roof. This last is of very elaborate design, the bosses comprising no fewer than 120 different patterns. They were picked out with colour, which has been renewed with very good effect. In harmony with this roof, Mr. Street has designed an altar-cloth, which has been worked at Bruges, and presented by Mrs. Heyward, of Crosswood. The pulpit, a donation from Colonel Heyward, is of carved oak. The lectern, which is also of oak, is the gift of Mrs. Jenkyns.

On Tuesday se'nnight the chancel and aisles of St. Gwladys Church, Pont Aberbargoed, in the parish of Gelligaer, were consecrated by the Lord Bishop of Llandaff. A population of 1000 people having been brought together by the opening of collieries four miles from the parish church, this work was rendered necessary. An iron church has been erected as a temporary nave. Accommodation has been thus provided for 300 people. A crypt, 30 ft. by 40 ft., has been erected under the chancel and aisles for Sunday-school and other mission purposes. The total cost has been £1780, of which £680 remains still to be collected. The Rev. Canon Bevan, of Hay, preached at the 11 a.m. service, the Rev. E. Turbervill William Caldicot at 3 p.m. and the Rev. Edward Jones, Vicar of St. George, Tredegar, in Welsh, at 6 p.m. The services, notwithstanding the very boisterous weather, were well attended throughout. The offertory collections amounted to £27 14s. 10d.



The Church of St. Anthony, Mile End-road, has been consecrated by the Bishop of London. It is in the style of the early part of the thirteenth century, from designs of Mr. Ewan Christian. The nave and chancel are of the same width, and open from end to end, without any intervening arch, a dwarf screen wall dividing the raised chancel floor from the nave. A natural slope of the ground upwards from west to east has been followed in laying the floor of the nave. The aisles are divided from the nave by an arcade of four arches. A series of sixteen single lancet windows on each side in the clerestory, a large east window, and a row of windows in an open vestibule at the west end, give abundance of light. The roof, formed of massive timbers, is of pitch pine, the chancel roof alone being boarded and decorated. There is accommodation for 700 worshippers, and the seats are all free and open. Adjoining the church is a parish room, which can be used for a Sunday-school, and for meetings of the congregation. The cost of this latter has been defrayed by the Grocers' Company, who, as patrons, have added £100 a year to the endowment, in lieu of a rectory. The Company will also defray the cost of an organ, communion plate, and the interior fittings of the church.

The German Emperor returned on the 14th inst. to Castle Babelsberg, his country residence near Potsdam. He had an enthusiastic reception, his carriage as he drove from the railway station to the castle being, it is stated, literally filled with bouquets of every size and device. At Eger he was met at the railway station and greeted by the King and Queen of Saxony. His Majesty, on arriving at Babelsberg, was welcomed back by the Crown Prince and other relatives. His Majesty has been rejoined by the Empress, who has returned in good health from her visit to Switzerland; and their Majesties are expected to remain at Babelsberg till the beginning of September.

EGYPT.

The firman of investiture of the Khedive was presented and read on the 14th inst. at the Citadel of Cairo with great pomp in the presence of the Khedive, the Princes, the Diplomatic Corps, the Ministry, the religious bodies, and functionaries. A Times despatch says that the army and the people in masses greeted Tewfik Pasha as Khedive with great enthusiasm. The ceremony concluded with a benediction, pronounced by an imam, after which the Khedive held a general reception of some 3000 persons. The town was generally illuminated at night, and next evening there was a torchlight procession of the troops.

The Ministry having resigned, a new Cabinet has been formed, in which the Khedive holds the position of President of the Council. A Standard telegram says that this change is attributed to French influence.

CANADA.

A quarrel occurred on Friday, the 15th inst., in Quebec between two societies of ship labourers, consisting respectively of Irishmen and French Canadians. Revolvers were fired, two persons were killed, and twenty-six wounded. A display of the military on Saturday prevented a renewal of the rioting. All was quiet during Sunday and Monday, but both the Irish and French Canadian rioters remained armed. The military are still kept on duty in readiness for any emergency. A meeting was held on Monday by the Mayor, magistrates, and military authorities, who decided to request the Government to place the city under the provisions of the Blake Act. By a later telegram we learn that a committee of the leading citizens, including some Irishmen and French Canadians, were endeavouring to make peace between the rival ship-labourers.

INDIA.

The Ameer Yakoob Khan has (the Times correspondent at Calcutta says) already given an earnest of his desire to act up to his treaty engagements. He has shown Major Cavagnari three letters received by him from General Kaufmann. Two of these, dated March, conveyed the Russian General's congratulations on the Ameer's accession; and the third, written in May, announced General Kaufmann's approaching departure for St. Petersburg. The Ameer consulted Major Cavagnari as to the answers he should return; and, in accordance with our Envoy's advice, the Ameer replied in courteous terms, at the same time suggesting that all future communications should be sent through the Indian Government. Cholera is still prevalent at Cabul. The disease had broken out in a virulent form among the regiments which lately returned from Herat, and a panic took place among the soldiers, many of whom deserted, and the rest have been allowed to go to their homes. Nawab Sir Gholam Hussein Khan is about to proceed to Cabul to act temporarily as our Envoy's assistant. Candahar city has been made over to Sirdar Shere Ali Khan, the Governor appointed by the Ameer, and his first step was to reimpose certain taxes which had been remitted by us. This caused some discontent, and many tradesmen closed their shops, but the city is reported to be quiet, and cholera is diminishing.

Among other items of news sent by the Indian correspondent of the Times are the following:—The Duke of Buckingham has determined to proceed in person to the scene of disturbances in Rumpa, fifty troopers of the body-guard accompanying him as an escort. Later news from Cashmere does not bear out the more favourable accounts which were published a fortnight ago. It is now stated that the drought continues, and that the condition of the people and the appearance of the country are described as deplorable.

AUSTRALIA.

The Agent-General for New South Wales has received the following telegram from the Chief Secretary of the Colony having reference to the appointment of an additional colonial Judge:—"Sydney, Aug. 14. Windeyer, fifth Judge; Wisdom, Attorney-General."

By way of San Francisco we have the following summary from Sydney papers to July 17:—The Legislative Council persisting in its amendment to the Land Bill, the Government has abandoned the measure. The Premier has given notice in the Legislative Assembly of a series of resolutions condemning the action of the Council in repeatedly rejecting the bill. The Assembly has had under consideration the measures thus rendered necessary, and it is proposed to introduce a bill making the Council elective. The Hon. Joseph Docker introduced a series of counter-resolutions in the Legislative Council, and both motions were considered last night, but the debate in each Chamber was adjourned till to-day. The Appropriation Bill, covering an expenditure of nearly £5,750,000, has passed both Houses. The Public Works Loan Bill, authorising the Government to borrow nearly £6,000,000 for railway works and nearly £1,500,000 for water supply and sewerage works, has been read the second time and passed through the Committee of the Legislative Assembly. The Act abolishing the duty on gold will come into operation on Nov. 1.

From the same source we learn that the Queensland Legislative Assembly has passed the second reading of the Land Bill; and that Mr. G. R. Harding, barrister-at-law, has been appointed to the vacant puisne judgeship.

NEW ZEALAND.

By telegram of the 18th inst. from Wellington we learn that Parliament has been dissolved.

Wellington, July 15 (viâ San Francisco).—Parliament was opened on the 11th inst. Among the measures the introduction of which was promised by the Governor's speech are manhood suffrage, Parliamentary representation on the basis of population, triennial Parliaments, and the regulation of Chinese immigration into the colony. The revenue of the colony exceeded the estimates by £190,000; but there had, nevertheless, been a great falling off in the amount derived from land and from the income tax, and Parliament would be asked to sanction an additional loan of £5,000,000. Mr. G. M. O. Rorke, formerly Chairman of Committees, has been elected Speaker of the House of Representatives. Over one hundred Maoris are now awaiting their trial for ploughing on land belonging to settlers at New Plymouth. The position of native affairs is now quieter.

FAIRY FOXGLOVES.

I suppose that Shakspearean commentators are not able to tell us decisively whether the dainty Ariel was one of those "spanleng elves" of whom Ben Jonson speaks—fairies who were tiny enough, both in dimensions and appetite, to suck where the bee sucked, to fly on the bat's back, to couch with comfort in the cowslip's bell, and, altogether, to have a very good time of it "under the blossom that hangs on the bough," even as we see gracefully depicted in Mr. H. J. Townsend's picture, in the Royal collection, where the quaint, dainty, delicate Ariel lies at full outstretched length on the swinging stem of the convolvulus, and makes it his hammock during the moonlit midsummer night.

But, whatever may be the size of Ariel or any other tricksy spirit, there is a wild-flower now in bloom which may be claimed as the fairies' flower. I speak of the Foxglove, which, like other products of Nature in this unusually backward season, has been a laggard in putting forth its wealth of blossoms. In the first place, its Saxon name has nothing to do with that sly Mr. Reynard who will be so highly popular in the coming hunting season. The whole hillside may be "redder than a fox," according to our Poet Laureate, but the redness of the Foxglove is not that of the fox. The fox of the foxglove is but a corruption of the word folks—that is, the folks par excellence—the little folks or fairies—the elves and sprites of the woods and heaths, who are clad in green and use these flowers for gloves. I am constrained to adopt that interpretation of the second syllable, gloves, though—without going deeply into the question of a fairy's measurement—I should have thought that the bell-like blossoms were better adapted for head-coverings, and should be caps or helmets rather than gloves. But the second syllable, "gloves," is probably taken from the botanical name of the flower, Digitalis purpurea; and in Latin, digitalis signifies "of or belonging to a finger," and, with reference to a measure, "that which contains the thickness of a finger." The only classical author who used this word to signify a glove was M. Terentius Varro; but although he lived in the Augustan Golden Age of Poets, and should be accepted as an authority, yet the learned critic, Joseph Justus Scaliger, surmised that the word was a mistake for digitabulum, which was the glove used for gathering olives. Here, then, we get the basis for the glove in the Foxglove's name.

But it was not till the year 1564, that this wild flower was dignified with a Latin name; and it received its botanical appellation Digitalis purpurea from the learned doctor and botanist, Leonard Fuchs, of Tubingen, who included it in his "Historia Plantarum." And here a thought occurs to me. As Fuchs means Fox, could Fuchs's glove-flower come to be called Foxglove from the patronymic of the person who gave it its Latin name? But, if so, this would be destructive to the little folks' theory, so I will pass it over as unworthy of credibility. And, as to the glove, although the freckled bells of this flower would appear to be adapted to individual finger-tips rather than to the whole-handed "bunch of fives," yet the poet Cowley has accepted the idea of the entire glove, in his line,

> The foxglove on fair Flora's hand is worn.

As to the adjective purpurea, we must bear in mind that the signification of the word "purple" in Latin, is wider even than in English. It means reddish and red, as well as violet and puce and dark blue-black purple; and when the ladies of Rome wished for an artificial aid to their complexions they used for that purpose a powder that we should call rouge, but which they called purple. So we must translate purpurea as "purplish;" for purple it is not by many shades. The foxglove, in short, is not born to the purple; it is but a wayside and woodland flower, fitter for fairies than for princes. And the little folks may claim it for their own. In Ireland it is called fairy-fingers; in Wales, red-fingers; in Northumberland and the Borders, fairy-thimbles; in Germany, finger-hut; and the Irish, who are always rich in fairy folk-lore, have yet another pretty name for it—fairy-bells. The bells are, of course, suggested by the shape of the freckled blossoms, hanging, bell-like, from the tall stalk to the depth of some two feet, and, for the most part, all turned in one direction. Tennyson, in "The Two Voices," beautifully describes these foxglove bells, where the secret Voice tells the Poet that, though he may be lying in his grave, yet

> Not less the bee would range her cells,
> The furzy prickle fire the dells,
> The foxglove cluster dappled bells.

And as these bell-like blossoms on the tall stem, widest at the base and lessening to the summit, suggest the idea of a spire, so the Laureate, in "In Memoriam," bids the long-delaying sweet New Year to "bring the foxglove spire." T. L. Merritt, in his poem "Bring me flowers," supposes the foxglove bells to ring a fairy chime; for he speaks of the foxglove,

> Whose bell-flowers warn the lark of morning's coming
> On murmuring breeze.

In Norway they call the flower by the names of fox-bell and fox-music.

Although as bells the blossoms of the foxglove may only be poetically vocal and resonant, yet an audible and even loud sound may be extracted from them. I am reminded of this fact by the village children, who have given to the Foxglove the popular, if not pretty, name of "the pop-gun flower." The little country lads and lasses pluck a blossom from the long stem, and, pinching together and closing up the wider, open end, and blowing into the upper and smaller end, suddenly bring down the inflated blossom with a sharp smack against the palm of the hand. If this is done quickly and carefully, the result is a loud "pop," similar to the report that would be made by a wooden pop-gun. So rooted are the familiar names of wild flowers in the minds of many country children that I have met young rustics who only knew foxgloves as "pop-guns," and did not recognise them when called by their real names. Similarly, when, near to Peterborough, I pointed to a large field ablaze with crimson flowers, and asked a Huntingdonshire lad if they were poppies, "No, sir, was the reply, "they be headaches." And, in like manner, if you ask many a small Arcadian, "Are those flowers foxgloves?" the answer would be, "No, they be pop-guns."

But, though you might get any number of "headaches" in the neighbourhood of Peterborough, you would fail to find "pop-guns;" for, notwithstanding that the district is singularly rich in wild-flowers of a very varied kind, from the water-plants on its fen-side to the heather and furze on the woodland side, yet, in the list of four hundred wild flowering plants, chronicled by F. A. Paley, M.A., as growing within a wide radius of Peterborough, the foxglove is not included. From its presence or absence, and if from its presence, by its size, whether tall or stunted, geologists will tell you what is the formation of the district. We do not, for example, find foxgloves in the finely-wooded country that covers the Lincolnshire Oolite Limestone in the county of Rutland, although this part of the country is rich in a profusion of wild flowers, with, here and there, ferns of various kinds—and ferns, foxgloves, and fairies form an alliterative combination of words that is perfectly harmonious in sense as well as in sound—the ferns, together with the foxgloves, being under the special protection of the little folks, who use fern-seed as the charm for invisibility, and the fern fronds for "the Devil's brushes," wherewith to sweep a house free from evil spirits. But, though we find some fairy ferns in Rutland, we do not meet with fairy foxgloves.

In my own Rutland garden I have the greatest difficulty to grow foxgloves, imported from Worcestershire, even though the soil is specially prepared for their reception. They are, comparatively, stunted in growth, and die off after a year or two. Nevertheless, their places replenished by fresh plants, they make a brave show on the slope of the Rockery, rising out of great green clumps of feathery ferns, their pyramidal clusters of blossoms of purplish red and deeper crimson disclosing the clusters of leopard-like spots inside each fairy-glove—which might be those "flower urns deep," of which Mrs. Hemans sung. Their blossoms make a most agreeable contrast of colour to their own large, pointed, thick, blueish-green leaves, together with the brighter yellow-greens of the various fern fronds. They evidently do not think it an improvement in locality to be transferred from the red-rock sandstone of Worcestershire to the colder limestone of Rutland; but they live their little day, and cheer us for a season, and the bees thoroughly appreciate them, and find them powerful rivals to the honeyed blossoms of the lime, "a summer home of murmurous wings." It recalls Wordsworth's words concerning bees, that they Will murmur by the hour in foxglove bells.

But, though I am happy in their possession, yet I wish that I could bodily remove, in the full height of their luxuriance of growth and blossom, some six square yards of foxgloves that adorn the precipitous bank of a certain Worcestershire dingle where is a fir plantation. They would not be missed; for scarcely a soul sees them, save an occasional labourer on his way to work, or the Squire's keeper intent on game-preserving. But there they are, in all their beauty, high up above a deep bed of bracken ferns, which are so luxuriant that I have gathered them there to a height of seven or eight feet. Their many-branched fronds rise high enough to give shelter to an antlered stag, and would have concealed Roderich Dhu's clan when they leapt forth in answer to his shrill whistle. Almost as tall as these bracken ferns, and with a depth of clustered blossoms for at least two feet, are the foxgloves; they rise, in a dense mass of colour, high above the bracken, and underneath the tall straight stems of the fir-trees. In the greeny gloom and chequered light and shade gleam the brilliant hues of their blossoms—a crowd of floral spires, whose multitudinous speckled bells should ring their fairy peals to the little folks who love such woodland homes and delight in copses and sequestered glens, and separate themselves altogether from the domestic Lares and Penates, whose habitation is in towns and cities of freestone and red brick. And, as green is the distinctive colour of the country, representing its verdure, whether of blade or leaf, so the little folks are usually represented as not only being dwellers in green hills and mounds, but also as being clad in green clothes, and sometimes wearing conical green caps, like the clogadan that Highland children weave with rushes. Of course, we know to what wild flower they will go for their gloves.

Not far from that plantation the foxgloves may be seen dispersedly growing on the high ferny banks of those deep, narrow lanes that are so characteristic of Worcestershire: they nod their tall heads also on the billowy stretches of the common, among the gorse and heather and bilberries; and they grow, singly or in small groups, from the crevices, ledges, and coigns of 'vantage of the steep red-sandstone rocks, at the summit of which a dark and venerable yew holds tightly on with its gnarled roots. And further away, on the opposite side of the county, they may be seen scattered over the green hillsides of "Malvern's lonely height," near to clumps of gorse that the sheep have nibbled into roundness, and which the rustics locally term "fuzzen," evidently a corruption of furze. In these situations they are, for the most part, small and stunted, though in places they grow from two to three feet in height; and I have now before me a water-colour sketch, that I made many years ago, of a little rustic maiden whom I met at a corner of one of the steep paths that wind round the Herefordshire Beacon, and she bears in her arms a great bundle of foxgloves in full flower. A painter might have many a worse subject for his model than this little maid who had been anxious to Explore the foxglove's freckled bell.

There is no reference to the foxglove in "Malvern Hills," a poem that passed through some four or five editions rather more than half a century ago. It was penned by Joseph Cottle, the "Bœotian" of Byron's "English Bards," and brother of "Oh, Amos Cottle! Phœbus! what a name!" But this Joseph Cottle, who was the personal friend of Coleridge, Southey, and Wordsworth, and had the honour, when a bookseller at Bristol, to publish the first volumes of the works of each of those three poets, has remembered the foxglove in his poem "Dartmoor," where he has the line, and, after explaining that the ancient race of Britons, called Danmoni, inhabited the district that is now Devon and Cornwall, he says that nowhere does the foxglove grow more luxuriantly than in Devonshire, and that he has there noticed it at the height of five to six feet.

And thou, tall foxglove, still Danmonium's pride;

I have not yet mentioned the white variety of the foxglove, which is somewhat rare, though I have gathered it in that most romantic fairy district, Habberley Valley, Worcestershire, near to the old Roman encampment of Wars-hill, now corrupted into Wassall Top. But I did not find it in that other Worcestershire Abberley—the Abberley without the aspirate—where the Foxglove is found in luxuriant growth. Equally plentiful is the red foxglove—and I mention it in connection with the little folks—not far from Abberley, at Alfrick, which name, according to Mr. W. T. Thoms, F.S.A., is not derived from Ælfric, the Saxon lord, but from Elfreich, the veritable fairy-land. I often saw those fairy foxgloves of Alfrick, for I spent three very pleasant years of my life in the adjacent parish, where also the foxgloves grew in luxuriance, and made a great display in the wild-flower exhibits of the cottage children at the annual village flower show, where fancily-treated cards, of my own drawing and design, were given as supplementary to the prizes in money. On one of those cards I remember drawing fairies and foxgloves. Maclise has painted them—Irish fairies, no doubt; and so has Sir Noel Paton—perhaps from Scotch fairy models, though the picture was the reconciliation of Oberon and Titania; and Sir Edwin Landseer has found the foxglove useful in furnishing him with that "bit of red" without which, it is said, he considered no painting to be complete. For example, in his picture "The Twins," where is a lifesize ewe, with two lambs, on a green hill-side, some crimson foxgloves in full blossom are introduced among the herbage on the right side of the painting.

The white variety of the foxglove is very pretty, yet it lacks the charm of those freckles, or spotted leopard-skins, that are spread inside the bell-like depths of the purplish-red flowers; though these, as I have been told (for I have not found it to be the case within my own knowledge), will, by cultivation, gradually lose their reddish tints and tone down to white. It seems a pity that the foxglove (and also the hollyhock) should not be more generally cultivated for garden embellishment. Seen in masses, and against a background of rocks or greenery, it rivals many a rarer plant in effective appearance. Only the other day, in the garden of a certain country house, I saw a charming sight produced by foxgloves. On the higher side of a winding gravel walk that divided the lawn and shrubbery was a sharply-sloping bank of some depth, on which grew shrubs and trees, chiefly conifers; ferns and rocks were among them; and all along in front was a broad belt of foxgloves, of various hues, from pure white to purplish red. Such a pretty effect might be more common than it is if our gardeners were more fully alive to the foxglove's beauty and would cultivate it so as to develop a variety of tints. It is a biennial, but is neither a tender plant nor quickly over in its blossoming. It lasts through the greater part of the summer, and is thoroughly effective in masses as well as most graceful in the individual plant. If the stewards of flower shows would but offer prizes for the best and largest variety of foxgloves, grown in a garden, we soon should see them brought into fashion and popularity.

In many places, during the month of July or the beginning of August, when the leaves of the foxglove are in full perfection, cottagers gather them, and, after drying them in the hot sun, stew them into a decoction, the imbibing of which does them, on the whole, more harm than good; as, although the first doses of the infusion are stimulating and exhilarating, yet the after effects are depressing and sedative, and the accumulation of the digitalis in the system is a source of evil. Nevertheless, the country-folk believe in this foxglove infusion as a fine medicine and powerful remedy, especially in dropsy, palpitation, and consumption. Of course, as we all know, the digitalis is a valuable drug when it is given to a patient by the judicious advice of a skilled physician; but it is one of those items in the pharmacopœia that ought not to be trifled with, especially by ignorant persons, who might, unconsciously and to their own hurt, take an overdose of it. Those same thick, green, woollen-like leaves, that usually outlive the winter, are used by Welsh housewives for domestic decorations; for they squeeze out of them their juices, wherewith they mark out dark-stained stencilled patterns on the white stone floors of their cottages, thus producing an effect somewhat similar to encaustic tiles.

The foxglove is accepted as a floral emblem for Youth—probably on account of the light down that covers the stalk of the plant. The French have this saying regarding it—

Et la vermille digitale
Image des feux du couchant.

But Sir Walter Scott, in his oft-quoted description of the Trosachs, where are assembled all the floral children of the mountain, makes the plant to be an emblem of Pride, perhaps from its towering height:—

Foxglove and nightshade, side by side,
Emblems of punishment and pride,
Grouped their dark hues with every stain
The weather-beaten crags retain.

In such a fairy-like spot as the Trosachs, we may fitly say farewell—or, rather, au revoir!—to the fairy foxgloves.

MUSIC.

THE BIRMINGHAM TRIENNIAL MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

The thirty-third of these great celebrations — the most important of all our provincial festivals—will begin on Tuesday next. Like the "three-choir" festivals of Hereford, Gloucester, and Worcester—with which, however, the Birmingham meetings have no association—these celebrations are given in furtherance of a benevolent object; in this case, aiding the funds of the Birmingham General Hospital, the others being for the benefit of the widows and orphans of the poorer clergy of the three dioceses. The amount of good effected by the Birmingham festivals may be judged from the fact of their having from the first occasion, in 1768, to the festival of 1876 inclusive, brought to the hospital the enormous sum of £108,852; which amount will, of course, be increased by the results of this year's festival. Large as is the sum just named, there is ample need of it, the great demands on the hospital increasing year by year with the growth of the town and its neighbourhood.

The musical importance of the festivals has long been of special renown, this having developed greatly with the accession of Sir Michael Costa as conductor, at the performance of 1849; the continuance of this eminent director having ensured the maintenance of their high character, and being again this year a guarantee thereof.

As on most previous occasions, new works will be produced, these being a setting, by Herr Max Bruch, of Schiller's "Lay of the Bell" as a cantata for solo voices, chorus, and orchestra; and another cantata, composed by M. Saint-Saëns, entitled "The Lyre and the Harp," both to be heard for the first time in England on this occasion, the last-named work having been specially composed for the festival.

The arrangements are on the usual grand and liberal scale, including the engagement of a first-rate orchestra of nearly 150 performers, with M. Sainton as principal first violin, and a chorus numbering about 360 voices.

The solo singers announced are Mesdames Gerster, Trebelli, Patey, and Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Anna Williams, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. V. Rigby, Mr. J. Maas, Mr. W. H. Cummings, Mr. Santley, and Herr Henschel. As hitherto, Mr. Stimpson, organist of the Townhall (where all the performances are given), will preside at the organ.

The opening performance on Tuesday morning will consist of "Elijah," and in the evening, besides the "Lay of the Bell," the programme will include a miscellaneous selection. On Wednesday morning Rossini's "Moses in Egypt" will be given, as adapted for oratorio performance and produced by the London Sacred Harmonic Society in May last year. The evening concert will consist of a miscellaneous selection, comprising Beethoven's symphony in A (No. 7), a concert-overture by Dr. Heap, and vocal pieces. On Thursday morning "The Messiah" will be performed, and the evening concert will include—besides M. Saint-Saëns's new cantata—a miscellaneous vocal and instrumental selection. The last of the morning performances, on Friday, will consist of Cherubini's "Requiem," a "Salve Regina" by Schubert, an offertorium ("Date Sonitum") by Sir M. Costa, and Mendelssohn's "Lobgesang" ("Hymn of Praise"); the festival closing in the evening with Handel's "Israel in Egypt."

A list of nearly a hundred vice-presidents is headed by the name of Lord Norton as president, and the business arrangements are such as to promise that efficiency in this respect which has long been as marked a feature of these festivals as their musical supremacy.

Messrs. Gatti's Promenade Concerts at Covent Garden Theatre are running a successful career. Monday's programme included the performance of Beethoven's second symphony (in D), in continuance of the promise to give the first eight of these works in regular weekly succession. The second classical night was given on Wednesday, when Mr. Santley was announced to appear, and the programme included Mendelssohn's Scotch symphony, Weber's overture to "Der Freischütz," and other interesting features.

M. Rivière's series of three weekly Promenade Concerts at the Crystal Palace began last Saturday evening, preceded by a public rehearsal in the afternoon. The programme comprised Gounod's incidental music to "Jeanne d'Arc," and a spirited patriotic march, composed by M. Rivière, dedicated to the heroes of Rorke's Drift, and entitled "Honour to the Brave." It is written for full orchestra, military band, organ, and a trio of female voices. The solo vocalists engaged at the concert were Misses Emma Thursby and Welmi, Madame Antoinette Sterling, Mrs. Weldon, and Signor Urio. The orchestra comprised about 150 instrumentalists, besides the band of the Royal Artillery; and the choral music was rendered by Mrs. Weldon's choir of 250 voices. M. Rivière conducted with his usual well-known ability. Similar concerts are to be given this (Saturday) evening, and on Saturday next.

We have several times spoken of the meritorious compositions of Heinrich Hofmann, and have now to notice several publications of his works issued by Messrs. Neumeyer and Co. These include a neat and inexpensive edition of the cantata entitled "The Legend of the Fair Melusine," the music of which produced a highly favourable impression when it was performed at St. James's Hall. Three very pleasing vocal quartets (Op. 8) are also issued by Messrs. Neumeyer, besides a set of highly characteristic pianoforte pieces entitled "From my Diary."

A series of songs by Filippo Troisi (published by Messrs. Stanley Lucas, Weber, and Co.) have all the suavity of melody of the Italian vocal style, and are especially suited for drawing-room use. The titles are "Lasciami piangere," "Ah! se tenessi la madre mia," "Quando cadran le foglie," "Mi son vestita tutta quanto a Bruno!" and "Ti scorderai di me." The same publishers have issued Mr. W. G. Cusins's spirited "Duchess of Connaught's March" in the form of a pianoforte duet, well arranged by E. J. Troup.

THEATRES.

We have already stated that it was intended that Mr. Howe, so long the leading actor of the Haymarket, should find a proper position at the Vaudeville. On Saturday Mr. Howe made his appearance in a new part prepared for him by Mr. Richard Lee, the author of "Ordeal by Touch." The piece provided for the occasion is called "Home for Home," and consists of a scene taken from the forenamed drama and worked up into an amusing farce. The part taken by Mr. Howe is that of the Rev. Otho Doxey, whose daughter, Miss Anne Doxey, is in love with Frank Bebonet, the nephew of Mrs. Ida Downe, the owner of an elegant villa, which she wishes to exchange for awhile with the residence of another. The reverend gentleman has a similar wish in relation to his own vicarage in town, which he desires to exchange for a villa in the country. In order to bring the lady and the parson together, the fond lover puts them into communication, and the reverend gentleman writes a letter to Mrs. Downe, the language of which she mistakes. It reads to her like an offer of marriage, proposing as it does to exchange "home for home." When, therefore, they meet, and the applicant interrogates her touching the villa, she applies the questions to herself. "Is her roof sound?—how much wine can she comfortably stow away?—how often she has a man to scrub her exterior?" are so many equivoques that puzzle and amaze her to such an excess that she becomes hysterical, and swoons in the doctor's arms. On her recovery, Doxey recognises her as an old flame, and their union is determined upon. Of course, under these circumstances, Miss Anne and Master Frank have no difficulty in securing their parents' consent for their own marriage. Mrs. Downe found an able representative in Miss Sophie Larkin, who, in reading the parson's letter, succeeded in giving an admirable comic interpretation of its contents. Nothing could be better than Mr. Howe's assumption of the mystified old cleric, and altogether the advent of the favourite Haymarket actor at this house has taken place under auspices of the most benign description. The Vaudeville company will be much strengthened by his accession to their ranks.

Kotzebue's play of "The Stranger" was represented at the Haymarket on Saturday, Mr. Barry Sullivan supporting the character of the moody hero. The audience was a tolerably large one, and fully appreciated the points made by the accomplished actor. He was called to the front at the conclusion of nearly every act. Miss Rose Eytinge as Mrs. Haller, however, was not equal to the part.

At the Lyceum, the musical drama of "Guy Mannering" was enacted at an afternoon performance. Miss Geneviève Ward essayed the rôle of Meg Merrilies, and proved that she has special qualifications for the successful impersonation of the character. Since the appearance of Charlotte Cushman in this wild and weird heroine, no actress has more strongly looked or acted the part. The general cast of the characters is also good, and the musical portions were well managed. As the audience was large and greatly applausive, the performance is likely to ensure popularity.

At the Surrey, Mr. and Mrs. Carden's engagement continues to be popular. They are still acting in the drama called "Proof," as Pierre Lorance and Madame Deprets. Mr. Carden manifests much pathos in the emotional scenes, and with unquestionable power. His acting in the convict's interview with his daughter exhibits both, and produced a great effect. Miss Marston Leigh, as the kind-hearted Madame Deprets, acts with all that grace and archness of movement and tenderness of feeling which distinguish the parts in which she appears that permit or require a sympathetic rendering.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

I have always thought that one of the surest ways to acquire real knowledge is to be repeatedly and shamelessly saying "I don't know," and "I don't quite understand." If you will only have the courage to admit so much, you will find plenty of well-informed and good natured people who will tell you the things which you do not know, and explain those which hitherto you have been unable to understand. But if we go about declaring that we do know, and that we perfectly understand matters which are really quite dark to us, how are we to add to our stock of knowledge? For example, I was puzzled a week or two since to discover how Lady Margaret Macdonald (not Flora Macdonald, as a correspondent from Brockhampton, Ross, N.B., puts it) could have been at once the great-grandmother and the godmother of the late Miss Sinclair. My correspondent points out that the occurrence is quite a natural one; and adduces the recent case of the baptism of a great-grandmother of her Majesty the Queen when the four great-grandmothers of the Royal infant were its godmothers.

My genealogical bewilderment in the Sinclair case is resolved by an anonymous correspondent, who explains that Lady Margaret Macdonald was a daughter of the Earl of Eglinton, and married Sir Alexander Macdonald of Sleat. It was to this lady that Flora Macdonald appealed for help when she landed with Prince Charles Edward in Skye. It was she who got Macdonald of Kingsburgh to convey Flora and her protégé to Kingsburgh, from which place the Prince got away to Rasay, and so back to the mainland. Lady Margaret was a Jacobite, but her husband was a Whig. If the late Miss Sinclair was a daughter of Sir John Sinclair of Ulbster, and his wife, Diana, the daughter of Alexander Lord Macdonald, a son of Sir Alexander and Lady Margaret Macdonald, she was, consequently, that lady's great-granddaughter.

Mem: How strangely ancestry lags sometimes, and in other cases how swift it is! The great-grandfather of her Majesty the Queen was born one hundred and fifty years ago, whereas there are alive the great-grandchildren of Douglas Jerrold, who died only twenty-two years since. The son of Percy Bysshe Shelley and the great-grandson of Charles Dibdin (Shelley and Dibdin died within seven years of each other) are alive. George Cruikshank's grandfather was at the Battle of Culloden; whereas I can remember having seen the great-grandfather of the present Duke of Newcastle.

"Atlas," in the World, sharply criticising the French of the menu of the recent Ministerial banquet at Greenwich, observes that "Mirobolant himself might have puzzled his head over an 'omelette de crabe à la Blue Seal.' Did the chef of the Ship 'make himself strong' in fancying that he was paying a delicate compliment to the Lord Chancellor? If so, why not describe his crab as 'à la grande phoque?' Or, if he preferred it, 'au grand sceau?'" As a matter of fact, the proper name for a seal is veau marin. Touching the "omelette de crabe à la blue seal," I fancy that I have already explained in this column the meaning of the Greenwich specialty in question. It has nothing whatever to do with the Lord Chancellor, nor with the phoca vitulina. The "blue seal" refers to a particular brand of champagne much affected by a club of gentlemen for whose delectation the crab omelette (dis karabe, thanatos) was originally prepared.

And—O, dear me!—my "Atlas," how could you think of proposing that Sir Percy Bysshe Shelley's new theatre at Chelsea should be opened with the first public representation on any stage of his illustrious father's play, The Cenci, "which (I quote 'Atlas' textually) was written for the stage, and is undoubtedly the finest English tragedy since the days of Kit Marlowe and Shakspeare." Kit Marlowe and Shakspeare. Humph! "Marlowe of the Mighty Line" was undoubtedly a great writer, and his "Jew of Malta" is a very fine tragedy; still, his Jew is not "the Jew that Shakspeare drew." Assuredly, The Cenci is a magnificent tragedy; but les bienséances, "Atlas," les bienséances! I should like to "cast" the play. Count Cenci, Mr. Coghlan; Orsino, Mr. Hermann Vezin; Giacomo, Mr. Charles Warner; Bernardo, Miss Roland Phillips; Marzio and Olympio, Messrs. Henry Neville and Forbes Robertson; Beatrice Cenci, Miss Ellen Terry (Mdlle. Sarah Bernhardt would play Beatrice magnificently could she speak English); and Lucretia, Miss Geneviève Ward. The Lord Chamberlain could scarcely license the public performance of The Cenci; but why should it not be privately played "for one occasion only"? Tickets from two to five guineas each, and the proceeds to be presented to that useful institution the Society for the Suppression of Vice.

Miss Ward has been playing recently at the Lyceum the heroine in another tragedy, of which the plot is almost as terrible as that of The Cenci. I mean Victor Hugo's drama of Lucrezia Borgia, an English version of which gave Miss Ward the opportunity of displaying all her powers of passion and pathos. She has also made a wonderfully strong impression as Meg Merrilies in Guy Mannering. It is vexatious to note that the drama on the success of which this accomplished and indefatigable lady had built her hopes turned out a dismal failure. Rarely has there been produced so rubbishing a melodrama as "Zillah;" although Miss Ward did her very best with an extremely difficult dual part. I hope that she will make a better venture with the new romantic drama of "Forget-me-not," by Messrs. Grove and H. Merivale, which will be played for the first time while these lines are at press.

Re the "Hundred Greatest Men." "How could you possibly omit from your list of great men two of the very greatest who ever lived—John Sobieski and Samuel Johnson?" Thus writes to me, on a post-card, "N. C." "Surely," writes, on another post-card, "F. M.," "you have not intentionally overlooked Handel, Beethoven, and Mendelssohn; and are not Confucius and Mahomet entitled to a place?" May difference of opinion never alter friendship. I intentionally omitted Mahomet. I do not consider a False Prophet and an impudent impostor to be one of the world's greatest men. I did not give a place to Confucius because I really know nothing whatever about him. I gave a place to Mozart; but had I mentioned Handel, Beethoven and Mendelssohn as well, the proportion of musicians would have been too great; nor could I conscientiously have omitted Haydn, Rossini, and Chopin. Dr. Samuel Johnson was a great writer and a good man; but had I inserted his name in my list I must have admitted Ben Jonson (a greater writer and as good and noble a man), John Dryden, and Alexander Pope. Another correspondent asks why I have preferred Clarkson to Wilberforce. Thomas Clarkson (aided by Granville Sharpe) began the agitation for the abolition of the Slave Trade. William Wilberforce was a later helper.

Mem.: Pascal's name was inadvertently inserted twice in my catalogue. Thus there is one vacancy. What do you say to Euclid as a candidate for the empty niche? Next week I shall endeavour to excogitate a list of the Hundred Greatest Women that the world has seen. How the reproachful post-cards will rain down, to be sure, when that list is published!

But that my esteemed correspondent "P. W. P. T." (Plympton) is a Major-General in the Army, I should think he was "making fun" of a poor bookworm in forwarding to him a request from a young lady for the derivation of "He can't say Bo! to a goose." Here is the derivation from Dr. Cobham Brewer's "Dictionary of Phrase and Fable" (London: Cassell, Petter, and Galpin).

'Bo or Boh in old Runic was a fierce Gothic captain, son of Odin. His name was used by his soldiers when they would fight or surprise the enemy. From this name comes our "bogie," a hobgoblin or little Bo. Gifford Castle is called Bo Hall, being said to have been constructed by magic. You cannot say Bo! to a goose—i.e., you are a coward who dare not say Bo! even to a fool. When Ben Jonson was introduced to a certain nobleman the peer was so struck by the homely appearance of the poet, that he exclaimed, "What! are you Ben Jonson? Why you look as if you could not say Bo! to a goose." "Bo!" quoth Ben, making a low bow. How about Bo Peep, Dr. Brewer?

I very gratefully acknowledge receipt of the following donations for the relief of Mr. J. B. Buckstone, in addition to the sum of £102 15s. 6d. received up to last Wednesday, at 46, Mecklenburgh-square, W.C. Collected by H. Pechell, Esq., Marcsfield Park, £1 10s.; the Hon. Ralph Dutton, £1; Messrs. P. and S. Beyfus, £5 5s.; J. Challinor, £1; J. Linderay, £1 1s.; "A Constant Reader," £2 2s.; J. Ferguson, £1; Miss E. Hodgson, £2 2s.; J. A. Smith, £1; Lieut.-Col. Kirk, £3; "Four Sisters," 8s.; J. S. Heslop, £2 2s.; W. Stone, £1 1s.; J. N. £1; W. M., 5s.; the Misses Fergusson, £1 11s. 6d.; J. R. S., £1; J. H. B., £3; K. T., £1; Miss E. D. M., £5; the Right Hon. the Earl of Durham, £5. Total, £40 7s. 6d. I have thus received altogether, £143 3s. I have handed £20 to Mrs. Buckstone for present needs; and the balance lies at the bankers, to be drawn upon as occasion shall demand. I may add that the benefits at the Haymarket Theatre produced nothing save a considerable pecuniary loss to the lessee, Mr. J. S. Clarke, who has behaved with noble generosity towards Mr. Buckstone. The last-named poor gentleman is in a very distressing state. He has had a fresh paralytic stroke, and is extremely feeble; but he is fully conscious of the kindness of the charitable ladies and gentlemen who have responded to this appeal.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that on the last day of the first week in August the total number of paupers was 77,446, of whom 41,113 were in workhouses and 36,333 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks of 1878, 1877, and 1876, these figures show an increase of 1519, 586, and 703 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 630, of whom 429 were men, 167 women, and 34 children under sixteen.

On Tuesday the ceremony of opening a drinking-fountain and gardens in the parish of St. Pancras took place. The vestry of St. Pancras, after some dispute with the Marquis of Camden, have succeeded in retaining as an open space a triangular plot of ground lying between the King's-road and Great College-street at the junction forming the eastern entrance to Kentish Town. This has been laid out as a neat garden, and at the apex of the triangle a site has been set apart on which a fountain has been erected at the joint expense of the widow and friends of the late Mr. Joseph Salter, a recent churchwarden and member of the vestry and guardians board of St. Pancras. The ceremony was witnessed by Mrs. Salter (who was accompanied by her twelve children) and a large number of the local authorities and friends of Mr. Salter. Mr. F. H. Bridgeman, on the part of the memorial committee (of which Mr. T. E. Gibb, the vestry clerk, was hon. secretary), and Mr. Dixon, on the part of neighbours and friends, presented silver souvenirs of the event. Mr. Coleing thanked the company on behalf of Mrs. Salter; Mr. Gibb explained the circumstances under which the memorial had been raised; and Mr. Lee, secretary of the Metropolitan Drinking-Fountains Association, complimented St. Pancras on the support it had given to their efforts.

At the sitting of the Conference on International Law Reform, on Thursday, the 14th inst., papers were read on the International Law of Affreightment, the Operations of the Hanseatic League in England, International Rules of Quarantine, International Weights and Measures, and Bankruptcy Law from an International Point of View; and the various subjects were referred to committees for consideration and report. Amongst the subjects dealt with yesterday week were the International Reduction of Armaments, International Conventions for the Maintenance of Sea Lights, and Bi-metallic Money of gold and silver with a fixed value in various countries. A resolution was adopted in favour of co-operation between Governments with respect to sea lights, and the other subjects were referred to a committee. With reference to International Weights and Measures, a report was read from the committee which favoured the adoption of a decimal system in all countries. The closing sitting was held last Saturday, when Sir Travers Twiss, the President, gave an address congratulating the members on the progress made in advancing the objects of the Association. A series of resolutions affirming that patents of inventions should be the subject of a special and complete law in each country, and pointing to the most material considerations which should be borne in mind in framing such a law, was adopted. The next conference will be held in Dublin.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT.

The familiar ceremony observed at St. Stephen's on the 15th inst. lent some dignity to the closing scenes of the sixth Session of the present Parliament. Ere "Black Rod" had marched with due state and deliberation to the Lower House, however, and had invited the Speaker and her Majesty's faithful Commons to the House of Lords, the Chancellor of the Exchequer had to undergo some final questioning. Evasion, rather than direct reply, appeared to be the order of the day with the Leader of the House. On no other grounds could be explained Sir Stafford Northcote's misunderstanding of Sir Henry Havelock's plain question. The query ran as to what "mark of favour" would be extended to Mr. Archibald Forbes "in recognition of the public services performed by him in being the bearer of the despatches of the successful action at Ulundi, under circumstances of considerable personal hazard, fatigue, and endurance." But the Chancellor of the Exchequer chose to construe these services as having been performed by Mr. Forbes in accordance with his duty as the Correspondent of the Daily News—and did not budge from this position though put right by Sir Henry Havelock. Albeit a collision between the Turkish and the Greek troops appeared imminent, Sir Stafford Northcote informed Mr. Shaw Lefevre that her Majesty's Government had not addressed either Government on the matter. A few other questions having been answered, Sir William Knollys, as the courtly Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, prevailed upon the House to hie to the bar of the Upper Chamber, there to hear the Royal assent given in quaint old French to the last measures of the Session. Garbed in their brilliant official robes, her Majesty's Commissioners were the Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Northumberland, Earl Beauchamp, the Earl of Hardwicke, and Lord Skelmersdale. With habitual clearness the Lord Chancellor read

THE QUEEN'S SPEECH.

MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,—

I am happy to be able to relieve you from your laborious duties.

My relations with other Powers continue to be cordial, and my influence with them will be employed in maintaining the obligations imposed by Treaties, and in promoting and consolidating the general peace.

The territorial arrangements stipulated in the Treaty of Berlin have been faithfully executed, and the delimitation of the new frontiers is nearly completed. The Balkan Peninsula has been evacuated by the Russian army in accordance with the treaty. Under the unanimous sanction of the Signatory Powers, suitable provision has been made for the government of the Ottoman Province of Eastern Roumelia, and I have with great satisfaction given my approval to the election of Prince Alexander of Battenberg as Prince of Bulgaria.

The calamities inflicted by the late war have hitherto precluded the adoption of those reforms by the Ottoman Government of which it has acknowledged the necessity; but I have urged, and shall continue to urge, the importance of a timely compliance with its engagements in this respect.

At the suggestion of my Government, in conjunction with that of France, a change has taken place in the Viceroyalty of Egypt, which the past misgovernment of that country had rendered necessary.

The treaty concluded with the Ameer of Afghanistan, which has been laid before you, has happily terminated the war which his predecessor compelled me to undertake. By it my friendly relations with that State are re-established, guarantees for its peace and safety given, and the frontiers of India strengthened.

The ability displayed in this war by those in command of my troops, British and Native, and the gallantry and endurance of the troops themselves, well deserved the thanks bestowed upon them by both Houses of Parliament. My acknowledgments are especially due to the many native Princes who made offers of assistance, as well as to those whose forces were actually brought into the field, and I recognise in such zealous co-operation their attachment and goodwill to my Indian Empire.

Since I last addressed you my forces have been engaged in a serious conflict with the most powerful native ruler in South Africa. While I have pleasure in thanking them for vindicating the honour of the British arms, I must mourn over the sacrifice of many a precious life. I trust that the decisive success which has recently attended their operations will lead to the early establishment of peace on an enduring basis, and that my subjects in that part of the world, being thus relieved from the danger to which they have hitherto been exposed, may readily join in such arrangements as may best secure their safety and prosperity in the future.

GENTLEMEN OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS,—

I thank you for the liberal supplies which you have voted for the public service.

MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,—

By the Army Discipline Act you have for the first time placed upon the Statute Book in a complete Code the Laws relating to service in my Army and my other Military Forces. You have arranged in a clear and comprehensive form the provisions for the due maintenance of discipline; you have improved the system under which Enlistment takes place; and you have amended the Regulations under which the Reserves can be recalled to the colours.

The Acts providing for the appointment of a Public Prosecutor and Amending the Law relating to the Summary Jurisdiction of Magistrates will, I trust, greatly improve the administration of the Criminal Law.

The alterations which you have made in the law relating to Banking and Joint-Stock Companies are well calculated to conduce to the prosperity of this important portion of our mercantile and commercial system.

The depressed condition of the Agricultural Interest has naturally engaged your attention, and I have had much pleasure in complying with the Address of the House of Commons requesting me to appoint a Commission to inquire into the causes to which the depression is owing, and how far they can be remedied by legislation.

I observe with satisfaction that you have been able to consider the important subject of Education in Ireland, and that you have agreed to measures which will form a fitting supplement to the enactment of last Session as to Intermediate Education. The primary education of the country cannot but be stimulated by the careful provision you have made for improving the position of the teachers, and the Bill you have passed for University Education will, I trust, supply what is needed for the advancement of learning in its higher branches.

In bidding you farewell, I pray that the blessing of Providence may rest on the labours with which you have been occupied during the Session.

The Lord Chancellor then prorogued Parliament till Nov. 1 next. The Speaker returned to the Lower House, and read her Majesty's Message to the hon. and right hon. members present, cordially shaking hands with each ere they separated.

The number of divisions taken in the House of Commons during the past Session amounted to 237; the first being on the Report of the Address on the Queen's Speech, and the last on the National School Teachers (Ireland) Bill, which occurred in the early morning of Aug. 13. The greatest number of divisions in connection with any one subject occurred on the Army Discipline and Regulation Bill, which gave rise to 61 divisions. Two of these were on the question that the chairman do leave the chair, and five on the motion to report progress. Fifty-seven divisions were taken in Committee or on going into Committee of Supply. Questions connected with the business of the House gave rise to 12 divisions, the Irish University Education Bill to 11 divisions, and the Public Works Loans Bill to 10 divisions.

Mr. Grissell, who was on Thursday evening, Aug. 14, committed to Newgate for evading the Speaker's warrant to appear at the bar of the House of Commons for breach of privilege, was released the next day, a few minutes before the Prorogation of Parliament.

POLITICAL.

A meeting of the Liberal Three Hundred of Birkenhead was held on Monday night, when the candidature of Mr. Arthur Williams, of London, barrister, was unanimously accepted.

Mr. Fenwick Bisset has been selected as the Conservative candidate for West Somerset, in conjunction with Major Vaughan Lee; and Mr. Charles Thomas Dyke Acland, eldest son of Sir T. D. Acland, M.P. for North Devon, has issued his address as the Liberal candidate.

Mr. J. Hinde Palmer, Q.C., has acceded to a request conveyed to him by the Liberal Two Hundred of Lincoln to contest the representation of that city at the dissolution.

Mr. J. G. Maynes, of Goodre-street, Reading, has been accepted as the colleague of Mr. Percy Mitford, to contest Macclesfield at the next election in the Conservative interest.

Colonel Tomline has accepted an invitation to become the Liberal candidate for Harwich at the next general election.

Mr. Crampton Roberts, of Wryburg, has been selected as the Conservative candidate for Monmouthshire.

Captain Otway has come forward as an independent candidate in the Liberal interest for the Radnor boroughs. Mr. Haigh, who opposed Lord Hartington in 1868, will also come forward as an independent candidate.

Sir George Macpherson Grant, of Ballindalloch, is officially announced as the Liberal candidate for the counties of Elgin and Nairn. On Tuesday he addressed a large meeting of electors at Forres. He said the election was to be fought mainly on the ground of the foreign policy of the Government. He contended that that policy had been a failure throughout, and until they had a settled Government and peace at home he defied trade to recover, because trade could not prosper without perfect confidence. Mr. Brodie, of Brodie, has agreed to come forward in the Conservative interest.

Mr. Thomas Quinn has consented to become a Home-Rule candidate for County Wexford in the room of Sir G. Bowyer, who, it is said, is not to be brought forward for re-election.

Lord Northbrook, in addressing a meeting of Liberals at Falmouth yesterday week, made a sweeping attack upon the foreign policy of the Government. Whilst admitting that some of the chief clauses in the Berlin Treaty had been carried into effect, he asserted that the Anglo-Turkish Convention and the Afghan war had been prompted by excessive timidity on the part of the English Government. As to the Zulu war, he was ashamed of its origin, and he could only draw from it any satisfaction in the promise that there should be no annexation of Zulu territory.

Mr. Mundella, on Monday night addressed a crowded meeting of his constituents in Paradise-square, Sheffield, the Mayor presiding. Attacking the Government, on the ground of its policy, both home and foreign, he said that the time would soon come when the electors would have to decide what should be the character of their representatives, and whether the present Parliament, with all its extravagance, its folly, and he would say, its wickedness, or whether the work of the previous Parliament, consolidating the interests of the English people, elevating their character, improving their intelligence and increasing their prosperity, should be the object of the members for Sheffield.

At a Liberal meeting held at Oldham on Monday a resolution was carried, on the proposition of Mr. J. Slagg, one of the Liberal candidates for Manchester, thanking those members of the Opposition who had firmly and persistently resisted the extravagance of the Government and their encroachments on the controlling powers and the liberties of the House of Commons.

Mr. Gladstone was present on Tuesday night at a Liberal meeting in Chester, the principal object of which was to hear a statement of the political views of the Hon. Beilby Lawley, who is to contest the representation of the city at the next general election in conjunction with Mr. Dodson. After speeches from Mr. Lawley and Mr. Dodson, both of whom were well received, Mr. Gladstone addressed the meeting. He cordially recommended Mr. Lawley to the constituency, and reviewed at considerable length the policy of the Government dwelling chiefly upon its failure to repress Russian ambition and aggrandisement. The peace of Berlin left Russia more powerful than ever, and enabled her to assume the position in the East which we had long claimed for ourselves. He deprecated the South African war as cruel, wanton, and unnecessary; ridiculed the notion of retaining Cyprus as a menace to Russia, or even as a check upon her ambition; and, in conclusion, he touched upon the question of a speedy dissolution. He professed to be indifferent as to the precise moment at which this came; but said the Liberal party could force it on by bringing their candidates prominently forward. He advised union, and a persistent attack upon the strongholds of the Conservatives, such as he himself was contemplating in Midlothian, on the ground that a Liberal victory under such circumstances would have an important effect throughout the land.

Sir Charles Dilke and Mr. Frith, his Liberal colleague in the candidature for the representation of Chelsea, addressed a great meeting on Tuesday night in the vestry-hall. Sir C. Dilke criticised the foreign policy of the Government, and, in reviewing the events of the Session, remarked that almost all legislation had been put aside for the sake of the military code, which had been rightly obstructed through the determination of the Ministers to retain the punishment of flogging.

A meeting convened by the Lambeth Liberal Association was held on Tuesday evening at the Horns Tavern, Kennington, when the two borough members, Sir J. C. Lawrence and Mr. Alderman M'Arthur, defended themselves from the aspersions which had been cast upon their political conduct by a section of the Liberal party in the borough. A long discussion ensued, but no resolution was submitted to the meeting.

A meeting of the Newcastle-on-Tyne Science-and-Art Schools Committee and deputations from the Liberal clubs on Tyneside has been held to make arrangements for the visit of the Marquis of Hartington to Newcastle next month. The opening of the new schools was fixed for Tuesday, Sept. 16, when his Lordship will give an opening address, and in the evening distribute the prizes. On the following day he will open the new Junior Liberal Club. At night there will be a Liberal demonstration, at which his Lordship will be present, the Earl of Durham presiding. Mr. Cowen, M.P., and other members are expected to take part in the proceedings. It is believed that the Tynemouth Liberals will invite Lord Hartington to a banquet on the third day, when Mr. G. O. Trevelyan will be present.

The caravan which every year after the Ramazan leaves Damascus for Mecca is composed this year only of from 6000 to 8000. It is always accompanied by Turkish troops for the maintenance of order. This year, however, as some revolted tribes of Northern Arabia have occupied the route to Medina and Mecca, the caravan is accompanied by two battalions, with a number of cannon.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

There is, perhaps, no duller time in the racing season than the short interregnum between the Sussex fortnight and the York Meeting, and, as usual, we have very little to record. On the second day at Egham last week Mr. R. Ten Broeck, who is taking a second innings in England, won the Runnymede Plate with Saratoga, a filly with a genuine American pedigree. Master Kildare and Herald met again in the Egham Cup, and this time the weights were so much in favour of the former that, though he was very fractious at the post, and bolted half way up the course before the flag fell, he ran right away from Sir William Throckmorton's old horse. Mr. Raine won a couple of events, and Greaves, who is now the crack light-weight of the day, rode two winners.

The course was in beautiful order at Windsor, and the weather all that could be wished, but the sport was only of a moderate character. The fine performance of Early Morn at Brighton caused him to be made a very hot favourite for the Park Stakes; indeed, slight odds were laid on him, even in the face of eight opponents. He could probably have been second, but proved quite unequal to the task of conceding 10 lb. to Valentino, who, for the first time, was in the humour to do his best, and proved that there were good grounds for the reputation he enjoyed prior to his début at Ascot, where Lancaster Bowman cut him down so easily. On the Friday The Song, who seems fast recovering her early form, had little difficulty in taking the Clewer Stakes; and Dominica won the Windsor August Handicap for Mr. Gretton. The latter is by Nuneham, a son of Oxford, who is gradually making his mark at the stud. The Redcar Meeting was as pleasant as ever, and commanded plenty of aristocratic patronage; yet, though large fields contested almost every event, only one race possessed more than passing interest. This was the Second Kirkleatham Biennial, in which Robbie Burns was opposed by Reconciliation, Coromandel II., and two others. He won easily enough at the finish; still, as he had a decided pull in the weights, and was a long time in settling the roaring Reconciliation, as much as 40 to 1 was laid against him for the Leger after the race. Paisley was a sort of holiday gathering, but Lord Rosebery sent Kineton all the way to the north to secure the Silver Bells, which he succeeded in doing.

Owing to the price of admission to the course having been raised, the general attendance at Stockton on Tuesday was smaller than usual; but the stands were well filled, a great many south-country sportsmen being present. The meeting of Robbie Burns and Mycenæ in the Zetland Biennial created great interest, and as the latter received 15 lb. from the Redcar winner, and, moreover, was ridden by Archer, he started a strong favourite. Robbie Burns, however, caught him at the stand, and won so easily that 25 to 1 became the best offer against him for the great race of next month. The Stockton Tradesmens' Handicap fell to the top weight, Roehampton (8 st. 10 lb.), and Tuscarora, a filly by Paul Jones—Vagary, beat Bonnie Marden and three others for the Cleveland Stakes. The Sutton Park and Dover Meetings call for no remark.

The Royal Albert Yacht Club Regatta began on Monday at Southsea, when a cup of the value of £100 fell to the almost invincible Arrow. On Tuesday there were two races, the first being for yawls of forty-five tons and upwards. The Latona, the Surf, and the Florinda started, and the first-named beat the Florinda pretty easily, the Surf retiring from the race after sailing one round of the course. A prize for cutters of twenty tons also produced three competitors, and was won by the Sayonara.

The splendid weather of last week was productive of some grand scores in the cricket-field, and, generally, the bat gained a complete mastery over the ball. Middlesex v. Gloucestershire produced such a grand exhibition of batting that we give the score in full:—

It would have been very interesting to have seen such a match as this played out, for Dr. Grace was batting splendidly when the stumps were drawn, and Middlesex would probably have have had to get between 150 and 200 to win. Surrey has beaten Kent in a single innings, with one run to spare. For the losers Mr. Mackinnon (26 and 66) did best; while the highest contributors to the Surrey total of 281 were Messrs. L. A. Shuter (65) and J. Shuter (45), Humphrey (57), and Pooley (not out, 37); while we must not omit to mention that, in the second innings of Kent, Blamires took eight wickets for 77 runs, and caught another man off Southerton's bowling. Lancashire v. Notts ended in a draw at a very interesting stage of the game. Messrs. Hornby (45), D. Q. Steel (41), and Scotton (51 and 45), did most with the bat on their respective sides. Leicestershire, for which Messrs. Wheeler (13) and Wright (49) headed the poll, has made a frightful exhibition of Northamptonshire; and Notts has beaten Derbyshire by an innings and 15 runs. Morley and Shaw, as usual, bowled unchanged throughout the two innings of the Derby team, and the former secured fourteen wickets for only 47 runs—a truly remarkable performance.

A successful lawn tennis tournament for Dorset took place on Friday and Saturday last week, the weather on each day being magnificent, and there being a numerous assemblage of players and spectators, on the Kingston Park cricket-ground, near Dorchester. Some capital play was made by both ladies and gentlemen.

The members of the Grand Western Archery Society concluded on Friday their seventeenth annual three-days' meeting on the grounds of Mrs. Parsons, Bitton, Teignmouth, the previous meeting having taken place at Weymouth, in the adjoining county of Dorset. Nearly £120, besides local prizes, was competed for, there being ninety entries in the several classes, and the leading clubs of the western counties represented. Mrs. Butt scored 212 at sixty yards, Mr. Rimington 171 at one hundred yards and 325 at eighty yards. The prizes were distributed by the Lady Paramount (Mrs. Parsons) on Friday evening, at the ball held at the East and South Devon Club Room.—The Anglesea Archers, who meet in Stalbridge Park, Dorset, have elected as their president for the year the Hon. E. H. T. Digby, M.P. for the county, Mrs. H. Medlycott being the lady patroness. At their first bow meeting the highest lady scorer at sixty yards was Miss G. Fox, who made 220. Miss Kate Ainslie made the greatest number of hits—44—at sixty yards. Mrs. Dodington made the best gold. Miss Phelips took the Visitors' Prize. On the gentlemen's side the highest scorer at sixty yards was Mr. H. P. Okeden—227. Mr. H. Medlycott made the greatest number of hits at sixty yards—45. Mr. E. P. Okeden made the best gold. The Visitors' Prize for the second best score was secured by Mr. Grant Dalton, who ran up 121.

THE LATE MR. A. KEITH JOHNSTON, F.R.G.S.

The death of this gentleman, while engaged in conducting the East African expedition of the Royal Geographical Society from the seacoast to Lake Nyassa, has been the occasion of sincere regret. He was in the thirty-fifth year of his age, having been born, at Edinburgh, on Nov. 24, 1844. He was a son of the late Mr. Alexander Keith Johnston, who, with his brother, Sir William Keith Johnston, founded the well-known firm of geographical engravers and publishers, established in Edinburgh and in London. The deceased was an accomplished geographical draughtsman and student of the science, having pursued its study not only here but in Germany, under Dr. A. Petermann, in the establishment of Justus Perthes at Leipsic. In 1874 he went out to Paraguay upon an exploring expedition, of which he gave an account to the Royal Geographical Society. Besides frequent contributions to the "Geographical Magazine," he wrote the article upon "Africa" for the new edition of Black's "Encyclopædia Britannica," and edited, with considerable additions, the volume devoted to "Africa," based upon Hellwald's German work, in Stanford's "Compendium of Geography and Travel." He also designed and executed maps of Africa and part of South America, and edited several of the minor atlases published by Messrs. W. and A. Keith Johnston. The expedition of which he was appointed leader, and which left England towards the end of last year, was intended to complete the exploring work of Mr. E. D. Young and of Captain Frederic Elton, in finding the best routes of travel between the Indian Ocean and the Nyassa, examining the mountainous country north-east of that lake, and afterwards proceeding north-west to Lake Tanganyika. Mr. Keith Johnston was accompanied by Mr. Joseph Thomson, a young geologist, highly recommended by Professor Geikie. They arrived at Zanzibar, in January last, and there met Dr. Kirk, the British Consul, and Mr. H. M. Stanley, who gave them a friendly welcome to the field of African exploration. In April, having completed his preparations at Zanzibar, Mr. Keith Johnston took his party, accompanied by Dr. Kirk, over to the mainland at Dar-es-Salaam, an Arab port belonging to Zanzibar on the African coast, about 280 miles north-east of the upper end of Lake Nyassa. He wrote from that place on May 17, stating his intention of proceeding by a different route from that by Kola, on the Mackinnon-Buxton road, as he was apprehensive of a scarcity of food in the Uzaramo country. He accordingly took his course southward to Berobero, a populous village in Khutu, 130 or 140 miles from Dar-es-Salaam, and not far from the Ruaba, one of the two rivers which unite to form the Rufiji. On the march to Berobero he was attacked by dysentery, and there he died, on June 28, to the sorrow of many personal friends and to the loss of geographical science, which might have profited much by his services in future years.

The portrait is from a photograph by Mr. C. Henwood, of West-place, Turnham-green.

A sea defence promenade at East Cliffe, Dover, which has cost £9000, has been accepted as complete by the Corporation.

A new market at Burslem, erected at a cost of £23,000, was opened on the 14th inst., and at a luncheon afterwards a portrait of the Mayor was presented. Mr. Heath, M.P., presided.

An excellent exhibition of live stock was held yesterday week in connection with the Worsley and Swinton Agricultural Society. The number of entries was 1138.

Mr. H. J. Robinson, son of the late Mr. Dixon Robinson, has been elected Coroner for the Hundred of Blackburn, in the stead of Henry Unsworth Hargreaves, resigned.

Colonel J. Owen, commanding the Royal Pembroke Artillery Militia, has given a scholarship of £10 10s. to the Oxford Military College, to be awarded at the next examination to the most deserving student in the junior division.

The Hon. G. M. Bennet, who, on the death of his elder brother, Lord Ossulston, is now the heir of the earldom of Tankerville, will assume the title of Lord Bennet, and not that of Lord Ossulston.

Mr. J. B. Jackson, senior partner in the firm of Messrs. Spear and Jackson, Etna Works, Sheffield, has been appointed Master Cutler. The Cutlers' Feast takes place on the first Saturday in September.

A fourth body of colliers, with their families, left Barnsley on Tuesday night for New Zealand. A Government agent has selected fifty from the coal-fields of South Yorkshire, and these, with colliers from Derbyshire, Durham, and Cannock Chase, and their families, numbering probably 200, embark at Plymouth at the close of this week.

Intelligence has been received at New York of the arrival of the Polar exploring vessel Jeannette at Onalask on the 2nd inst. According to the report of the captain of the United States revenue vessel Richard Rush, that vessel passed through Behring's Straits within seventy-five miles of East Cape, when the sea to the northward of that point was clear of ice. Last winter had, he states, been unusually warm, and the ice broke up earlier than ordinarily.

A new Soldiers' Home and Institute at Colchester, erected at a cost of £5000, towards which Miss Daniels, the soldiers' friend, is a munificent contributor, was formally opened last Saturday. The building includes bagatelle and billiard rooms, reading-room, a large bar, numerous bed-rooms, a bath-room, and a spacious lecture-hall, the whole fitted up in almost luxurious style. At the public meeting on the occasion, addresses upon the advantages of these institutions were delivered by Captain Owen Hay, R.A., and Captain Graves, of the 20th Hussars.

At a meeting of the Belfast Chamber of Commerce held yesterday week arrangements were announced for the meeting of the Association of Chambers of Commerce of the United Kingdom, to be held in Belfast on the 26th, 27th, 28th, and 29th inst. The Mayor will entertain the delegates at luncheon in the Townhall on Tuesday; the president of the Belfast Chamber of Commerce will entertain them at dinner on Wednesday; on Thursday there will be an excursion to the Giant's Causeway; and on Friday various manufactories and institutions in Belfast and neighbourhood will be visited.

OFFICERS KILLED IN THE ZULU WAR.

The portraits of two more officers of our Army who have lost their lives in the Zulu war appear in this Number of our Journal.

Lieutenant James Henry Scott Douglas, of the 21st Regiment (the Royal Scots Fusiliers) was eldest son of Sir George Scott Douglas, Bart., of Springwood Park, Kelso, M.P. for Roxburghshire. He was twenty-six years of age, and received his commission as Lieutenant in November, 1875. In his own neighbourhood he was much esteemed, and not less so in the regiment. While at home, cultivating his taste for historical, literary, and scientific studies, he occasionally lectured for the Kelso Institution at the Townhall. The subject of a lecture which he delivered last winter in that place was "The Beginnings of European Commerce." Upon some occasions in London also he made a successful appearance as a public speaker. He went out to South Africa with his regiment in the spring of this year. His scientific attainments were soon recognised by his superiors in command, and he was appointed field telegraphist to General Newdigate's division, with which were the head-quarters of Lord Chelmsford. Within a few days of the battle of Ulundi, while employed in this special service, Lieutenant Scott Douglas, with Corporal Cotter, of the 17th Lancers, were missing. They may have lost their way, and some party of Zulus may have attacked them, in the same manner as what befell the Prince Imperial. On July 9, when Lord Chelmsford with a column of the troops, was moving back from Ulundi, the dead bodies of Lieutenant Scott Douglas and the Corporal of Lancers were found at Kwanagwasa. They were properly buried on the spot next day.

Lieutenant George Rowley John Evelyn, of the 3rd (East Kent) Buffs, died of fever at the Fort of Ekowe, on March 30, being one of the garrison under Colonel Pearson, there shut up and beleaguered during two months by the enemy, till the advance of Lord Chelmsford and the battle of Gingihlovo brought relief. This promising young officer was but twenty-one years of age, and entered the service, as Second Lieutenant, in November, 1877. He was a son of Colonel G. P. Evelyn, of Hartley Manor, Dartford.

The portrait of Lieutenant Scott Douglas is from a photograph by Mr. Mackintosh, of Kelso, and that of Lieutenant Evelyn from one by Messrs. W. and D. Downey, of Ebury-street, and of Newcastle-on-Tyne.

BIOGRAPHICAL WORKS.

One of the most attractive and entertaining books ever published is the Life of Charles James Mathews, edited by Charles Dickens (Macmillan and Co.), consisting of two volumes, in which the editor, with commendable taste and judgment, has obtruded his own personality as little as possible, constructing his fabric, as far as he could, solely of autobiographical matter. The late Charles Mathews, better known by these two names than by the three of the editor's title, had the rare advantage of being both a modern and an ancient, famous as an actor in the youthful days of present grandfathers and famous as an actor only yesterday. In this respect, however, he might be matched perhaps by Mr. Buckstone, Mr. Compton, and others; but he was associated all his life with personages and occurrences which invested his career with a sort of romance and made him an object of public interest independently of the professional position he achieved by his extraordinary talents. He was for a long while regarded as an incorrigible scapegrace; and that character alone, in such a world as ours, is enough to make him who bears it the observed of all observers, the subject of inquiry on the part of all the curious. Perhaps the inquisitive and the scandalous will be dissatisfied with what they learn from these two volumes; but readers of a less objectionable kind are likely to cry content. Charles James Mathews was born on "Boxing Night," 1803; his "first appearance," as a living creature, took place at "a nice little house, in a nice little street, in Liverpool," and on June 24, 1878, "the eyes of the brilliant comedian closed upon the world in which he had worked so hard, and to the amusement of which he had contributed so largely." At six years of age he went to a preparatory school, and subsequently he was sent to Merchant Taylors', whence he was removed, in consequence, apparently, of injustice and ill treatment, to the private establishment kept by Dr. Charles Richardson the lexicographer, where he found himself in congenial company among "the sons of Charles Kemble, Charles Young, Liston, and Terry." Soon the time came for leaving Dr. Richardson's and choosing a profession; and the choice of Charles James Mathews, whom his father would have liked, strange as it may seem, to put into holy orders, as one might put the square man into the round hole, fell upon architecture. He became a pupil in the office of the celebrated Pugin; and, at the expiration of his articles, he was engaged in an architectural capacity by Lord Blessington. Then came the well-known tour in Italy with Lord and Lady Blessington and Count d'Orsay, and an absurd quarrel with the Count. After this, upon his return to England, there were some romantic passages of love between Charles James Mathews and Louisa Home Purves; and they ended in smoke, or rather in a separation effected by the respective mothers of the two young persons. In 1827-8 Mathews paid a second visit to Italy; and from this trip he returned in a pitiable condition from "malarious fever, with rheumatic complications." It is one's duty to sympathise with the sufferer; but eyes cannot be shut to the fact that had he not so suffered some of his drollest letters would have been unwritten, and readers would have lost the chance, nay, certainty, of many a hearty, exhilarating laugh. After his recovery Mathews for some time led a desultory life, ending, for a short time, in the uncongenial occupation of a District Surveyor, with the revolting address of "Cut-throat-lane, Bow." He had long been drifting towards the stage, and in 1835 he shared the management of the Adelphi Theatre with Mr. Yates. From this essay, however, he soon recoiled, and, on Nov. 6, 1835, he appeared at the Olympic in the character of a professed actor, the character in which he was to attain so much celebrity by the brilliancy of his talents and so much notoriety by other means. In 1838 he was married to Madame Vestris, who was six years his senior; and almost from that moment he began to be involved in those pecuniary difficulties with which his name is nearly as much associated as with his numerous and continuous successes. This, of course, is the part of the biography which is of the most intense interest: it cannot be read without mingled feelings of dissent as well as consent, wonder, horror, admiration, indignation, and commiseration. It seems impossible that a man so deeply involved should ever extricate himself; yet there is reason to believe that he not only did extricate himself, but rose to prosperity from the very depths of ruin. It is not quite clear, however, from the narrative what was his pecuniary position at his death; still, the presumption is that, if he did not actually leave wealth behind him, the herculean exertions he put forth to the very last were attended "with results in every way satisfactory." Madame Vestris, otherwise Mrs. Mathews, died on Aug. 8, 1856; and on Feb. 14, 1858, Mathews was married to Mrs. Davenport, in New York, and with this second marriage, about which the inquisitive will look in vain for details, "Mathews brings his autobiography to an end." Henceforth, "except for the unflagging vivacity, the irrepressible energy, and the undaunted perseverance, which faced ill or good fortune with the same cheerfulness, there was little in the Mathews of later years to recall the struggling manager of the Lyceum, the hero of countless anecdotes of debts and duns and desperate expedients." Nevertheless, the remaining pages of the volumes, with the many sparkling letters interspersed, do not yield to the others in point of attractiveness, though they derive that quality from different causes. It should be added that the volumes are provided with an index.

A hearty welcome should be accorded to the Memoir of Henry Compton, edited by Charles and Edward Compton (Tinsley Brothers), for a better comedian than he who is commemorated therein has seldom, if ever, delighted an English audience. His style was eminently unobtrusive, and was therefore little suited to the boisterous many; but it won the hearts and the judgment of the more refined and more appreciative few, not absolutely but relatively few. Among the latter he will be remembered, and by them he will be handed down to their posterity, as perhaps the very best comic actor it was ever their good fortune to see. The dryness of his humour and the drollery of his manner were accompanied by an ease and a grace in striking and charming contrast with the overstrained efforts of the most popular among his contemporaries and immediate successors as well as predecessors. We shall not often look upon his like again; and our sons and daughters will be fortunate if they look upon his like at all. His real name was Charles Mackenzie, born March 22, 1805, and he died in his seventy-third year. He was sixth among the eleven children of John and Elizabeth Mackenzie, the former "a man of considerable natural endowments, which had been supplemented by cultivation," the latter, whose name before marriage was Symonds, a woman of "great personal and mental attractions," connected with the family of Sir Rowland Hill, the great reformer of postal matters. The future comedian's native town was Huntingdon, where he began his education, which he "finished at a boarding-school at Little Baddon, in Essex," not being particularly "lord of his book," and not achieving much success as a scholar, but exhibiting good-nature, high-spirited conduct, love of mischief, rather more than the average of boyhood's usual exuberance and scorn for the "trammels of adult authority." Of course, when he began the battle of life he experienced the perversity wherein the irony of fate expresses itself—he, who was to be a distinguished comedian, went to business in the house of an uncle to whom acting was an abomination and an actor a licensed malefactor. Hence, as usual, flight, adventures, the hardships of strolling and provincial engagements. In 1837 he made his first appearance in London, and was received with favour, which grew as he became better known. A list of the characters in which he played would occupy a noticeable amount of space; suffice it to say that he won success upon success, and made certain Shakspearean parts almost impossible for anybody but himself. We learn that he was exceptionally endowed, both physically and mentally; that he was not only a great pedestrian, but that he "excelled in riding, rowing, skating, and boxing," and for his mental endowments, his excellence in his art, an excellence founded upon native talent and promoted by intellectual study, is sufficient evidence. In 1848 Mr. Compton married Miss Emmeline Montague, and the couple took apartments at 16, Charing-cross, where they lived until their "family became too large for the accommodation the house could afford;" and in 1853 he entered upon that long engagement, lasting for eighteen years, at the Haymarket, which is probably to be accounted for on the ground of a very natural desire to have a certainty of maintenance in view of his ever increasing family. "With the advent," however, "of Charles Mathews and Sothern to the Haymarket," Mr. Compton "found he had to take his chance after Sothern and Buckstone, or Mathews and Buckstone, or else play the initial and concluding farce;" and "so badly did things appear to go with him there that, finally, in justice to himself, he felt it his duty to accept a very capital offer from Mr. Charles Calvert, then manager of the Prince's Theatre, Manchester, to play in London and the provinces for one year." After this, Mr. Compton joined Mr. H. J. Montague at the Globe Theatre; and ultimately came "Hamlet," with Mr. Compton in his unapproached and unapproachable part of the gravedigger, at the Lyceum, at which theatre he made his last as well as his first appearance in London, unless an exception should be made of some morning performances at the Gaiety Theatre. In the meanwhile he had removed from Charing-cross to Kensington, where, it may be presumed, he died, on Sept. 15, 1877. But, to tell the truth, the memoir is not put together with much regard for lucid arrangement, though this does not interfere with the interest of the narrative or with the object of showing "what has been shown before by such men as Charles Kean and Macready, but which always has a special value, that an English actor could be also an English gentleman, and that the pursuit of a maligned profession has no invariable tendency to degrade its disciples." There are letters from actors and actresses of celebrity bearing witness to the departed comedian's artistic and general worth; and among them are communications from Charles J. Mathews so apparently irreconcilable one with another that it is quite surprising, unless, indeed, it be nothing surprising that a man should write—"I may almost say I had not the pleasure of his acquaintance," about the very person to whom he had previously written, "I can't afford in these hard times to lose the good company and good opinion of one of the few pleasant fellows, admirable actors, and gentlemen that are left to our poor profession." But, then, thirty years had elapsed since the man who is written about was written to.

Candidates marked thus * are eligible for Commissions in the West India Regiments only.

Orders have been received at Portsmouth for the Indian troop-ships Serapis and Malabar to prepare for immediate departure from that port to India. They are to convey the wives and children of the men of regiments who have been engaged in the Zulu war and are to proceed from South Africa to India, the women and children who start in the ships joining the men at Bombay.

The War Office has issued the following:—"Errata in the London Gazette. In the list of Nominations to the Civil Division of the Second Class and to the Military Division of the Third Class of the Order of the Bath, for 'Pierre Louis Napoleon Cavagnari, Esq., C.S.I.,' read 'Major Pierre Louis Napoleon Cavagnari, C.S.I., Bengal Staff Corps, Deputy-Commissioner, Second Class, for the Punjaub;' and for 'Lieutenant-Colonel John Henry Porter Malcolmson, Bengal Staff Corps,' read 'Lieutenant-Colonel John Henry Porter Malcolmson, Bombay Staff Corps.'"

THE PUBLIC HEALTH.

Last week 6190 births and 3052 deaths were registered in London and twenty-two other large towns of the United Kingdom. The mortality from all causes was at the average rate of 19 deaths annually in every 1000 persons living. The annual death-rate was 16 per 1000 in Edinburgh, 15 in Glasgow, and 28 in Dublin; smallpox caused 2 more deaths in Dublin.

In London 2702 births and 1349 deaths were registered. Allowing for increase of population the births exceeded by 263, whereas the deaths were 233 below, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The annual death-rate from all causes, which had been equal to 19·4 and 17·6 per 1000 in the two preceding weeks, rose again last week to 19·4. During the past seven weeks of the current quarter the death-rate in London has averaged but 17·9 per 1000, against 20·4 and 24·5 in the seven corresponding weeks of 1877 and 1878. This marked decrease of mortality has been mainly due to the comparatively slight fatality of infantile diarrhœa in recent weeks. The deaths included 4 from smallpox, 58 from measles, 45 from scarlet fever, 5 from diphtheria, 37 from whooping-cough, 20 from different forms of fever, and 127 from diarrhœa; thus to the seven principal diseases of the zymotic class 296 deaths were referred, against 194, 241, and 249 in the three preceding weeks. These 296 deaths were 165 below the corrected average number from the same diseases in the corresponding week of the last ten years, and were equal to an annual rate of 4·4 per 1000. The widow of a lighterman died on the 14th inst. at 21, Fox's-buildings, Southwark, from "senile decay," whose age was stated to be one hundred years.

At the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, the mean reading of the barometer last week was 29·74 in.; the highest reading was 29·88 in. on Thursday evening, and the lowest 29·41 in. at the end of the week. The mean temperature of the air was 63·1 deg., and 0·7 deg. above the average in the corresponding week of the twenty years ending 1868, deduced from photographic records. The mean was below the average on the first and last, but showed an excess on each of the other days of the week; the hottest day was Friday, when the mean was 66·3 deg., and 4·0 deg. above the average; while on Saturday it fell to 58·3 deg., and showed a deficiency of 3·8 deg. The lowest night temperature was 49·5 deg. on Sunday, and the highest day temperature in the shade, 79·7 deg. on Friday. The extreme range in the week was therefore 33·8 deg. The highest temperature in the sun, as shown by a self-registering thermometer with a blackened bulb in vacuo placed on the grass, was 150·0 deg. on Friday. The difference between the mean dew point and air temperature averaged 6·1 deg. The mean temperature of the water in the Thames, derived from daily observations taken at the Royalist Police-Ship, was 63·1 deg. The mean degree of humidity of the air was 81, complete saturation being represented by 100; the air was therefore of its average dryness. The direction of the wind was variable, and the horizontal movement of the air averaged 6·7 miles per hour, which was 3·6 below the average in the corresponding week of sixteen years. Rain fell on Saturday to the amount of 0·03 of an inch. The duration of registered bright sunshine in the week was 38·4 hours, the sun being above the horizon during 102·8 hours; the recorded duration of sunshine was, therefore, equal to 37 per cent of its possible duration. The amount of ozone recorded during the week was considerably above the average, especially on Tuesday and Saturday.

The Birmingham Post says the Privy Council has refused a charter of incorporation for Sutton Colefield.

A large supply of live stock and fresh meat arrived at Liverpool during the past week from the United States and Canada, making a total of 4918 quarters of beef, 594 carcases of mutton, 1041 live cattle, and 1989 live sheep.

Mr. James M'Henry has petitioned the London Court of Bankruptcy for liquidation, and has estimated his liabilities at £970,000, and his assets at one million sterling. Last Saturday a receiver was appointed, and a temporary injunction was granted restraining the Erie Railway Company from proceeding upon a judgment of the Master of the Rolls for over £260,000.

Accounts from all parts of the provinces state that an immense amount of damage has been done by the recent floods and storms to the crops. The Irish mail from London, which on Sunday was stopped in consequence of a bridge being washed away between Chester and Holyhead, was enabled to proceed on its journey the next day.

The National Water-Supply Exhibition at the Alexandra Palace was opened on the 14th inst. by the Lord Mayor, who previously spent some time in the work of inspection, and expressed his sense of the great social importance of the object. Mr. Edwin Chadwick, C.B., and Professors Seeley and Wanklyn also took part in the proceedings.

After a lapse of some years, the popular fête on behalf of the widows and orphans of those employed by the Great Western and Bristol and Exeter Railway was again held on Tuesday. The place selected was the magnificent domain of the Duke of Marlborough, Blenheim Park, where the fête was held a few years since. The attendance was unusually large.

At the Wreck Commissioners' Court yesterday week, before Mr. Commissioner Rothery and two nautical assessors, the inquiry into the circumstances attending the loss of life arising out of the alleged delay in lowering one of the life-boats of the Albert Edward steamer while on a voyage, on July 22 last, from Folkestone to Boulogne, was concluded. The Court, in giving judgment, blamed the second mate for having increased the confusion on board by jumping in the sea after the person who had thrown himself overboard to commit suicide (others, thinking he deserved praise, have opened a subscription for him); but stated that, on the whole, they were not disposed to deal with the certificates of either the master or the mate. They also recommended that an extra and lighter life-boat should in future be carried by the channel steamers.

The sixteenth annual meeting of the British Pharmaceutical Association of Chemists and Druggists of England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales was begun at Sheffield on Tuesday. The report of the executive committee stated that Professor Attfield had consented to withdraw his resignation and to hold the office of senior general secretary for another year. The president, Mr. G. F. Schacht, F.C.S., in the course of his inaugural address, complained of the very slight reward which was given to professors of pharmacy in return for their life-long labours. Even the House of Commons could scarcely be kept together to consider a Bill for the regulation of so uninteresting a subject as pharmacy. He complained also of the way in which they were regarded by society. The remainder of the sitting was devoted to the discussion of technical papers. The conference concluded its two days' sitting on Wednesday evening. Many papers were read and discussed, and several of the large works visited. The conference decided to hold its next meeting at Swansea, and appointed Mr. W. Southall, of Birmingham, president for the ensuing year.

FINE ARTS.

The twenty-second annual report of the trustees of the National Portrait Gallery has been published. The report states that during the year numerous donations have been received, and sixty-eight portraits have been transferred from the British Museum. The number of portraits purchased has been increased from 239 to 345. The able and indefatigable secretary, Mr. Scharf, has furnished minute and learned particulars, biographical and artistic, of all these numerous additions, whether by gift or purchase—a task which demanded much critical acumen as well as wide research. The principal of the new works we have already reviewed. Since 1873, when original letters as specimens of handwriting in connection with portraiture were first exhibited in the gallery, a considerable number of very valuable autographs have been received. The report remarks that, although many of them possess great historical as well as literary interest, they are exclusively donations, as the trustees do not consider themselves warranted to appropriate any part of the fund annually placed at their disposal for the purchase of any object beyond direct portraiture, either painting, sculpture, drawing, or engraving. The number of visitors to the gallery last year was 72,105. Being now in possession of enlarged space, and desiring to render the collection more generally available, the trustees have resolved to open the gallery to the public without restriction every day in the week except Friday, which is set apart for the purpose of cleaning and occasional alterations. Artists will be allowed to copy, subject to the rules already in force, on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays, between ten and two.

The "Black and White" Exhibition at the Dudley Gallery closes to-day (Saturday).

The first fine-art exhibition held in South London has been opened in the rooms of the Working-Men's College and Free Library, 143, Upper Kennington-lane, near Vauxhall Bridge. The collection is twice as large as was expected. Mr. P. A. Taylor, M.P., has lent a number of pictures by contemporary artists; Mr. Woolner has lent works by deceased masters, including Turners, Cotmans, Reynolds, and Nasmyths. There are pictures also by Guido, Spagnoletto, Hogarth, and Sir F. Leighton. Sir Charles Dilke contributes portraits of Mr. J. S. Mill by Watts, of Professor Fawcett by Madox Brown, and Gambetta by Le Gros.

Within the last month two catalogues have been issued (as already mentioned by us) of the etchings of Charles Méryon—one by Mr. P. Burty, the artist's friend, the other by Mr. F. Wedmore, the writer of an article on Méryon, which appeared in the Nineteenth Century of May, 1878. The interest thus awakened in the works of an artist hitherto probably not adequately appreciated will be further gratified by an exhibition of his etchings which is announced to be held at the galleries of Messrs. Dowdeswell, 36, Chancery-lane, in October and November next.

The first of the series of mural paintings by Mr. F. Madox Brown and Mr. Shields, to be executed in the new Townhall, Manchester, is completed, and is highly spoken of by local report. This is the "Baptism of King Edwin of Deira," by the first-named artist, a composition of many figures, contained in one of ten compartments, each measuring (much too small, by-the-way) about ten feet by five feet. Among the figures are, of course, King Edwin's Queen, Ethelberga, and Bishop Paulinus. The subjects of the whole series relate to the history of the city and district.

The Exhibition of the Newcastle Arts Association will be opened on the 30th inst.

An attempt is being made somewhat to lessen the insignificant effect of Cleopatra's needle on the very inappropriate site chosen for it on the Thames Embankment. At twenty-one feet distance from the obelisk pedestal are two other pedestals, which are not surmounted by any ornament or object of interest. These are to be taken down and rebuilt twelve feet further off, which will give a clear space of thirty-three feet on either side, and thus open up the view of the Needle. Each of these pedestals so rebuilt is to support a sphinx, thereby sustaining the Egyptian character of the entire structure.

The death of Mr. Charles Tennant Wells, at the age of seventy-one, was announced two or three weeks ago. It should be remembered that illustrated newspapers are in debted to him for an important contrivance, that of bolting several wood-blocks together for one large Engraving, without which it would not have been possible to execute such Illustrations as those occupying two pages for each of them in this Number of our publication. Mr. C. T. Wells invented the system of bolted blocks in the year 1842, about the time when this Journal as commenced.

The scheme of holding a Permanent International Exhibition at Philadelphia in the Centennial Exposition main building (which was preserved, and covers an area of over twenty acres) is receiving successful development, and promises to result also in a great future museum of America. The fine-arts division will be represented by extensive collections of the best accessible paintings and statuary; and it is designed in a short time to make this the great art-centre of America.

The annual Belgian Exhibition of Fine Arts (the "Belgian Salon," held successively at Brussels, Antwerp, and Ghent) is now open at Antwerp. There are 1274 works of painting and sculpture.

The Belgian Government has bought the great triptych by Quentin Matsys at Louvain for 200,000f., and the work will shortly be placed in the Musée at Brussels.

It appears to be decided by the French Chamber of Deputies that the ruins of the burnt Tuileries shall be removed and the site converted into a garden. The obvious result will be to almost destroy the architectural significance and effect in one direction of the noble vista of the avenue of the Champs Elysées; the Arc du Carrousel and the buildings of the Louvre being too low to correspond in any way with the Arc de l'Etoile at the other extremity of the avenue; and, moreover, those buildings are not built on the same axis as the avenue. The lateral Pavillons de Flore et Marsin will, of course, not supply the deficiency; and, though beautiful in themselves as restored, they will appear sadly disjointed, obtrusive, and unmeaning without some building to connect them. Mr. Fergusson the architect suggests that either the remains of the Tuileries should be restored or a new building erected on the site to receive the incomparable treasures of the Bibliotèque Nationale from the Rue Vivienne, where they are very unworthily housed and far from safe from the danger of fire.

The interior of the Théâtre Français has been redecorated. The ceiling has been adorned with paintings by M. Mazerollo symbolising the productions of the leading French dramatists.

The visit of the British Archæological Association to Yarmouth was brought to a close last Saturday. In the morning the members met in St. Nicholas's Church, and heard an interesting paper on the church by the Ven. Archdeacon Nevill, formerly Vicar of the parish. After visiting the Benedictine Priory and other objects of antiquarian interest in the town, they proceeded to Gorleston and inspected the church. In the evening they met for the last time at the Townhall, under the presidency of Lord Waveney, to hear a paper from Mr. D. Grey Birch on the Charters and Seals of Yarmouth. — The association visited Norwich and its neighbourhood on Monday, where the concluding meetings of the Congress were held. At the Council Chamber of the Guildhall the association was welcomed to the city by the Mayor (Mr. H. Bullard), who freely offered to the members the use of the Guildhall for the meetings, and placed at their disposal the valuable regalia and ancient charters and muniments belonging to the Town Council. After thanking his Worship for his offer, the Congress proceeded, according to arrangements, to the cathedral, where the members were welcomed by the Very Rev. the Dean of Norwich, who read a paper giving a history of the cathedral and its founders, with a description of the points of interest in the building and the Bishops by whom each portion was erected. Having seen all there was to be seen, the members of the Congress proceeded to the Deanery, where they were hospitably entertained at luncheon. Later on they were conducted by Mr. R. M. Phipson, F.S.A., to view various objects of antiquarian interest in the city, including some of the churches, ruins, and ancient buildings. The members dined together in the evening at the Royal Hotel, under the presidency of Lord Waveney. The members met on Tuesday at the Guildhall, under the presidency of Mr. Morgan. With the aid of maps the ancient boundaries of the City were pointed out by Mr. Phipson, and also the site of the City walls. An inspection was made of the charters and other documents belonging to the Town Council. Mr. De Gray Birch, of the British Museum, in describing the contents of the various manuscripts, said they formed the finest series of ancient civic documents he had ever seen. They had been more carefully preserved than such records had usually been. Among them were charters granted to the city by Henry II., John, and Henry III. Taking this series with that belonging to the cathedral, Mr. Birch said they formed a collection of which any city in the world might be proud. Subsequently the members, under the guidance of Mr. Phipson, visited the churches of St. Peter, Mancroft, St. Stephen's, and St. Giles's, also the old house which was the palace of Bishop Hall. Later on in the day a short excursion was made to Arminghall, where there is an interesting example of ancient domestic architecture, and on their return the visitors inspected the remains of Carrow Abbey, now the residence of Mr. J. J. Colman, M.P. In the evening the usual meeting was held for the reading of papers.

A conference of miners' delegates, representing nearly 200,000 men in all parts of the country, was held last week in the Memorial Hall, Manchester. It began its sittings on Wednesday, under the presidency of Mr. Macdonald, M.P., the main purpose of the gathering being to discuss the depression which had lately taken place in their wages. The question of emigration occupied the attention of the delegates the whole day.—On Thursday the scheme of emigration suggested in the president's opening address was discussed at considerable length. All the speakers admitted the desirableness of such a scheme being carried into effect; and it was ultimately resolved to establish a National Emigration Fund Association, in which any class of workmen throughout the country should be eligible for membership. After further discussion as to the depression of trade and the low rate of wages, a resolution was passed to the effect that it would be inexpedient at the present moment to make a demand for the general advance of wages at the rate of 10 per cent.—The chief business of Friday was the discussion of a code of regulations drawn up for the Workmen's Emigration Association, which it was decided should be submitted by the delegates to their various districts, and reported to the next conference, to be held at Leeds in October.

ENO'S FRUIT SALT.
"From a Town in British Guiana, South America, Dec. 5, 1878.
"J. C. Eno, Esq., London.
"Sir,—After two years' trial of your excellent FRUIT SALT, I can safely say that it has saved me much misery from colonial fevers, indigestion, and impaired appetite, to which I have been subject during eleven years' residence in the tropics.
"It is invaluable to travellers as a preventive of seasickness, and a relief from the other ailments of life aboard ship; and, for myself, I would as soon think of going a voyage without my tooth-brush as my bottle of FRUIT SALT. With ordinary care, it does not get hard and caked, as other effervescent preparations do in warm and humid climates, and this is greatly in its favour.
"I am, Sir, yours respectfully, "W. J. B."

"SUCCESS IN LIFE."—A new invention is brought before the public, and commands success. A score of ABOMINABLE IMITATIONS are immediately introduced by the unscrupulous, who, in copying the original closely enough to deceive the public, and yet not so exactly as to infringe upon legal rights, exercise an ingenuity that employed in an original channel could not fail to secure reputation and profit.—ADAMS. CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see the capsule is marked "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without it you have been imposed on by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists. Price 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. Prepared only at ENO'S FRUIT SALT WORKS, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. Eno's Patent.

MEETING OF THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION AT SHEFFIELD—VIEW OF SHEFFIELD FROM THE RAILWAY STATION.

Digitized by Google

SHEFFIELD AND THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION.

The Annual Congress of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, under the presidency of Dr. George Allman, the naturalist, was opened on Wednesday at Sheffield. We present a view of that populous and busy town in Yorkshire, which has nearly 200,000 inhabitants, and is second only to Leeds among Yorkshire towns. It is situated not far eastward of the Derbyshire High Peak mountains, but at the confluence of the Sheaf and three other streams with the river Don. This well-watered district has been popularly called "Hallamshire" from time immemorial, as it constitutes the ancient great manor of Hallam, which was ruled by Earl Waltheof at the Norman Conquest, and was afterwards held, with some feudal privileges, by other powerful lords. It belonged to the Talbots, Earls of Shrewsbury, from 1406 to the seventeenth century, when it passed by marriage to the Howards, and is now owned by the Duke of Norfolk. There are some remains of the ancient Manor-house, in which Cardinal Wolsey sojourned a few days after his disgrace, and of Sheffield Castle, which was, during twelve years, the prison of Mary Queen of Scots, guarded by the sixth Earl of Shrewsbury and his Countess. The Castle was taken in 1644 by the army of the Parliament, and was soon afterwards dismantled. The old parish church of Sheffield, dedicated to St. Peter, contains splendid monuments of the Talbot family, in the Shrewsbury chapel.

The steel manufactures of this town have been famed in England from a period of high antiquity; they are now famous all over the world. Chaucer, five hundred years ago, spoke of "a Sheffield whittle;" and the use of Sheffield arrow-heads at the battle of Bosworth, nearly four hundred years ago, is mentioned by an old historian. The Company of Cutlers, "for the good order and government of the makers of knives, sickles, shears, scissors, and other cutlery wares in Hallamshire," was incorporated by James I. The Master Cutler's yearly feast, which takes place in Cutlers' Hall, a modern Grecian building, is sometimes an occasion for leading politicians to make demonstrative speeches.

Abundant water-power, supplied by the Sheaf, the Porter, the Loxley, and the Rivelin, giving motion to the tilt-hammers and revolving grindstones, was a potent cause of industrial prosperity for Sheffield. But the toil of this town consumes in our days half a million tons of coal per annum, which is got chiefly from its own deep mines on the right bank of the Don, in the township of Attercliffe. The vast clouds of black smoke incessantly poured from a multitude of open furnaces and tall chimneys deprive Sheffield of that pleasantness which might have attended its natural situation. Its steel trade, however, to the yearly value of three millions sterling, may be esteemed worth the sacrifice of spoiling the local beauty of earth and sky. Knives, razors, and scissors, as of old, and forks which the modern dinner-table is wont to use with its knives, are produced here in enormous quantities. The grindstones, which are 4 ft. or 5 ft. in diameter, and 10 in. thick, come out of the Wykersley quarries, near Roche Abbey. Some of them are turned by steam, but most of them by water power. To these the blades are held, which have previously been forged at the anvil and duly tempered by fire and water. There are peculiar dangers in grinding: sometimes a whirling stone may split and fly into pieces, which perhaps kill the workman sitting on his bench above, or knock a hole in the roof or wall. The saw-grinder has to lean over the grindstone, pressing the steel plate against it with hands and knees, and a momentary slip would be his death. The saw-teeth are cut with a punch, and files, too, are usually grooved by hand with a chisel and hammer. Dry-grinding, for needles and other pointed tools, sheds from the soft gritstone a constant shower of sparkling particles, which the workman is apt to get into his lungs. No class of industrial population in England lead a harder life. If some have been rough and fierce, there is great excuse for them, poor fellows! The best material of Sheffield ware is the cast steel, which is made by melting together, in a crucible of clay, small pieces of blistered steel, the crucible being imbedded in the burning coke of a furnace. The Bessemer process of steel-making, which can be effected in half an hour from the pig-iron, combining it with charcoal carbon, is also much used at Sheffield. Steel is often applied to veneer, as it were, the outer surface of iron, and to form a cutting edge. These ingenious arts, and the variety of manufactured articles, may be inspected by visitors at the present meeting of the British Association. The establishments of Messrs. Rodgers, for cutlery, and of Messrs. Ward, Sanderson, and Turton, those of Sir John Brown and Co., and Messrs. Cammell and Co., for rolled armour-plates, and that of Messrs. Naylor and Vickers, for bells of cast steel, have long been noted.

Within a short distance of this town are many places that may invite an easy excursion. The Peak, with its fine mountain and moorland scenery and its geological wonders, is quite accessible. Up the Loxley valley is the Bradfield reservoir, which burst in March, 1864, flooding all the towns and villages below, and drowning 300 people. Near Rotherham, another manufacturing town, where the Rother joins the Don, are Wentworth Woodhouse, Lord Fitzwilliam's seat, and the ruins of Conisborough Castle. Several interesting ancient mansions and abbey churches lie not far up the hill country behind Sheffield, and Nottinghamshire, with the parks and rural palaces of wealthy Dukes, approaches it on the opposite side. The neighbouring towns of Doncaster, Barnsley, Wakefield, Pontefract, and Leeds, will offer their respective attractions, when the scientific lectures and debates of the "Sections" have been suspended.

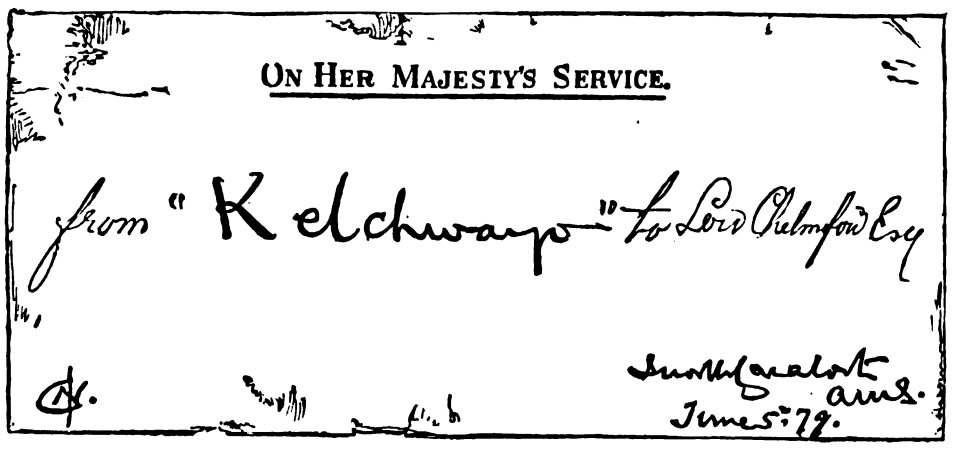
The President of the Association for this year, Dr. George James Allman, M.D., F.R.S., was born at Cork, in 1812. He received his early education at the Academic Institution of Belfast, whence he proceeded to the University of Dublin, where he at first studied law, but afterwards graduated in medicine. He declined practice on being appointed Regius Professor of Botany, in 1844. He became Regius Professor of Natural History at the University of Edinburgh in 1855, and held that post till 1870, when he resigned on account of the state of his health, and came to London, where he was cordially received. His biological studies have been specially devoted to the inferior members of the animal kingdom, and his monographs on the fresh-water polyzoa and gymnoblastic hydroids, published by the Ray Society, with beautifully-coloured illustrations, in 1856 and 1872-3, are classic works; and in his charming discourse at the Royal Institution on March 14, 1873, on "Coral Islands and their Architects," Mr. Darwin's theory was explained and supported in a highly poetic spirit. Professor Allman's valuable researches have been principally set forth in memoirs printed in the Transactions of the Royal Societies of London and Edinburgh, and of the Royal Irish Academy; and these bodies have awarded him gold medals in recognition of their great merits and originality. In 1874 he succeeded Mr. George Bentham as president of the Linnean Society, and in 1876 the Government nominated him one of the Commissioners to inquire into the state of the Queen's Colleges of Ireland. Happily for the cause of science, he declined, in 1874, being nominated as a candidate to represent Bandon in Parliament.

ZULU WAR ILLUSTRATIONS.

Our Special Artist, Mr. Melton Prior, who has arrived in England, sent us before he left South Africa many Sketches of the Zulu War. The two large Engravings, which fill respectively the two middle pages of the Number and of the Supplement this week, represent the Battle of Ulundi, fought on July 4, and the Burning of Ulundi later on the same day. The Burning of King Cetewayo's House at Ulundi is the subject of another Engraving, which appears on our front page. The return, on June 28, of the Zulu Ambassadors, whom Lord Chelmsford had sent back to Cetewayo the day before, and who now brought a fresh message in reply to his offered terms of peace, is shown in one of the Illustrations. These are from our Special Artist's Sketches.

The army of Lord Chelmsford had advanced upon Ulundi from the west, along the ridge of the Babinanga hills, on the south side of the valley of the White Umvolosi. It consisted of General Newdigate's division, and what had been the flying column of Brigadier-General Sir Evelyn Wood, entering from the Transvaal frontier of Zululand. The Commander-in-Chief had massed the 13th Light Infantry, the 80th Foot, the 90th Light Infantry, Buller's Horse, and Tremlett's battery into one brigade, which was intrusted with the post of honour in the advance. The second division, under General Newdigate, consisted of the second battalion 21st Fusiliers, the 58th and 94th Regiments, whith Major Le Grice's battery of Artillery, and details of the King's Dragoon Guards, 17th Lancers, and Colonial troops. The total number of troops at Lord Chelmsford's disposal after crossing the Umvolosi river amounted to 4062 British, 1000 natives, and fourteen guns, the remainder of the second division, consisting of the 4th Foot, and both battalions of the 24th, together with strong detachments of all other corps, amounting in the aggregate to more than 4000 men, had necessarily been left in the rear to guard our frontier line and keep open the line of communication.

On June 26 Cetewayo sent messengers asking, on various pretexts, that certain kraals or villages on the route of advance should not be burnt. This request was disregarded, and a party was sent on to burn them; but the kraals were abandoned by the Zulus, who themselves set fire to them. On the next day Cetewayo sent in a number of the bullocks taken by the Zulus at Isandhlwana by the messengers returning to the camp, with a present of two elephants' tusks, and a letter in English, written by a sick trader in Ulundi, stating that the rest of the cattle and the two 7-pounders would follow. What he now sent proved his desire for peace. He expected that the British would now quit the country. He had been unable to call in any of the rifles taken at Isandlwana, so could not send them. The messengers stated that no Induna of consideration would consent to come as Ambassador, and that no regiment would consent to lay down its arms, which had been the stipulation. They acknowledged the existence of a strong force at Ulundi. The messengers were sent back next day. The ivory was returned. The cattle would be retained for a few days, awaiting events. The laying down of their arms by a thousand of the men now at Ulundi would be accepted instead of the previously stipulated submission of a complete regiment. Their safety would be guaranteed.



The Zulu messengers, as they came into the camp the second time, escorted by some of our Lancers, with the two tusks of ivory carried by the men behind, are shown in our Artist's Sketch. One of them held a cleft stick, in which was stuck the letter written by an unknown European for Cetewayo, addressed "To Lord Chelmsford, Esq." It was inclosed in an old English official envelope, which had been that of a letter sent to the Zulu King by Colonel North Crealock, Military Secretary, from Fort Newdigate, some time before. This envelope was afterwards given as a curiosity to our Special Artist, who sent it to the Illustrated London News' office, and a facsimile of the very document is here engraved.

The British Commander-in-Chief, as we have stated, dismissed the Zulu messengers, desiring them to tell Cetewayo that if by noon on July 3 the stipulations had not been complied with the advance would recommence. The 3rd came and went, yet no sign of submission; so at daybreak on the 4th inst., leaving the 1st battalion 24th Foot, with some guns, under Colonel Bellairs, in laager on the banks of the White Umvolosi, Lord Chelmsford crossed the river and moved on the King's kraal over ground which had been carefully reconnoitred previously by Colonel Buller, V.C., C.B.

Several accounts of the battle of Ulundi, written by Mr. Archibald Forbes, by Dr. W. H. Russell, by Mr. Francis, and other special correspondents of the London daily papers, have already been quoted in this Journal. A further description is given by the Natal Witness. Its correspondent, in the course of his letter, says:—"Forming up in a hollow parallelogram, the 80th Regiment and the Gatling battery were on the front, the 90th and part of the 94th on the left flank, the 13th and 58th on the right flank, the 2nd, 4th, and remainder of the 94th forming the rear, while a battery of artillery was at each corner. Keeping this formation, the column marched on to the second ridge beyond the drift without opposition, halting in rear of a ruined mission station, and on the site selected the previous day by Colonel Buller. The advantages of the position were at once apparent. In front was a broad open country, with high grass sloping down to a spruit. In rear again the country was open, with little cover save a few bushes. On the left flank the slope was fully open up to the Nodwengu kraal, which was distant about 1000 yards. The Zulus were seen approaching in force both from the direction of Ulundi and from the bush on the right. At half-past eight the mounted men under Buller were thrown out on the rear, left, and front, meeting the enemy and keeping them in check. Owing, however, to some mistake, the right was left uncovered by cavalry, and the mounted Basutos under Cochrane were accordingly sent out on that side with orders to draw the Zulus under fire. As the Basutos retired before the advancing enemy, the right face of the square came into action, commencing its fire fully five minutes before the rest of the force was engaged. At ten minutes to nine, or thereabouts, firing became general, all four sides of the square being simultaneously engaged, the Zulus after their manner throwing forward the horns of their army to surround the British force. Coming on steadily and in complete silence, the Zulus advanced with the same intrepidity they showed at Gingbilovo and Kambula, and continued to advance until they had reached a spot not more than seventy yards from the faces of the square. The British infantry were formed in four ranks, the front rank kneeling, the rear rank reversed, facing inwards, while inside the square were all the necessary arrangements for keeping up a constant supply of ammunition. It was impossible for any force long to face the deadly storms of lead poured in among them at such a short distance. A few now and then made an attempt to advance further. One man rushed up to within thirty yards of the Gatling battery, and was shot as he was turning to retire. Another body was afterwards found twenty-eight yards from the line of square. But it was no use. The main body wavered and paused. The moment was a decisive one. It was not the hail from the Martini-Henrys alone; there was the artillery continually at work sending shell after shell through the dark masses, breaking up every partial attempt of the Zulus to concentrate their strength for a rush. Then it was time for the Lancers to be let loose. Riding down with their lances levelled, the British horsemen came upon the hesitating enemy, and in an instant their lines were broken through. The sabre was at work as well as the lance; and soon the Zulus, their ranks torn asunder, and their coherency as an army destroyed, were flying before the advancing cavalry. And still, whenever there was a chance, the artillery thundered after them, and still the dull rattle from the faces of the square told how steadily the rain of death was supplementing the sweep of the broadsword and the thrust of the lance. But the Zulu does not fly without an effort to resist. Before the Lancers had gone 300 yards Captain Edgell was shot dead. Among the officers wounded were Lieutenant Phipps and Lieutenant Liedenbrood, of the 58th, and Major Bond, of the same regiment. Besides Captain Edgell nine men were killed, and the wounded, including the officers above named, numbered about seventy-five. As a rule, the men behaved with great steadiness, and were completely under the control of their officers. The artillery were particularly conspicuous for their cool conduct. At one moment an artilleryman fell dead over the limber of a gun, but no pause was made to pick him up. A gunner of the name of Moorhead attracted special notice. He was wounded in the leg, and rendered incapable of remaining at his gun. He was, however, determined not to remain idle, for when safe inside the square he crawled to where the drums of the Gatling battery were being filled with cartridges, and insisted on helping the sergeant to charge them. The Gatlings, by-the-way, were disappointing, having to cease firing six times during the action. Dabulamanzi was in command of the Zulus on the British left, and Sirayo on the right, the former being frequently under fire, while the staff on the outside were much exposed. It is stated, too, that four regiments of Amatongas were engaged on the Zulu side. The battle over, and the enemy in full retreat, a short rest was allowed to the men, and a move was then made towards Ulundi by the mounted force, Lord W. Beresford being the first to enter the kraal. The place was wholly deserted, nothing except empty bottles being found in the King's house, a thatched building with four rooms and a verandah."

Our Special Artist's Illustration of the battle shows the various groups of figures and incidents of the day's work seen within the hollow square formed by the British troops, ranged in the order which has been described.

Besides the Illustrations supplied by our Special Artist, we have received from Lieutenant Crawford Caffin, R.N., of the Hind transport, two sketches of the seacoast of Zululand at Port Durnford, with the tremendous surf and swell of the sea on July 3, which prevented Sir Garnet Wolseley and his staff landing from H.M.S. Shah, and compelled them to return in that ship to Durban. The steam-tug Koodoo, commanded by Captain Twiss, the harbour-master, had taken Sir Garnet and several other officers from the Shah and met the surf-boat, as is shown in one of these Sketches; but repeated attempts to get them alongside of each other, so as to transfer the passengers to the surf-boat, were destined to end in failure. Sir Garnet was therefore obliged to go back to Natal, and to enter Zululand by the land route, losing several days before he could actually take command of the army.

THE ZULU WAR: FACSIMILE OF ENVELOPE INCLOSING LETTER FROM KETCHWAYO (CETEWAYO).

The Government returns of emigration from the Mersey for the month of July have been issued. They show that eighty-two vessels sailed, carrying 10,598 passengers, of whom 6653 were English, 38 Scotch, 1037 Irish, 3293 foreigners, and 177 nationality not given. The destination of the emigrants are thus given:—United States, 8478 (of whom 4580 were English, 22 Scotch, 961 Irish, 2887 foreign, and 28 undefined); British North America, 1842 (of whom 1400 were English); Australia, 79; South America, 111; East Indies, 42; West Indies, 4; China, 2; and West Coast of Africa, 40. The figures show a decrease, compared with those for June, when 11,541 persons sailed from the Mersey; and these again are less than the figures for May; but the emigration of the past month is greater by 3937 persons than during July, 1878.

RIDES IN ZULULAND.

We have received the following letters from our Correspondent with General Hope Crealock's division of the army, which advanced by the coast route from the Tugela into Zululand:—

"Port Durnford, July 4.

"Yesterday, at three in the morning, the cavalry, consisting of the Natal Guides, the mounted infantry, Cook's Horse and four troops of Lonsdale's Horse, and two hundred of John Dunn's scouts, with several mounted Basutos, started for the camp. The first kraal we reached was eight miles beyond the river Umhlatosi. It was carefully approached, but was found deserted. At four o'clock we off-saddled for an hour, not far from Emangwene, where a military kraal, the head-quarters of a young regiment, was situated. At half-past five we reached the hill overlooking the kraal. A plan of attack was formed; two flanks were thrown out, and the centre advanced, in which were the mounted Basutos. These galloped up to the kraal, but found it was deserted. There were three or four hundred huts, placed around that of the chief in regular form. Two of the huts had doors and windows, and all the comfort of an English cottage. The chief's hut was surrounded with an intricate palisade, which would have been serviceable against the assault of a savage foe. At half-past six the kraal was set on fire, while the cavalry, at a hand-gallop, scoured the country around for cattle. A kraal, situated about one mile from Emangwene, was surrounded. Two or three Zulus were getting ready their breakfast there. They were hauled out, and sullenly laid down their arms. Some mounted Basutos appearing, these Zulus were greatly alarmed. They have more dread of men of their own colour, who would, they know, give them no quarter. A little further on two hundred Zulus fled in dismay at our approach. The spoils of the day were six or seven hundred cattle, eleven asses bred by Cetewayo, and about thirty goats. Major Barrow, who commands the cavalry, was apprehensive that the Zulus might assemble and endeavour to recapture the cattle. But they did not make the slightest attempt to oppose us. As usual, some Zulu women and children were brought in. It was strange to see a Kaffir woman in tears. Most likely, she had had her home burnt, and all that she cared for was scattered.

"A Zulu chief, with two hundred warriors, and a very large number of women and children, came to the camp here. The men surrendered and gave up their arms. Our troops, mustering about five hundred, were paraded, with flags unfurled, which made an imposing appearance. Only twenty-five old guns and two hundred assegais were delivered up by the Zulus. Such arms, indeed, are but a poor defence against the modern breechloaders. There is but little fight left among the Zulus now. Our vast preparations have terrified them, and their summer crops cannot be sown this year. The only fear is that Cetewayo has retreated into the bush; and, so long as he remains free, he will be a standing menace to Natal.

"The 91st Highlanders had a large bonfire on Wednesday, while the pipers played some lively strains, and several of the men sang excellent songs. During the evening, two or three officers danced a highland reel. It must have appeared a strange sight to the natives."

"July 8.

"Unusual activity has been shown lately, in the way of reconnaissances by the cavalry. These were formerly kept in camp, employed in stuffing saddles or other work. At the drift of the Umhlazi, especially, where a few Zulus appeared at a respectful distance, the orders given were not to go out and test the courage of the foe. But now it is different. The Zulus evidently see that they are overpowered, and have made but a feeble resistance, firing only few shots at long ranges at our mounted men, who have driven off their cattle.

"Since it was made known to Zulus what favourable terms of surrender would be allowed, district after district has made its submission, preferring to keep their cattle rather than support a tottering King. The Zulus have been no losers by this campaign. The greater number of their kraals are left intact, and the same remark applies to their cattle. They care little for losing their men in battle. But since the battle of Gingihlovo not one man has fallen in fighting in this column of our army. Meantime, death by disease, though not by the hands of the enemy in the field, has made sad havoc with our troops.

"On Friday evening, July 4, the General started from the camp with sixty mounted infantry, three troops of Lonsdale's corps, Cook's Horse, the mounted Basutos, and the invaluable scouts of John Dunn. Previously, the 91st Highlanders and part of the Naval Brigade had marched as far as the river Umhlatosi, to give support to the cavalry if needed. On the march to this river, two troops of Lonsdale's lost sight of the main body, and soon afterwards missed each other. The country was open, but with scattered clumps of palm-trees, so that a body of men might be within fifty yards of another and still be unaware of each other's proximity. Luckily, some mounted natives appeared, who soon again found the beaten track. At midnight we got to the hastily intrenched camp of the 91st near the Umhlatosi. No delay took place here; the cavalry crossed the river, and we followed the well-beaten track which leads towards the Tonga country. We went nearly as far as the King's kraal at Emangwene, which was burnt two days before. Then turning sharply to the left, we went on at a foot pace until half-past two in the morning. The command was now given to off-saddle; the cavalry were ordered to form a large square, and two hours' rest was allowed. After this the order to start was again given; but the General returned to camp, as our night guide had taken us four miles out of our way. The command then devolved upon Major Barrow. No halt was made until we reached Undini, at half-past ten o'clock. Indeed, this long ride was too much for the horses; four of them had to be left behind; one horse actually fell down from fatigue before reaching Undini. We had to recross the Umhlatosi, and then a ride of three miles through a thick bush; but afterwards the country was comparatively open. Undini itself is situated on the top of a hill without any cover. It could not have offered any resistance to an attack. This place had evidently been deserted for some weeks. The store-house there contained ingredients for making gunpowder, some Eley's cartridges, and some of Sharp's gunpowder was found there. Before we left it the kraal, which consisted of 600 huts, was burnt. Zulu warriors came in and reported a great victory over the Zulus by Lord Chelmsford. This was the first intelligence we had of the fall of Ulundi.

"We had had a severe night's ride. At half-past twelve we again started; but, as John Dunn's scouts were to return to camp by twos and threes, taking the shortest route, two of them offered to be my escort through the Engoya forest.

"Shortly after leaving Undini we reached a deep clear pool, overhung by rocks, at the bottom of a hill. It was a tempting place for a halt, and my horse sadly wanted rest; but the scouts signified that we must push on further before an 'off-saddle' could be allowed. A long distance had to be covered to reach the kraal at the other side of the Engoya. We came to a running stream, where three scouts had already arrived before us. They were undressed, or perhaps it would be more correct to say, they had taken off their red coats, and were enjoying the luxury of bathing, after their long journey of over thirty miles. One of them had a piece of soap, which speaks well for the cleanliness of the natives; but, unhappily, they can never get rid of the peculiar smell which all Kaffirs have. These scouts are Zulus, who have come over to our cause, together with John Dunn, their chief. After an off-saddle of more than an hour, a move was again made. At two in the afternoon we reached the top of the hill which overlooks the immense forest of the Engoya, which is the property of John Dunn. Here range after range of mountains could be seen stretching as far as the eye could reach, until the most distant one seemed to lose itself in the sky-line. Undini, Cetewayo's old kraal, was still blazing in the distance and sending up volumes of smoke.

"The ascent to this hill had told upon my horse. The indefatigable scouts now carried the blanket, which had previously been strapped to the saddle. After a short rest at the top of the hill, and a last gaze at the burning kraal, once the pride of Cetewayo, now to become only a heap of ashes, we entered the narrow Kaffir footpath which traverses this forest.

"It was a great relief here to get protection from the sun. Trees of various kinds grew thickly on each side. Some had fallen across the pathway, and often the scout in front had to clear away branches so as to allow my horse to pass. Nothing escaped the notice of these men. An imprint of a foot was carefully scrutinised; even a blade of grass trodden down was noticed. The scout, still leading, kept all the time a vigilant look-out on each side, moving his head rapidly this way and that. He was keen to espy any hidden danger; and, no doubt, there were numbers of Zulus in the forest. But they had made up their minds to surrender, and it did not enter into their heads to attack the white man now. Their kraals at the other side of the Engoya were left untouched, as they had been wise enough to surrender in time to save both their homes and cattle.

"The roots of the trees at each side of the forest path often entwined themselves into fantastic shapes, rising up above the ground, which lent a wild and weird aspect to this lonely scene. Two hours' ride brought us to a stream, which was clear and pure, and delightfully cool. As we neared the other side, which is towards the sea, the path became more difficult. It was frequently obstructed by rocks imbedded in the earth. At last, in one of the most picturesque spots I have seen in South Africa, the path seemed to end. Here a trickling stream had formed a pool, the water of which, tumbling over a ledge of rocks, lost itself among the tall trees which skirted both its banks. African oak, lignum vitæ, and other trees indigenous to this soil grew here in profusion. The pathway seemed never ending, but at last we reached a grassy slope, a pleasant relief after the three hours' ride through this forest. A little further on we again entered a continuation of this forest. A young Zulu warrior quietly met us here. He was on his way to surrender himself. He seemed perfectly at ease, so perhaps he had known the scouts before the war broke out, as they belonged to this very district. Just as darkness set in we reached the open, where only eight days ago the cavalry had made a patrol in force, and had been fired on by Zulus hidden in the forest, who had driven their cattle in for shelter before our eyes. It would have been impossible to have dislodged them without great loss of life, so they were left masters of the situation. John Dunn's house could be seen distinctly on the right—poplar-trees grew on either side. The roof appearing untouched gave one the idea that the Zulus had spared this cottage; but it had been sacked, and the furniture was destroyed. A china basin had been recovered from one of the kraals after a raid and brought back to the owner. A kraal, temporarily formed by sheets of corrugated iron roofing, was fixed as the resting-place for the night. This formed good protection against the wind and rain. Next morning was wretchedly wet and miserable. We now went through plains scattered with palm-trees and a few bushes. Here the Zulus abounded, seeking shelter under every available bush. Some were busily thatching the half-burnt kraals. Others were minding their cattle. The women were carrying wood. The scene was a peaceful one. Two Zulus who were minding their cattle suddenly sprung up from the long grass, and as quickly hid themselves again. This was to show that they were friends. My two guides shouted their war song in bravado as we neared the kraals which were inhabited. Zulu men, women, and children came creeping from their shelter to look on the face of a white man. They seemed to have no vindictive feeling. It was simply from curiosity that they braved the rain to look upon the solitary horseman. No doubt they were happy and well pleased at the thought of being again at peace with their powerful foe. The Zulus who slept at the kraal I noticed were treated with the utmost kindness by the scouts, who gave them food and allowed them to share the warmth of the fire. A breakfast off mealies roasted over a fire was not a very nourishing breakfast, and glad I was to get to camp in time for the midday meal."

GRANTS OF THE ALBERT MEDAL.

Tuesday's Gazette announces that the Queen has conferred the Albert Medal of the First Class on Henry Davies, collier, and John Harris, mason, both of Abercarn; and Albert Medals of the Second Class on William Simons, pumpman; Thomas Herbert, pumpman; Miles Moseley, overman; Charles Preen, collier; William Walters, collier; and Louis Harris, overman, all of Abercarn. The account of the services in respect of which the decoration has been conferred is thus given:—

On Sept. 11, 1878, an explosion of fire-damp occurred in the Abercarn Colliery, in the county of Monmouth, whereby 260 persons perished, on which occasion the greatest possible gallantry was exhibited in saving about ninety lives. The force of the explosion was terrific, doing great damage to the roadways and to the bottom of the shaft, and setting the coal and timber on fire in several places. Into this state of confusion and apparent danger to life these men, without hesitation, descended, and, although they discovered that fires were raging in the mine, and that, consequently, the chances of another explosion were considerable, they remained at their gallant and humane work of rescue, not reascending the shaft until they had satisfied themselves that no one was left alive below. Henry Davies, after being down the Abercarn pit all the afternoon, with those recommended for the second class medal, volunteered to descend the Cwmcarn Pit (a shaft two miles distant), with a view of conveying to the explorers who had attempted to enter the workings from that side an order from those in charge of the operations to come out, as, in consequence of the fires underground continuing to burn fiercely, and large quantities of gas were pouring out of the workings, a second explosion was deemed to be inevitable, which, had it occurred, would assuredly have killed every man below ground. Henry Davies, after being deserted by two men who refused to accompany him further, and when he must have felt that there was little or no chance of his coming alive out of the pit, pursued his course alone for 500 or 600 yards, and heroically accomplished the object of his mission. John Harris went down the pit with those recommended for the second-class medal. Having descended to a depth of 295 yards, the progress of the cage was stayed by the damaged state of the shaft. John Harris got off the cage, and, sliding down a guide-rope, reached the bottom, where, although he knew well that any moment might be his last, he remained for some hours, until all who were alive (some of whom were badly burnt and otherwise injured) reached the cage by his assistance, and were taken to the surface in safety.

A novel military experiment was tried on Monday at Aldershott, the object being to ascertain practically within how short a time a battery of artillery can be got into a train and out of it. About eighty men, ninety horses, and six guns were tested in this way. The time occupied was forty minutes.

CANADA.—DOWN THE ST. LAWRENCE.

In a previous article some suggestions were offered for tourists to Niagara, which may now fitly be supplemented with a few words on the pleasantest way back to Quebec. Back to Quebec. For the first visit to the Falls is rarely the last; when every place of interest in Canada West has been visited, the tourist is sure to return for one more gaze at those sublime cataracts midway in the restless river that joins Lakes Erie and Ontario. Aye, and for one more gaze at that restless river itself; for, mad, ungovernable stream that it is, there is, perhaps, scarcely another in the world more beautiful—neither the Hudson nor the "storied Rhine" excepted. The Niagara is really the St. Lawrence under a different name. Ten miles below its mighty plunge at Goat Island, it loses itself in Lake Ontario; but near Kingston, at the north-eastern extremity of the lake, it gathers itself together again as a river.

Having finally turned his back upon the Falls and the Niagara River, the tourist finds little to interest him in the old town of Niagara, and hastens on board one of the two smart little steamers that ply between the quondam capital of Canada and Toronto: on reaching the latter city he cannot do better than secure a place in one of the St. Lawrence boats. The river transit to Quebec is much preferable to a journey on the Grand Trunk Railway, for other reasons besides the dilatory propensities of the company. The river scenery is infinitely more pleasing to the eye than the charred forest stumps and everlasting snake-fences of the land journey, to say nothing of the excitement of shooting the rapids.

Let us suppose, then, that we are taking the water route, and that we are nearing the eastern end of Lake Ontario. We are threading our way among a number of beautiful little islands that stud the bosom of this part of the lake—where it merges into the River St. Lawrence. These are the "Thousand Isles." They are scattered over the river for fifty miles of its course downwards, and are for the most part clothed in the richest vegetation. Luxuriating in their solitudes may still be found deer, foxes, racoons, squirrels, and almost every variety of water-fowl; but all signs of animal life rapidly vanish as we approach, and not until the heavy thud of our engines has died away do they come forth again from their shady retreats. But it is not always the steamers that frighten away the timid creatures; for on several of the islands are to be seen the white woodwork and green verandahs of hotels and boarding-houses. Clayton and Gananoque are select summer resorts, and Alexandria Bay, on the American side, is becoming a very popular watering-place.

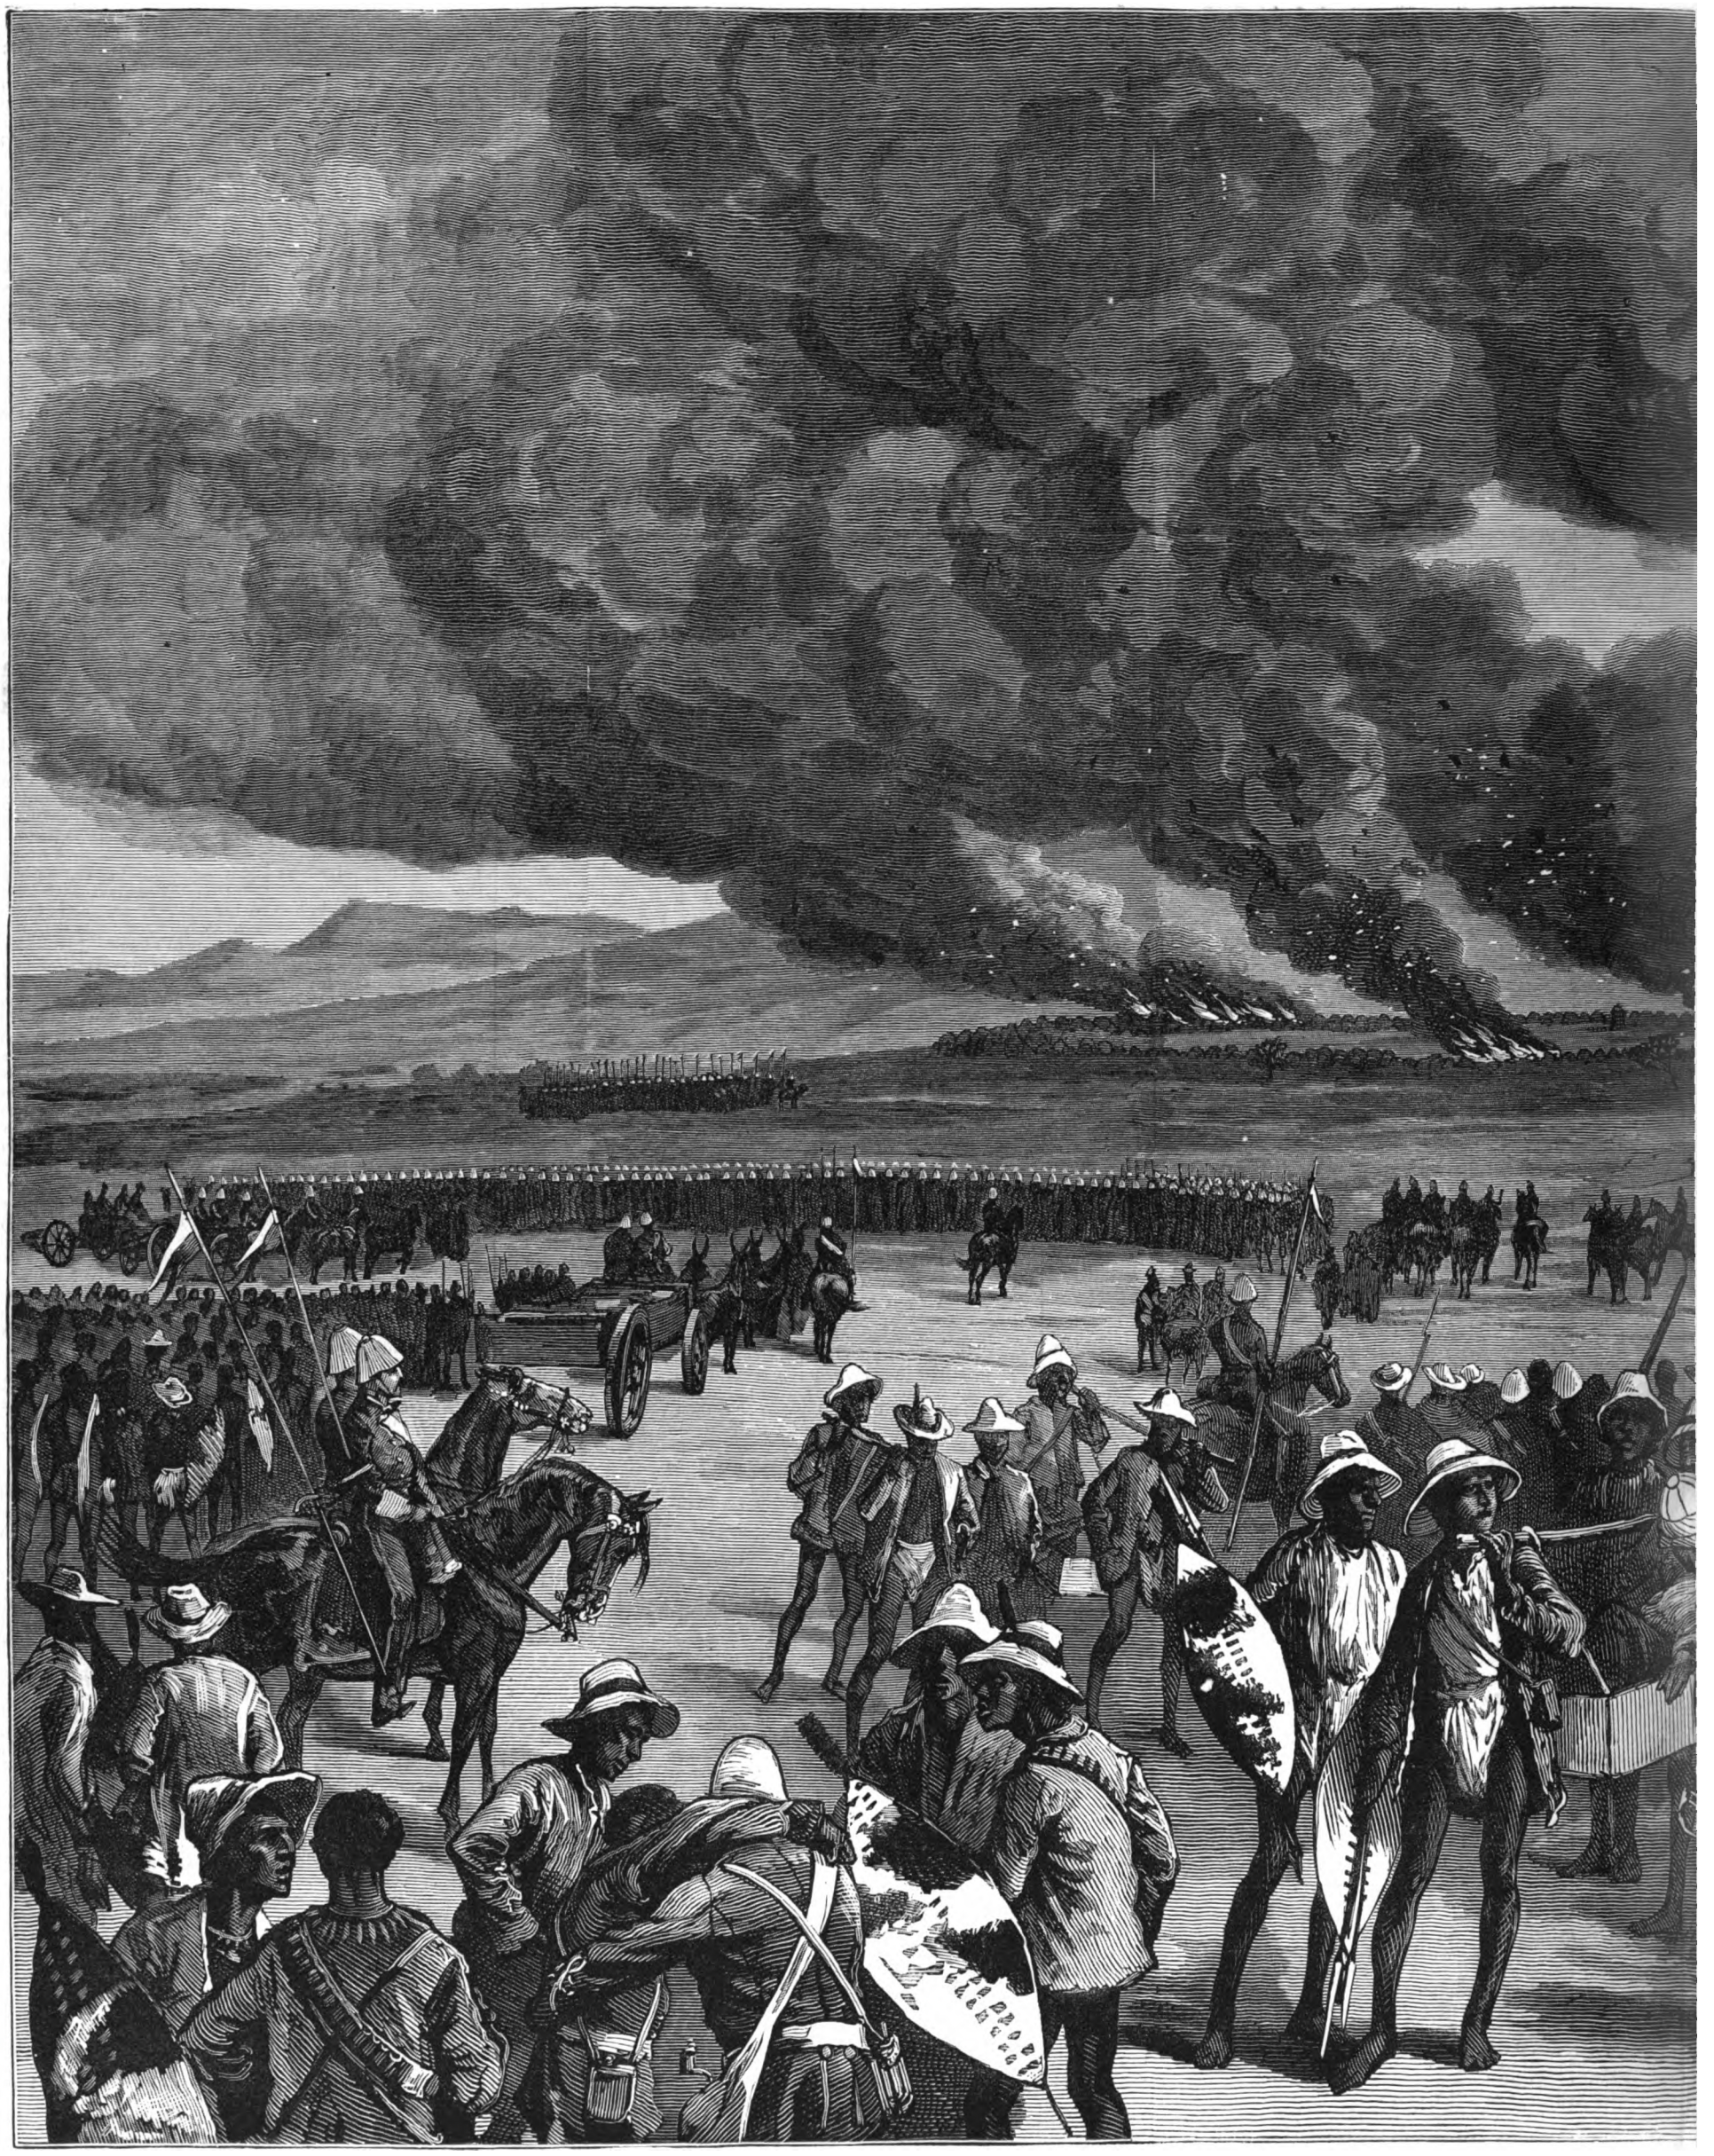
There are far more than a thousand isles, if we take into account the naked rocks that rise above the river's surface, mingling their sombre hues with the bright verdure on the larger islands. After threading our way in and out among these charming scraps of land the river becomes gradually narrower until at Brockville, on the Canadian side, it is scarcely two miles across. A little lower down are the first of the St. Lawrence rapids: soon passed, and serving but as a prelude to the wild race down the Long Sault Rapids—which latter are nine miles in length, and are run, with all steam on, in about a quarter of an hour. The next hundred miles is varied and interesting, the river spreading out in one part to a breadth of five miles, where there is another goodly sprinkling of islets Farther on, in more confined waters, are the Coteau Rapids and the Cedars and Cascades. Then the river again widens, and we steam past Nuns' Island—once an Indian burial-ground, but now belonging to the Grey Nunnery at Montreal. A few miles more and we come to the desperately exciting passage of the Lachine Rapids—the wildest and grandest on the river.

Spell-bound and holding our breath, we are strangely fascinated by the seething, screaming waters that are carrying us headlong downwards, and gaze anxiously upon some dark rocks that here and there raise their dripping heads above the foaming current; but our Indian helmsman steers our boat with wonderful precision, his eagle eye being always fixed unflinchingly ahead. Like the wind we rush down the angry rapids; when suddenly an island springs up before us, and we scarcely breathe—that is, if we have never before made this exciting passage. We seem about to be hurled headlong on certain death, but in an instant our trusty Indian steersman lets the wheel spin round, and the bows of our gallant ship turn aside, and, passing close to the island, we bear down into the centre of the boisterous channel, whose dancing waters are still white with foam and spray.

Notwithstanding the apparent danger of running the St. Lawrence rapids, I believe there has never yet been an accident. It is scarcely necessary to say that all the rapids are flanked by canals for ships going up-stream.

One of the most interesting sights in connection with the rapids is to see them "shot" by the huge rafts that are constantly coming down-stream to Montreal and Quebec. The rafts are made up of saw-logs and great timbers—called by the lumbermen "square-sticks"—which have been cut higher up in the western districts; they are lashed together with very strong chains and thongs from the bark of the bass-wood. The larger rafts have roughly constructed shanties "on board," for the shelter of the bold raftsmen.

We have scarcely left the Lachine Rapids, when the fair city of Montreal rises before us in the distance, and presently we discern the spires and towers of its cathedrals and churches. It is here, around the Island of Montreal, that the waters of the Ottawa mingle with those of the St. Lawrence, giving to the river for some distance a slightly reddish tinge.



Leaving behind us the commercial capital of the Dominion, we proceed on our way to Quebec, now only 180 miles distant. In its course between these two cities the river expands into the dimensions of a lake. Lake St. Peter, as it is called, is twenty-four miles in length and nine in breadth. It is said to be the most stormy body of water on the American continent, many of the above mentioned log-rafts suffering shipwreck on its treacherous rocks and shores. At the French town of Three Rivers the little lake terminates, the river here resuming its natural character.

After passing a few more bends in the river, looms before us the lofty promontory upon which stands the noble old city of Quebec. It stands out very prominently against the clear blue sky, especially the citadel by which it is crowned—whence issued, in 1759, Montcalm and his Frenchmen, intent upon hurling from the precipice they had scaled Wolfe's gallant little army. The river-banks, above and below Quebec, are very picturesque, and at times highly imposing; but travellers are generally so busy here with thoughts of home and the country they are leaving, or vice versâ, and so intent upon looking after their luggage, that these lovely banks are often quite forgotten.

Having reached Quebec, the tour of the St. Lawrence is by no means over; however, as the rest of the journey belongs to the ocean passage, no more need be said here about the river scenes. But after changing from the river to the ocean steamer, let not the tourist be so engrossed with his luggage and preparations for being sick, as to quite forget the river banks; or, if he must, let him at least remain on deck until the steamer has passed the majestic Falls of Montmorenci, whose distant spray can be seen almost immediately after leaving Quebec.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

In the 10-inch gun competition at Shoeburyness on the 13th inst. the 9th Kent won the first prize. On the 14th the repository badges of the National Artillery Association were won by the 2nd and 5th detachments of the 10th Kent (Royal Arsenal). In the Royal Artillery 10-inch gun competitions the School of Gunnery Brigade won the first prize; the 7th Brigade, Portsmouth detachment, winning second prize. The second division was inspected by Colonel Hastings, who was accompanied by Earl Percy, M.P., Colonel Harcourt, M.P., and the officers of the garrison, and who said he had observed a marked improvement in drill and in practice. In the officers' repository competition yesterday week the Volunteer Artillery officers of the North were the victors. This contest concluded the work of the meeting.

Last Saturday the Volunteer Engineers who had been assembled in camp for a fortnight before at Chatham were inspected by Colonel Sir John Stokes, R.E., who, in addressing them, praised them for their drill and appearance, and said that no regular troops could have marched past more solidly than they had done that day.

The prizes won at the meeting of the Essex Rifle Association were distributed on the 13th inst. The Challenge Shield, the gift of Mr. O. E. Coope, M.P., was won by the 3rd Essex Administrative Battalion (Ilford). Private Rippon, of the Chelmsford Corps, took the Association Cup. Captain Copland, of the same corps, carried off the late Lady Waldegrave's prize, and also the Grand Aggregate Prize.

During the week ending Saturday last a series of contests has been progressing at the Rainham Ranges, Essex, among the 2nd and 3rd City of London Battalions, for prizes presented by most of the leading Livery Companies of the City, and handsome silver challenge cups by General Lord Napier of Magdala, Colonel Laurie, M.P., and others. The Farringdon Ward Prizes were won by Privates Walsh and Bartholomew, Corporal Spilling, Sergeant Clifford, Private Sorrell, and Corporal Bennett; those of the Saddlers' Company by Colour-Sergeant Harvey, Sergeant Peters, Private Minihan, Corporal Scarborough, and Sergeant Hills; and those of the Drapers' Company by Colour-Sergeant Wells, Assistant-Sergeant-Major Rattey, Colour-Sergeant Gray, Sergeant Grover, Private Bruce, and Private Reiman. Private Trate won the first of the Mercers' Company's prizes. For the Napier Challenge Cup three selected men from each company fired over the same distances, and the cup and Napier badges were won by A (Captain Crossman's) company. The losing companies in the latter contest fired independently for two minutes at 200 yards, the prizes offered being won by D, G, and M. Lieutenant-Colonel Laurie's cup, in the second stage, went to Corporal Bruce, and the officers' challenge cup to Lieutenant Hepworth. In nearly all the contests points for drill were added to the shooting score, but they are not given here.—On Saturday the 2nd London had the use of the range for their annual competition. The prize-list includes gifts from most of the City companies and some of the wards. The battalion prizes were fired for on Saturday. At 200 and 400 yards the winners were:—Sergeant Lowder, Private Richardson, Lance-Sergeant White, Sergeant Prosser, Private Cultriss, Sergeant George, Colour-Sergeant Cooper, Private Houghton, Colour-Sergeant Rayner, Private Lawrence, Private H. Houghton, Lieutenant Wadmore, Colour-Sergeant Froggatt, and Sergeant Pyles.—On Monday a rifle contest for several prizes of plate, presented by the leading livery companies of the City, took place among the 2nd London. For the prize presented by the Worshipful Company of Merchant Taylors, which takes the form of a challenge clock, a silver jewel and money prizes being added, nineteen competitors entered, and Lance-Sergeant White won easily. In the second competition the prize was a challenge cup presented by the Worshipful Company of Joiners. Richardson was awarded the cup, jewel, and first money prize; Sergeant Hart took the second, and Private H. Houghton the third. The third competition was for the Company of Salters' Challenge Cup. Private Richardson won the cup, jewels, and money; Cultriss took second prize, and E. Houghton third prize. The final competition was for Mrs. Rimington's Challenge Cup. Richardson was again the winner; Corporal Nicholls took second prize, and for the third Sergeant White and E. Houghton tied. On shooting off both made magpies, but in the second essay White scored a bull's-eye, and won.—The shooting was resumed on Tuesday at the Rainham ranges under most adverse circumstances as regards weather, rain at times descending so heavily as to render the targets almost indistinguishable. Singularly, however, the shooting was of a high order. In the afternoon, with the Martini-Henry the splendid aggregate of 100 points was made at the usual Queen's distances of 200, 500, and 600 yards, seven rounds—viz., 34 at 200, 34 at 500, and 32 at 600; and there were many other high figures not in competition. In the morning the Ward of Vintry Cup of the London Rifle Brigade was fired for at the same distances with Snider rifles, the contest resulting in favour of Corporal Mardell, one of this year's "Sixty" in the contest for the Queen's Prize, who on this occasion made 81 points, a feat in which he was equalled by a less-known shot, Private Acres. The shooting for the Broad-street Ward Cup of the same regiment was not quite so good, the highest score being 78, made by Private Levick, next to whom was Sergeant Hall, with 72, and Colour-Sergeant Lowe with 63. A cup of the H (Cordwainers') company was also shot for at the same distances, for which Private Allison, a Queen's silver medallist, made 79, and Private Howell, 72. The full scores were not obtainable. In the afternoon twelve competitors of the 2nd London Rifles contested the prizes of G company of that regiment, presented by Captain Baron Celli, Lieutenant Keene, and others. Eight prizes were offered, but, with the exception of the first four scores, the shooting was indifferent, chiefly owing to the rain. The ranges were 200 and 400 yards, seven shots, at class targets. At the first distance Colour-Sergeant Cooper put on 26 out of a possible 28 with the Snider, and there was only one point difference between him and the next two, while two others made 23 each. At 400 yards Sergeant Cooper brought his total up to 47 points, and was awarded the silver company badge, on which the City arms are worked, the silver medal, and first money prize; Sergeant Yarnold, with 40 points, took second prize; Private E. Green, with 45, third; the other winners being Private E. Reeves, Private T. Robinson, Private R. Amey, and Private J. Moody. A silver cup was offered in the extra lines, and was tied for by Reeves and Green, the former winning on shooting off with a bull's-eye and centre as against two centres.

On Tuesday the results of the annual prize contest of the Tower Hamlets Rifle Brigade, which was begun on the previous day at the Ilford ranges, were announced. Eighty-five members competed, the prizes, which were fired for at the ranges of 200, 500, and 600 yards, seven shots, Wimbledon rules and targets, being won as follows:—Private W. Bullimore, 78 points; Sergeant J. Sage, 73; Sergeant Arle, 72; Private H. Bullimore, 71; Private R. Bullimore, 69; Captain Smith, 69; Colour-Sergeant Costin, 68; Private S. Adams, 67; Corporal Clapp, 67; Sergeant Moore, 67; Private Curnow, 66; Bugler Gardiner, 66; Sergeant Hendrik, 65; and Sergeant Noble, 64.

On Wednesday morning the St. George's Rifles compete for their regimental prizes, which are, including the challenge plates, of the value of several hundred pounds.

The contest for the Holms' Challenge Trophy is fixed for to-day (Saturday); and on Monday and Tuesday next the Hon. Artillery Company compete for a long and valuable list of prizes presented by the Prince of Wales (Captain-General and Hon. Colonel), Colonel Loyd-Lindsay, V.C., M.P., the commandant, and many others.

Last Saturday the London and Westminster (46th Middlesex) held their annual rifle contest at the Government ranges, Milton, near Gravesend. The "field firing" prize of the 2nd Middlesex Rifles has been won at Caterham by Quartermaster-Sergeant Bacchus's team; and the "field and staff officers' prize," for volley firing, at ranges at unknown distances, by Private P. H. Jones's team.

The Camp of Instruction formed by the 37th Middlesex (Bloomsbury) at Hampstead was brought to a close last Saturday. A number of officers, non-commissioned officers, and men were allowed to attend their civil occupations during the day, attending drill night and morning. The various details incidental to camp life were strictly carried out. On Saturday the camp was officially inspected by Colonel the Hon. E. H. T. Digby, Coldstream Guards, and at the close the prizes were distributed by Mrs. Stedall, wife of the commanding officer.

A match, which became very exciting towards the finish, was shot on Monday at Brighton between the Croydon and Brighton corps. The wind was very treacherous from the left. The teams were composed of twenty a side, seven shots at 200, 500, and 600 yards. On leaving the first range the Brighton men were 12 ahead, at the second range they were beaten by 21 points, but at the longest range they beat their opponents by 23 points; thus winning by 14. The gross scores were:—Brighton, 1297; Croydon, 1283. In previous matches the losing corps had been the winners.

Last week the Edinburgh Rifle Volunteer Brigade camped out for the first time, and the experiment was a complete success. The camping-ground was the portion of Lanark Moor usually occupied by the Royal Lanarkshire Militia during their annual training-time. Fortunately the weather was delightful, and to this in great measure the satisfaction of all concerned was due. Altogether the men in camp numbered 450; and, while there was no laxity of discipline, there was much real enjoyment. Regimental duties were strictly exacted and carefully performed; but when off duty the men enjoyed a great deal of liberty, of which they made good and rational use. The statutory four-days' drill having been completed on Thursday, Friday was set apart for athletic sports; but part of the day was occupied with an official inspection of the brigade by Colonel Dalziel, the Inspector of the Auxiliary Forces in Scotland.

A series of regulations have been issued from the War Office respecting the allowances to be paid to volunteer corps attending camps of instruction, which set forth that "to cover the expenses which volunteer corps are necessarily subject to in the formation of regimental camps, the sum of 2s. a day for a period not exceeding six days annually will be allowed to volunteer corps for each officer, non-commissioned officer, and private who attends the camp and remains there for a period of not less than three consecutive days and nights, exclusive of the days of assembly and return. When a consolidated corps forms a regimental camp, an additional allowance of 2s. 6d., to cover travelling expenses, will be granted for each officer, non-commissioned officer, and private on whose behalf the camp allowance is payable, if the place at which the camp is held is more than five miles from the head-quarters of the corps. If, however, the officer, non-commissioned officer, or private shall belong to a detached troop or company, or detached corps having its authorised drill station at a greater distance than five miles from the head-quarters of the consolidated corps, the rate of the additional camp allowance to cover travelling expenses shall in this case be 5s. instead of 2s. 6d., provided that the place of encampment is more than five miles from the drill-station of the detached company, and that the allowance for united drill be not drawn for the troop, company, or attached corps. In the case of the formation of a regimental camp by an administrative battalion, an additional camp allowance of 5s. to cover travelling expenses will be granted for each officer, non-commissioned officer, and private on behalf of whom camp allowance is payable, if he belongs to a corps whose head-quarters are more than five miles from the place at which the regimental camp is held, or if, being a member of the permanent staff, the head-quarters of the battalion to which he belongs is more than five miles distant from the camp. This allowance will, however, only be granted on condition that the travelling allowance for attending united drill, under paragraph 684, be not issued to the corps for which additional camp allowance is drawn under the present paragraph." The regulations take effect from April 1 last.

The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts has recently received, in new subscriptions, donations, and legacies, £11,053 4s. 10d.

An influential public meeting was held at Lowestoft on Monday for the purpose of discussing the desirability of attempting the acclimatisation of fish in the Norfolk and Suffolk waters. Lord Waveney presided, and among those present were Sir R. J. Buxton, M.P., Mr. J. J. Colman, M.P., the Mayor of Norwich, Mr. F. Buckland, Mr. E. Birkbeck, M.P., Colonel Leathes, Mr. Bartlett, Naturalist of the Royal Zoological Gardens, and Mr. Brougham, secretary to the Thames Anglers' Preservation Society. On the motion of Colonel Leathes, seconded by Mr. E. Birkbeck, it was resolved—"That it is desirable to introduce and acclimatise within Norfolk and Suffolk waters fish not now found there."

Mr. W. F. Rock, a London citizen, has presented to the inhabitants of Barnstaple, his native town, a park of between seven and eight acres in extent, pleasantly situated beside the River Taw. It is a continuation of the plot of ground known as Chanter's-green, which was dedicated to the public in 1863. A most enthusiastic demonstration of the townspeople was made on Tuesday, the 12th inst., when the park was handed over to the town authorities. On the procession reaching the park it was met by Mr. Rock, who, with the Town Council, ascended Rock Mound. Mr. Rock then, in an excellent speech, presented the title deeds to the town clerk, and mentioned that it was his intention to build some villas on a portion of the estate which he had reserved, in order that the rent should sustain the keeping up of the park. He then offered up an affectionate and earnest prayer, thanking the Lord that he had been spared to see that day, and to be of use to his fellowmen, and asking Him to look down upon the little spot and bless it. The Doxology was then sung; and Mr. Avery, the Mayor, thanked Mr. Rock, dwelling upon his many benefactions to the town, and wishing him many years of health and happiness. Mr. Payne, Mr. Rock's brother-in-law, has given a handsome lodge at the park.

As the Home-Rule demonstration, held annually at Lurgan on Aug. 15, was passing along one of the streets in that town a collision occurred between the processionists and a number of factory operatives; and a riot ensued, in attempting to quell which the police shot a lad dead and wounded several other persons. Further rioting of a serious character took place on Saturday night. An onslaught was made by the Roman Catholic mob, who attacked the Protestant residents in Edward-street and wrecked their houses. Endeavours were made by the police to restrain the rioters, but ineffectually, owing to the darkness of the night, and upwards of twenty of their number were injured. The Protestant party retaliated. On Sunday night the town was quiet, but an uneasy feeling prevailed. An effigy of Captain Redmond was burned at Lurgan on Monday night, but there was no serious rioting, and on Tuesday morning one hundred of the extra police left the town.

Mr. Welsh, the Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States at our Court, left London on Tuesday for America. The Times says his departure will cause general regret in this country, but it is satisfactory to feel that it has not been due to any public difficulty arising on this or on the other side of the Atlantic. He withdraws at a favourable moment from a position which he has filled in a manner equally gratifying to his own countrymen and to the English people. He leaves no clamorous arrears of unsettled questions to his successor. The only topic of controversy which has arisen during the period of Mr. Welsh's mission, and which remains open for further diplomatic efforts, is the claim of the United States with respect to the British North American Fisheries. But this is a trivial matter, which, so far as one can see, excites only the most languid interest in the United States, while in this country it is scarcely remembered or understood. In former days, however, disputes as insignificant stirred up bad blood in both countries. At last, however, we appear to have reached a point at which old feuds have faded out of sight. It is manifest that in the United States, as in this country, all except a very small minority of the people are desirous, not only that the two great English-speaking States should be at peace, but that their friendly intercourse should not be interrupted by any suspicions or jealousies. Seldom has this kindly disposition been more conspicuous than at the close of Mr. Welsh's mission; never has it been more frankly shown than by the departing Minister. There is every reason to believe that Mr. Welsh's successor will follow the same course and give expression to the same sentiments.

10. Castles

Of course he should have played 10. P to Q 4th before castling. The move in the text is an oversight that, occurring to any ordinary player, would have deprived the game of all interest; but in Mr. Blackburne's case the loss of his Queen for two minor pieces serves as a spur to his ingenuity, and the resource of his defence is as admirable as it is instructive.

10.	B to B 4th (ch)
11. P to Q 4th	B takes P (ch)
12. Q takes B

Forced; for, if 12. K to R sq, mate follows

WHITE (Mr. B.)	BLACK (Mr. E.)
on the move; and if 12. R to B 2nd, then 11. Q takes P, &c.
12.	Kt takes Q
13. B takes P	Kt to B 6th (ch)

It is necessary to prevent the check by discovery.

14. P takes Kt	Q takes P
15. P takes P	Q takes P (ch)
16. K to R sq	Kt to B 3rd
17. Kt takes Kt	Q to R 6th (ch)
18. B to R 2nd	B takes B
19. R to K B 2nd	K to K 3rd
20. Kt to Q 5th	Q R to K B sq

The coup juste. White threatens to win the Queen by 21. Kt to B 4th (ch), and if, to avoid this loss, Black had captured the Kt with the Bishop, his King would soon have been exposed to the combined action of the adverse Rooks. This would not count for much in the long run, but it would give White some chances.

21. Kt to B 4th (ch)	R takes Kt
22. R takes R	R to K Kt sq
23. R to K B 2nd	B to Q Kt 4th

Good enough to win; but he might also have played 23. B to K 7th, and announced mate in three moves.

24. Q R to K sq	Q to K R 5th.

White resigned.

Played at Moscow, between Mr. AYLMER MAUDE and another Amateur.
(Allgaier Gambit.)

WHITE (Mr. M.)	BLACK (Mr. A.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th
2. P to K B 4th	P takes P
3. Kt to K B 3rd	P to K Kt 4th
4. P to K R 4th	P to Kt 5th
5. Kt to Kt 5th	P to K R 3rd
6. Kt takes P	K takes Kt
7. B to B 4th (ch)	P to Q 4th
8. B takes P (ch)	K to Kt 2nd

Inferior to 8. K to K sq

9. B takes Kt P	B takes B
10. Q takes P (ch)	K to B 2nd
11. Q to R 5th (ch)	K to K 3rd

Too adventurous by half. He should have played the King to Kt 2nd, after which White cannot do better than draw by perpetual check.

12. Q to B 5th (ch)	K to Q 3rd
13. P to Q 4th	Q to K 2nd
14. Kt to B 3rd	P to R 3rd
15. B takes P (ch)	K to B 3rd
16. B to K 5th	R to R 2nd

If 16. B to Kt 2nd, White continues with 17. B takes B, and if then 17. Q takes B, Black will be mated in two moves.

17. Q to Kt 6th (ch)	K to Q 2nd
18. Q takes Kt	Kt to Q B 3rd
19. Kt to Q 5th	Q to B 2nd
20. Kt to B 6th (ch)	K to K 2nd
21. Q takes R, and wins.

We have received a prospectus for a new periodical, entitled the Chess Monthly, the first number of which is announced to be published in September next, by James Wade, 18, Tavistock-street, Covent-garden, at the price of a shilling. Seeing that London has already a Chessplayers' Chronicle issued monthly at half the cost, there does not appear to be any good reason for attempting to establish another magazine running on precisely the same lines—news, games (original and selected), problems, and reviews, &c. It is, however, a matter for the consideration of the promoters of the new adventure whether or not there is any genuine demand for their wares. It concerns the public only, as suggesting the reflection that a great deal of talent must be unnecessarily diffused, which if concentrated might serve to produce a chess journal worthy of the Victorian age.

It appears from a Parliamentary return that the total amount of income charged with the tax under Schedule D (trades and professions) in Great Britain last year was £131,980,647. This shows an increase of £1,154,000 over the previous year. The number of persons paying the tax was 397,750, being an increase of 15,778 over the number in 1877. There are 1487 persons whose incomes are assessed between £900 and £1000; while between £1000 and £2000 there are 12,403; under £3000, 3860; under £4000, 1824; under £5000, 980; under £10,000, 1870; under £50,000, 994; over £50,000, ninety.

Coloured Extra Supplement.

VIEWS ON THE RHINE.

The romantic scenery along the banks of this noble German river, ascending its stream from Bonn to Mainz or Mayence, has become familiar to English tourists since Byron's "Childe Harold" and Bulwer's "Pilgrims of the Rhine," not to speak of Thomas Hood's comic narrative of travel and the adventures of the Kicklebury Family in later days, made this topic a literary commonplace almost too trite for passing allusion. Yet there is an abiding interest still felt in the sight of those "castled crags," those haughty strongholds of mediæval princes, prelates, knights, and barons, perched in their independent pride high upon the summits of the jutting rocks above the ever-flowing stream. These are characteristic memorials of past European history, some of which are represented in the Colour-printed Engravings this week given to our subscribers; and many a travelling party, at the present season, will be delighted to look from the deck of the Rhine steam-boat, now at the fair vineyards, orchards, and corn-fields on both shores of that river, now at the conspicuous objects which may at once be recognised from the Views we published to-day.

The Katz, which is opposite St. Goar, some twenty miles above Coblentz, is the ruin of an old castle which was erected at the end of the fourteenth century at the entrance to the valley of the Forstbach. Just above this place begins the Lurlei, a part of the river extremely narrow, overhung by almost perpendicular cliffs 440 ft. high, and with an extremely rapid current. There is a fabled Syren of the Rhine haunting the perilous pass, and seeking to lure the boatman to destruction; but steam-boat traffic is exempt from the dangerous influence of her magic spells.

The Stolzenfels, which is not far from Coblentz, at the Capellen railway station, is a castle of stately dignity, rebuilt some forty years since by the late King Frederick William of Prussia, then Crown Prince, but in the antique style, with battlemented towers of reddish stone. It was here that he entertained Queen Victoria on her first visit to Germany, in 1845. The grounds are beautiful, and there is a glorious view of the Lahn Valley, lying westward, on the opposite or left bank of the river. Stolzenfels was originally built for the residence of the Archbishops of Treves, who were temporal princes and potentates of considerable importance in the Middle Ages.

Rheinstein, in like manner, shows the worldly power and pride of the Elector Archbishop of Mainz and his successors for many generations, beginning so far back as the twelfth century, when this lofty seat of martial prelacy was constructed, half-way between Bacharach and Bingen, in the heart of the famous Rhenish wine district.

Some two hours before reaching this place by steam-boat, tourists will have remarked the Pfalz, an ancient castellated building on a low islet, very different from the high perched towers of feudal strength already noticed. It is probably of the fifteenth century, and was designed less for warlike defence than for a guard-house and toll-house commanding the passage up and down the river, in the interest of the Prince Palatine.

Falkenberg, which has also been called Reichenstein and Königstein, is one of the more ancient baronial fortresses. It was destroyed in 1282 by Rodolph of Hapsburg, founder of the Imperial House of Germany and Austria. The insolence of those Rhenish nobles, Counts, Barons, and others, who practised continual extortions and acts of violence, was found unbearable. Commercial towns leagued together, in Germany as in Flanders and in Italy, to overthrow the petty tyrants of the feudal system, and became the ally of crowned monarchs in that work of needful reform.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated Aug. 6, 1870) with two codicils (dated Nov. 6, 1872, and Nov. 9, 1874) of the Right Hon. Frances Theodora, Dowager Countess of Morton, late of No. 45, Lower Brook-street, who died on the 12th ult., was proved on the 2nd inst. by the Hon. Edward William Douglas, the son, and the Hon. and Rev. Douglas Hamilton Gordon, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £18,000. The testatrix gives the china presented by the King of Saxony, with the cabinet containing the same, to her son, the Earl of Morton; and devises certain property, to which she was entitled in reversion, in favour of her younger children. After making sundry bequests to children and others, she appoints her daughter, Lady Agnes Charlotte Douglas, residuary legatee.

The will (dated April 15, 1878) with two codicils (dated April 15 and May 29 in the same year) of Mr. Philip Longmore, late of The Castle, Hertford, and of Ardeley Bury, Herts, who died on the 18th ult., was proved on the 6th inst. by the Rev. Philip Alexander Longmore and Colonel Charles Matthew Longmore, the sons, Charles Elton Longmore, the grandson, and George Schuyler Cardew, M.D., the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. The testator devises the Ardeley Bury estate, with the furniture and effects at the mansion house, to his said two sons and grandson; and, subject to some bequests, he leaves the residue of his property as to seven eighths to his two sons and five daughters, and the remaining one eighth upon trust for the widow and children of his deceased son, Matthew Skinner Longmore.

The Scotch confirmation (dated the 22nd ult.), under seal of the Sheriff of the county of Argyll, of the will of Sir Donald Campbell, Bart., late of Dunstaffnage, Argyleshire, who died at Aix-les-Bains, in France, on June 8 last, granted to Lieutenant-Colonel Charles Allan MacDougall and Major Thomas George C. Moore, the executors nominate, was sealed in London on the 2nd inst., the effects in England and Scotland amounting to upwards of £13,000.

The Irish probate, granted at Dublin, June 26 last, of the will and codicil of Lord George Augusta Hill, late of Ballyare, Donegal, Ireland, who died April 6 last, to the Hon. Somerset Richard Hamilton Augusta Ward and John Temple Reilly Down, the executors, has just been sealed in London, the aggregate personal estate and effects in England and Ireland being sworn under £7000.

The Scotch confirmation (dated the 24th ult.), under seal of the Commissariot of Peebleshire, of the will of the Right Hon. Emily Maria, Dowager Lady Elibank (widow of the late Alexander, ninth Baron Elibank), who died at Gravelye House, Hayward's-heath, Sussex, on June 3 last, granted to Thomas Goldie Dickson and the Rev. James Francis Montgomery, the executors nominate, has now been sealed in London, the inventory of the effects in England and Scotland given up upon oath exceeding in value £3000.

Her Majesty's Commissioners of Works have determined upon a complete fire service for the protection of Hampton-Court Palace, and have intrusted the carrying out of the work to Messrs. Merryweather and Sons, who have supplied similar machinery for Osborne, Sandringham, and Marlborough House.

MEMORIAL to LORD LAWRENCE.
In pursuance of the Meeting held at the JERUSALEM CHAMBER on July 21, a Committee has been appointed.
CHAIRMAN—Lord NAPIER of MAGDALA.
VICE-CHAIRMAN—The DEAN of WESTMINSTER.
HON. TREASURERS { Sir A. HOBHOUSE, K.C.S.I. / T. BRASSEY, Esq., M.P.

BANKERS—Subscriptions may be paid to Messrs. Coutts, 59, Strand, and will be acknowledged in the "Times."
A unanimous wish was expressed at the meeting that a statue should be erected in some public situation in London, which would serve permanently to record the pre-eminent services rendered to England and India by Lord Lawrence.
He not only devoted the greater part of his life to attach the Indian people to our rule by the wisdom and justice of his administration, but it must be always remembered that in the most critical moment of the Indian Mutiny he so acted that we owe the permanent maintenance of the connection between England and India in a very great degree to his clear-sighted courage, firmness, and humanity.
It is believed that so many persons belonging to all classes, both in India and England, will be anxious to do honour to his memory, that they will contribute much more than sufficient to erect the proposed Statue; and out of the surplus the Committee desire either to found Scholarships for the education of young Indians in England, or in some other way to confer benefits on Indians who come to this country. Thus to strengthen the connection between England and India, will perpetuate the memory and work of Lord Lawrence in a mode which he himself would approve.
Letters may be addressed to the Honorary Secretary, LORD LAWRENCE MEMORIAL FUND, Jerusalem Chambers, Westminster Abbey.

TESTIMONIALS.

THOMAS FAIRBANK, M.D., of Windsor, referring to Anti-Fat in the "British Medical Journal" of June 7, 1879, says:—
"I have some of this extract (Fucus Vesiculosus) to a very corpulent lady, who in three months lost three stones in weight without any change of diet. Since then I have frequently given it for reducing weight, depending on the accumulation of adipose tissue, and have never found it fail. I may state that a patient who has been lately taking it as an anti-fat, and who always suffered very much from rheumatic pains about the body, has been entirely free from such trouble while she has been taking the extract, a fact which she quite independently noted."

"One lady to whom I have sold Allan's Anti-Fat has decreased 9lb. in four weeks."

THOMAS NEWBOULD, Esq., Chemist, of Bradford, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 11, 1879:—
"The gentleman for whom I obtained four bottles of Allan's Anti-Fat has derived great benefit from the same, and has recommended it to a friend. Please send me one dozen at once."

C. J. ARBLASTER, Esq., Chemist, of Birmingham, writes, under date of June 4, 1879:—
"Have just received a capital account of the effects of Anti-Fat in reducing corpulency."

"22, Redcliffe-street, South Kensington, S.W., June 2, 1879.
"To the Proprietors of Allan's Anti-Fat.
"Gentlemen,—I have tried your wonderful medicine Anti-Fat both in America and this country. Through its use I can thin down at command, closing on an average five pounds per week.—Yours respectfully, "HARRY BRAHAM."

T. L. RENVE, Esq., of Birmingham, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of July 1, 1879:—
"A gentleman having used one dozen bottles of Allan's Anti-Fat, reports a satisfactory reduction."

J. A. STEWARD, Esq., of Worcester, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 18, 1879:—
"Three bottles of Anti-Fat have produced a wonderful effect."

HUET F. ARNOTT, of the Elbe, Prussia, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of July 16, 1879:—

FLORAL BELL,
FRAGRANT ELIXIR OR
LIQUID DENTIFRICE.
The admiration of the world, "THE FLORAL BELL FRAGRANT ELIXIR or LIQUID DENTIFRICE." Language fails to give expression to the beauty or the utility of a beautiful set of white teeth. With no other charm the possessor may well feel proud. Dentists, chemists, and physicians all recommend and use the FLORAL BELL FRAGRANT ELIXIR or LIQUID DENTIFRICE. THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, AUGUST 30, 1879.

The British Association for the Advancement of Science, the Annual Session of which follows so closely upon that of the Imperial Legislature, has in some respects been remarkable. It was held in Sheffield, under the presidency of Professor Allman, whose inaugural address dealt with that abstrusest of all subjects—the seed-plot, if so we may term it, of life, vegetable as well as animal. It would be out of place in these columns to enter upon any elaborate criticism of the learned Professor's paper on the subject—much more so to controvert, even if we were inclined to do so, the position of which it was intended to be, and was, a lucid and severely logical explanation. It is a proverbially difficult, if not impossible, task to get "behind the North wind," and Biologists of the most advanced order are essaying quite as unattainable an object in endeavouring to reach the source of vital existence. Still, in the laborious and indefatigable prosecution of their researches they have, and they are sure to, come across facts the bearing of which upon the interest of living beings can hardly fail of valuable results. Whatever can be known on the topic referred to is, we may be sure, well worth finding out; and, although it is to be apprehended that there are some secrets which defy all our present powers of penetrative intelligence, experience teaches us that the approaches towards them are usually rewarded with discoveries of high importance. Perhaps the predominant feature of the present Session, or "Congress," as we believe it is commonly styled, has been of an anthropological character, relating especially to observations concerning the history and development of the human race.

We rejoice to notice in this year's proceedings of the Association a special attention given to facts illustrative of African and Asian Sections of the human family. The presence of not less than three distinguished African travellers—Commander Cameron, Major Serpa-Pinto, and Count Savorgnan de Brazza—and the interesting information which they laid before the Geographical and the Biological Sections of what they had seen in the course of their explorations, had perhaps even greater influence in bringing about the feeling to which we have adverted than even the eloquent discourse of the learned President. We are getting to be more accurately, and therefore better, acquainted with the Tribes of Central Africa, their manners and customs, their dispositions and tendencies, their politics and their religions, than ever we were before. The vast interior of Africa has ceased to be a "sealed book" to the present generation. True, we know but little of it, as yet, or of the Races which inhabit it; but what we do know differs immensely from very much that we had previously imagined, and differs, we may add, on the hopeful side. The black man, even where he is addicted to cannibalism, is not all ferocity. He has some of the virtues of civilisation, some of the moral qualities which enter into and colour the higher forms of it. He needs, however, to be approached by skilful, as well as by gentle, methods; and it is quite within range of possibility that within another century Africa will take her place with Europe and America as one of the great Continents of human industry, freedom, and moral progress. Much and valuable information also was given respecting Afghanistan by Mr. William Simpson, the Artist sent out to that country by the Illustrated London News during the recent war, by Captain Gerard Martin, Captain B. Beavan, Lieutenant St. George C. Core, Major Campbell, and Captain T. H. Holditch.

In more instances than one, perhaps, but in one especially, discussion ranged over an area which might more fitly be claimed as its own by the Social Science Association. It related to the expediency of the teaching of Science in our Elementary Schools. Of course, there is neither the intention, nor the expectation, of making savans of the scholars who frequent them. It is not urged, even by those who take the highest ground upon this question, that our aim should be to impart a "scientific education" to the millions who are aided by the State in acquiring the elements of knowledge. What is meant by Sir John Lubbock and those who think with him is that lessons on the simplest phenomena which occur in the daily experience of children should, under suitable circumstances, be allowed to be given in the place of either grammar, or history, or geography. No sufficient reason exists, it appears to us, why what may be described as "natural knowledge" should be systematically excluded from the lowest curriculum, for, undoubtedly, it would prove as useful to a child, both in opening its mind and in preparing it for the life it has to lead, as the rudiments of knowledge of other kinds. The fundamental rules of health, for example, may be taught with as much advantage to children in our elementary schools as historic dates or geographical outlines. At any rate, the question is one that may be profitably discussed, and we are not sorry that it was so ably introduced to the Geographical and the Economic Science Departments by a paper read by Dr. J. H. Gladstone, of the London School Board, and also by Mr. J. F. Moss, clerk of the Sheffield School Board. Many of the educational traditions—we might almost call them superstitions—will have to be abandoned before the organisation, sanctioned by the State for the instruction of the Poor, effects all the good which it is capable of effecting. But this is not likely to be seen at a glance; it will have to be brought forward in one shape or another, year after year, and the change, even when accepted, can only be adopted by slow degrees.

The Annual Meeting of the Association will be held next year at Swansea, and the President-Elect will be Professor A. C. Ramsay, LL.D., F.R.S. We need not utter our fervent wish that it may be equally successful as that at Sheffield. Possibly, in the interval, some signal scientific discovery will be made. Almost certainly, some perplexing problem will be solved; and, without doubt, that which has happened in the past will continue to show itself in the future—to wit, a progressive improvement in the temper of mind with which science is being pursued over the entire range to which its researches extend.

THE COURT.

The Queen received at dinner the end of last week at Osborne the Duchess of Edinburgh, Lieutenant-General Sir Henry and the Hon. Lady Ponsonby and Miss Alberta Ponsonby, Admiral Fanshawe, Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, and Captain Thomson, her Majesty's yacht Victoria and Albert. The Duchess of Edinburgh and Princess Frederica of Hanover also lunched with her Majesty; and Prince Waldemar of Denmark, serving on board the Danish corvette Dagmar, under the command of Captain Braëm, visited the Queen. The Right Hon. Sir Michael Hicks-Beach arrived at Osborne and had an audience of her Majesty; and Captain Selfridge, commanding the United States ship Enterprise, was presented to the Queen by Lieutenant-General Sir Henry Ponsonby. Her Majesty, with Princess Beatrice and Prince Leopold, visited the Duchess of Edinburgh at Osborne Cottage, and took leave on her Royal Highness's departure from the Isle of Wight. The Queen, Princess Beatrice, and Prince Leopold attended Divine service on Sunday, performed at Osborne by the Rev. George Prothero. Captain Lord William Beresford, A.D.C., 9th Lancers, arrived at Osborne on his return from Zululand, and her Majesty conferred upon him the Victoria Cross, for which he had been recommended for his conspicuous gallantry in saving the life of a sergeant at the risk of his own during a reconnaissance under Colonel Buller before the battle of Ulundi. Lord William Beresford dined with the Queen. Her Majesty walked out on Monday, and Princess Beatrice rode. Prince Leopold, attended by Captain Waller, R.E., and Mr. Royle embarked on board her Majesty's ship Lively, Captain Frederick Egerton, at Cowes, on Tuesday for a short cruise. His Royal Highness will preserve the strictest incognito.

The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, left Osborne on Tuesday evening en route for the Highlands. Her Majesty and the Princess crossed the Solent in the Royal steam-yacht Alberta, Captain Thomson, to the Clarence Yard, Gosport, and landed at the private station, where they were received by Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar and the chief naval and military authorities. A special train, provided by the directors of the London and North-Western line, was in readiness, and ten minutes before the time fixed for the Royal departure a pilot-engine was dispatched, with driver and fireman, and a guard provided with hand and fog signals, with orders to run to time, ten minutes in advance of the special train, in order to clear the line, as upon the occasion of the Queen's recent journey from Windsor to Osborne. The pilot-engine, as well as the Royal train, worked under the strict block system, and the line kept clear of all obstruction a quarter of an hour before the pilot-engine was due, while nothing was allowed to proceed upon the line during the interval between the passing of the pilot-engine and the Royal train, which left the Clarence Yard at a quarter to seven. The Royal travellers breakfasted at Perth on Wednesday morning, after which the journey was continued viâ Aberdeen to Ballater, whence her Majesty and the Princess posted to Balmoral.

The Queen, through Sir William Fraser, has sent a kindly message to Mr. Buckstone, with an intimation that her Majesty had sent £50 in aid of his wants. The Premier has also recommended that a donation of £100 from the Queen's Royal Bounty should be given to the veteran actor.

The Queen has appointed Major-General Lord Chelmsford, K.C.B., to be a Knight Grand Cross of the Bath. Her Majesty, by the Under-Secretary for War, commanded Lord Chelmsford to proceed at once to Osborne upon his landing in England, but, the Queen having left the Isle of Wight on the day of his landing, Lord Chelmsford telegraphed to her Majesty to be informed of the Queen's further commands.

Her Majesty has conferred the honour of Companion of the Civil Division of the Bath upon Mr. Thomas Clement Cobbold, M.P.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince of Wales arrived at Dunster Castle yesterday week on a visit to Mr. G. F. Luttrell, for a day's hunt on Exmoor. The meet of the Devon and Somerset Staghounds was at Hawkcombe Head, near Porlock. A distinguished party, who had been invited to Dunster in honour of the Prince's coming, included the Rev. John Russell, the "father of the chase" in the West Country. Some 12,000 persons assembled to do honour to his Royal Highness. Two stags were started, the first of which got into cover and was lost; the latter, started at Dare Wood, made for Linton. Mr. Bisset, the master, was not present, owing to the recent death of his father. The Prince returned to Plymouth on Saturday evening. His Royal Highness passed Sunday on board the Royal yacht Osborne. During the day the Prince received on board the Osborne Mrs. Ann Glanville, the champion female rower of Saltash, who is nearly ninety years of age. The Prince's steam-launch came to the Town Quay to take Mrs. Glanville on board, four of the crew being intrusted with the message from his Royal Highness. On one occasion she won a race at a French regatta in presence of the Queen, and afterwards was "presented" on board her Majesty's yacht, and danced a hornpipe for the Queen's amusement. The Prince left the Osborne on Monday morning and proceeded in a steam-launch up the river Yealm. Landing at Noss, he went on to Membland, the seat of Mr. Baring, where he was entertained at luncheon. In the afternoon he drove to Pamphlete, where he was received by the owner, Mr. Bulteel. His Royal Highness afterwards drove to Flete, the residence of Mr. Mildmay, whence, after a short stay, he returned to Devonport and went on board the Osborne, where he entertained a large party at dinner. On Tuesday the Prince entertained Lord Chelmsford on board the Osborne upon his arrival from Zululand. Lord Chelmsford was received with great cordiality by his Royal Highness, who congratulated the General on his successes in South Africa. After a short stay on board the Osborne the party were rowed round the Hildegarde, the Prince's schooner, which was in trim for competing at the Dartmouth Regatta of yesterday. When Lord Chelmsford left the Osborne the crew of the yacht manned her starboard side, and, as the gig pushed off, led by the Prince and Lord Charles Beresford, the sailors gave three lusty cheers.

The Princess of Wales and Princesses Louise, Victoria, and Maud and Princes Albert Victor and George of Wales passed through Cologne, and alighted at the Hôtel du Nord, on their journey to Denmark. Their Royal Highnesses arrived at Bellevue, Copenhagen, at ten o'clock yesterday week, and were received by the King and Queen of Denmark, the Crown Prince and Princess, and the other members of the Royal family, the Commander-in-Chief with his staff, the Ministers, and chief Court officials. Shortly afterwards the Royal family drove to the Château of Bernsdorff, greeted by hearty cheers along the route. The passage from Lübeck was very favourable.

The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh paid a visit to Brighton yesterday week. The Duke of Edinburgh left Victoria by special train for West Brighton, where he joined the Duchess, who had travelled from Portsmouth. Mr. J. P. Knight, the general manager of the Brighton Railway Company, accompanied his Royal Highness from London. The Duke and Duchess lunched at the Albion Hotel, and after inspecting the Aquarium they left for Dover, where they visited the castle and the fortifications. The Duke and Duchess passed the night at the Lord Warden Hotel, and embarked the next morning in the special steamer Maid of Kent for Calais, en route for Russia.

Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein left Cumberland Lodge, Windsor Park, on Monday for Germany.

The Crown Prince of Sweden and Norway, after spending a week at Taymouth Castle, on a visit to the Earl and Countess of Breadalbane, left on Saturday for Glamis Castle, on a visit to the Earl and Countess of Strathmore.

The Hereditary Grand Duke of Baden arrived at Blair Athole yesterday week from Taymouth Castle, and left on Saturday for Braemar by Glen Tilt.

The Austrian Ambassador is paying visits in Scotland. The Countess Karolyi is at Filey. The Duke and Duchess of Westminster have arrived at Eaton Hall, Cheshire. The Earl and Countess of Derby are at the Engadine. The Earl of Kenmare has arrived at Killarney, his seat in Ireland, from Germany. The Countess of Lonsdale has arrived at Lowther Castle. The Right Hon. Sir Robert Peel, Bart., M.P., and Lady Emily Peel are at their residence at Geneva. The yacht Walrus, with Baroness Burdett-Coutts and party on board, arrived at Malta yesterday week, and proceeded to the Ionian Islands.

At Hatchford on the 19th inst, a marriage was solemnised in the private church in the grounds, between Mr. George Pigot, eldest son of Sir Robert Pigot, Bart., and Miss Alice Mackenzie, eldest unmarried daughter of Mr. Mackenzie of Kintail. The attendance at the church and the wedding breakfast was restricted to the members of both families. The bride wore a white satin dress and veil of point d'Alençon over a wreath of orange-blossoms and tiara of diamonds; her ornaments were also diamonds, the gift of her father. The bride was attended by four bridesmaids, whose dresses were composed of white barège, trimmed with white satin and flowers and Breton lace. The bride and bridegroom left for the Lakes, on their way to Scotland. The presents were very numerous, and included many from the tenants and household servants.

The marriage of Viscount Coke (Scots Guards), eldest son of the Earl of Leicester, and Hon. Alice White, second daughter of Lord and Lady Annaly, was solemnised on Tuesday at All Saints' Church, Ennismore-gardens. The bridegroom was accompanied by Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. J. C. Vanneck (Scots Guards). The religious ceremony was performed by the Rev. G. Stopford Ram, Vicar of St. Anne's, Highgate, assisted by the Rev. G. Waller, of All Saints'. After the ceremony the wedding party adjourned to Lord Annaly's residence at Rutland-gate to breakfast, during which time the full band of the Scots Guards played a varied selection of music. Shortly after two o'clock Lord Coke and his bride took their departure for Paris. They intend to pass their honeymoon on the Continent. The bride's presents were numerous, and included gifts from the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh and the Duke of Connaught.

The Queen has appointed the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, K.G., to be Lord Lieutenant of the county of Banff, in the room of the late Earl of Fife.

The National Horse and Ram Show was opened at Dublin on Tuesday, on the premises of the Royal Dublin Society in Kildare-street, and, with tolerably favourable weather, the attendance was large. The show is this year considered exceptionally interesting as affording ample evidence of the condition of pure bred stock in Ireland. From a small beginning in the year 1864, when 370 horses were on view, these periodical exhibitions have been growing in importance, and this year 623 horses in all are shown. The jumping took place on Wednesday.

The Associated Chambers of Commerce met on Tuesday at Belfast for their autumnal session. Mr. Whitwell, M.P., who presided, congratulated the members in his opening address on the appointment of a public prosecutor, as no doubt many mercantile defalcations such as had previously been passed by would now be inquired into; but he regretted that the Banking Pill and the subject of the depreciation of silver had not been better dealt with. Resolutions were passed in favour of the appointment of a Minister of Commerce and Agriculture, the reintroduction of the Partnership Bill as approved by the Association last year, and the appointment of an International Commission to control the management of the Suez Canal with a view to the ultimate or present redemption of the Canal dues.

Dean Stanley, who is staying with Colonel Drummond at Megginch Castle, preached on Sunday afternoon in Errol parish church, near Perth.

The English Church Union held a meeting in Hereford on the 21st inst. Resolutions were passed protesting against the proposed alteration in the Book of Common Prayer.

On the 13th inst. the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol reopened St. Michael's, Brinkworth, the chancel of which has been completely restored by Messrs. Middleton, of Cheltenham, at the cost of the Rector, the Rev. William de Quetteville.

The parish church at Cheriton, near Arlesford, in Hampshire, has been partially restored by Mr. Brandon, and was reopened by the Bishop of Winchester on the 19th inst. in presence of a large congregation. The church, which is mostly in the Early English period of architecture, consists of a nave, north and south aisles, chancel, and western tower. The old pews have been removed and replaced by new open seats, to accommodate about 260 persons. New encaustic tile paving has been provided, an apparatus for adequately warming the building has been constructed, and the roofs and internal stonework have been restored; but much remains yet to be done to the external stonework as soon as funds are obtainable.

The foundation-stone of a new church for the parish of German, Peel, Isle of Man, was laid on the 21st inst. The present church is of great antiquity, and is condemned as being unhealthy from the fact that the graveyard is fully three feet higher than the floor. The ceremony was performed by Archdeacon Moore, but the Bishop and about twenty clergymen were also present. A difficulty having arisen as to where they should robe and form into procession, the Wesleyan Methodists placed their Centenary Hall at their disposal. The church, which will be in the Early Decorated style of architecture, will be built from the designs of Messrs. Barry, of Liverpool. It is intended to accommodate 900 persons, and will cost about £5000, exclusive of the spire, which can be added at a future time at a cost of £1500.

The church of Winthorpe-cum-Burgh, Lincolnshire, dates from the fourteenth century, and retains much of the beautiful carved oakwork of that period. Many of the oak benches with carved poppy-heads are now in use, and others blocked up by unsightly boards. The restoration of the stonework of this interesting church is begun, under the architect, Mr. W. Smith, St. John-street, Adelphi, and sufficient money has been raised for this portion of the work. But a sum of £400 is needed to restore the beautiful old woodwork and for a new pulpit and prayer-desk. A further sum of £1000 for the much-needed restoration of roofs is now sought. Towards attaining these sums, subscriptions have been solicited in the neighbourhood. As the living is only £2 10s. per annum, and the resident population too few and too poor to be able to raise the required sum, an appeal is now made to Churchmen generally to assist in preserving this beautiful specimen of Gothic architecture from further decay, and to render it worthy of the holy purpose for which it was designed. Donations will be thankfully received by the Vicar, the Rev. Canon Sanderson; or Mrs. Walls, Boothby Hall, Spilsby, hon. secretary and treasurer.

Speaking at Lancaster to the members of the Lancaster Agricultural Society, on Tuesday, Colonel Stanley, after referring to the present agricultural and commercial depression, expressed his conviction that, however severe foreign competition might be, the farmers and commercial men of this country would successfully meet it.

We publish this morning, says the Standard of Wednesday, a number of telegrams from various parts of the country which leave, it is to be feared, but little hope as to the prospects of the harvest. Some ten days ago a slight chance seemed still left. The rainfall ceased; the sun began to show itself; the sky was clear; it began to be thought that on the higher and better-drained lands some approach to an average crop might, perhaps, still be got in. Unhappily, these more cheerfully framed anticipations have now at length been finally and completely dispelled.

POLITICAL.

The Prime Minister can hardly hope to vie with his illustrious rival as a "complete letter-writer." It happens, however, that a passage from a letter written by Lord Beaconsfield to a Mr. Bottomley, of Oldham, has crept into the papers. From it we learn, in the oracular words of the Premier that the policy of the Government is "unchanged and unshaken," that he places full confidence in the Conservative Party, and "hopes he is not presumptuous in counting upon the renewed approval of the Conservative party in the country which was tendered him a year ago."

The almost nervous energy with which Mr. Gladstone devotes himself to the arduous tasks of addressing public meetings, and of writing diatribes against the whole policy of the Government in the Nineteenth Century, is so far from being in harmony with his formal resignation of the Leadership of the Liberal Party for restful reasons that some people can only reconcile this wide divergence of precept from action by supposing that, after all, "Barkis is willin'." Chester, as we pointed out last week, on the Tuesday heard Mr. Gladstone's direct challenge of the Government to put the points at issue between them to the test of a General Election. The following Thursday found the right hon. gentleman dining with the paupers of St. Pancras at the invitation of the giver of the feast, Mr. Henry Skoines, whose open-heartedness made Mr. Gladstone "congratulate the Tories upon one member of their body." And, ere he left London to return to Hawarden Mr. Gladstone found time to write (doubtless among other epistles or post-cards) a letter approving the establishment of coffee-taverns. Viewing this exceptional activity, is there not some excuse for the foregoing supposition?

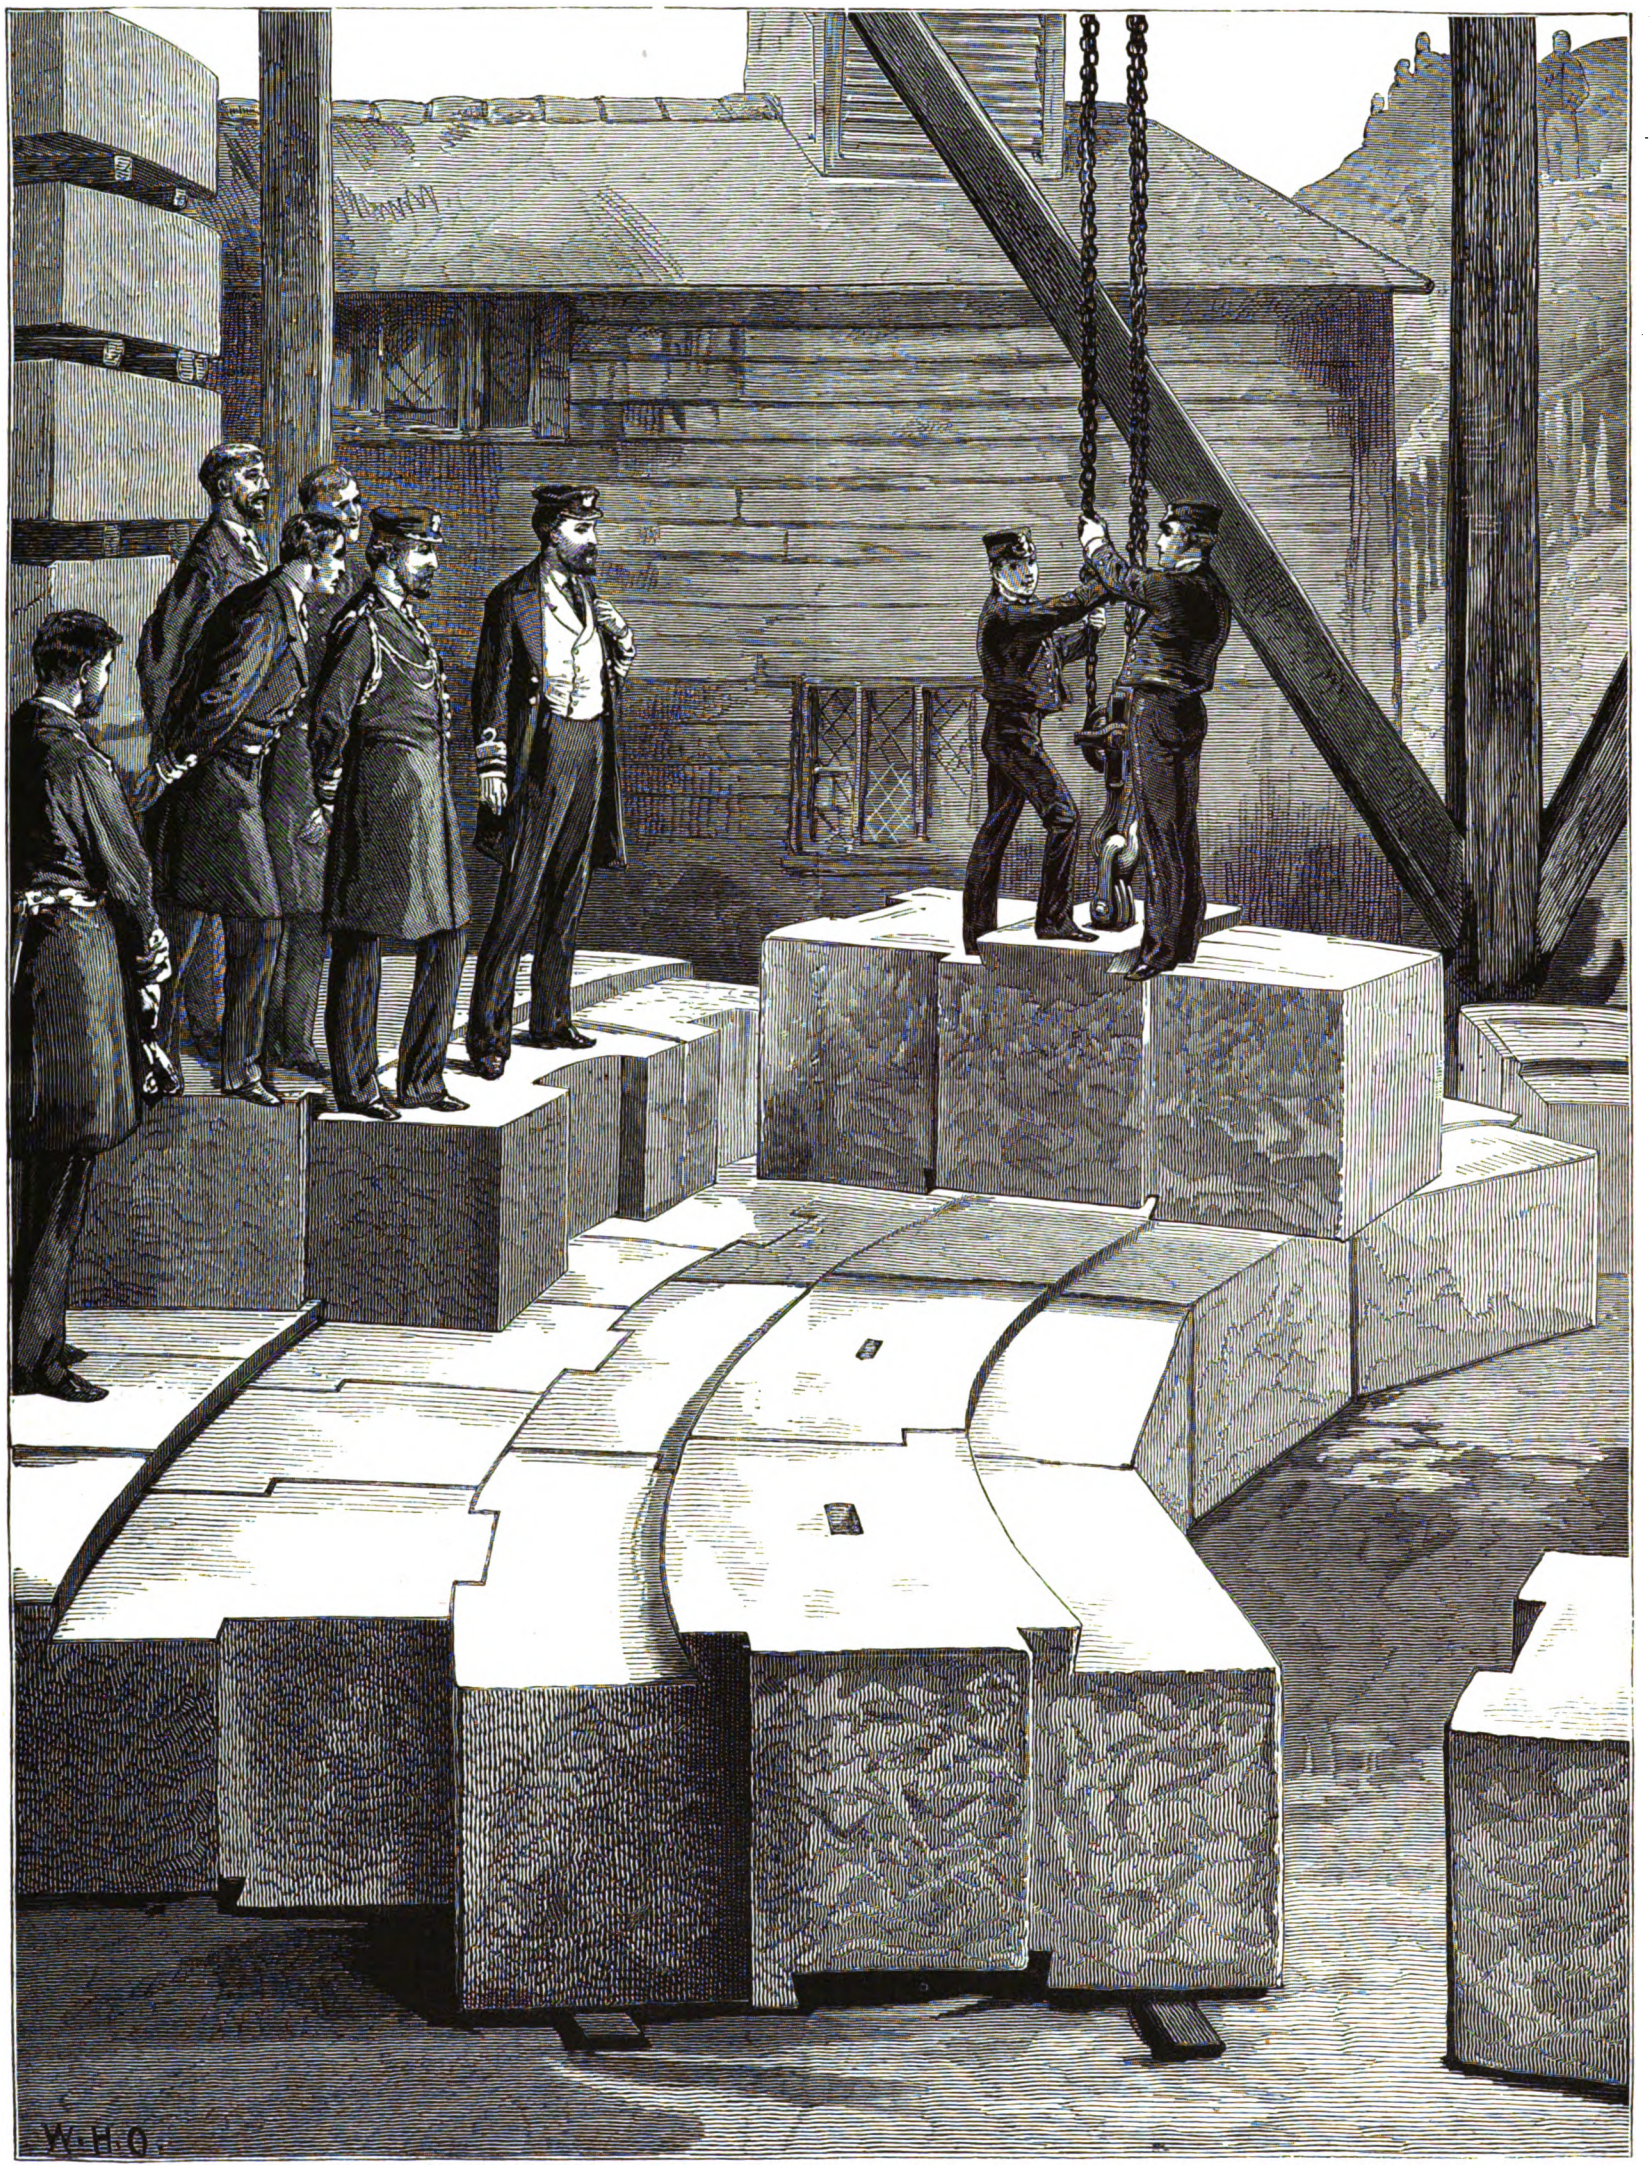
The defunct Reform League, of which Mr. Edmond Beales was the energetic President, agitated the country so widely in favour of Parliamentary Reform some twelve years ago that no small proportion of the majority which Mr. Gladstone obtained at the General Election of 1868 may have been due to the strong speeches of those resolute Reformers, albeit it was under the Government of the late Lord Derby and of Lord Beaconsfield (then Mr. Disraeli) that Parliament moulded the Reform Bill into so comprehensive an Act. We are reminded of the Reform League from the fact that on Saturday last, at the offices of the Trades Union Congress, Buckingham-street, Strand, a new association, the "National Liberal League," sprang into life, fostered by some of the leading spirits of the old League, and countenanced by such prominent Radical members of Parliament as Mr. Peter Rylands and Mr. Hopwood.

Cabinet Ministers have been remarkably reticent since the prorogation of Parliament. Replying to the toast of "The County Members" at the dinner of the Lancaster Agricultural Society on Monday, Colonel Stanley followed the lead of Mr. Cross last week, and devoted his attention to the existing depression in agriculture. The buoyant hopefulness of Lord Winmarleigh (whose cheerful common-sense suggested that a remedy was to be found for the prevailing depression in a readjustment of rents) gave the keynote to the Secretary for War, who had no doubt that our farmers and men of business would "put their shoulders to the wheel" as they had done heretofore, and so tide over the present difficulty. The right hon. gentleman also pointed to the appointment of the Royal Commission on Agricultural Distress as a proof that Parliament was in earnest in desiring to effectually remedy the evil. With regard to the Royal Commission, it may here be stated that on the same day Mr. C. S. Read, M.P., and Mr. Arthur Pell, M.P., the two Commissioners deputed to inquire into the farming prospects of the United States and Canada, left Liverpool in the City of Montreal for New York. In America (the Duke of Argyll pointed out at Oban on Tuesday) trade depression is as common as in Europe.

Mr. Goschen is determined to be on with the new love before he is off with the old. That he is resolved to woo Ripon with vigour was clear from his first address delivered in the Public Rooms on Tuesday night. Characterised by the happy terseness of style and solidity of argument which make Mr. Goschen formidable in debate, his speech was a spiteful and minute criticism in an adverse sense of the domestic and foreign policy of the Government, a laudation of the Gladstone Ministry, and a vindication of the Liberal party from the aspersions cast upon it as lacking patriotism. Full of pungent phrases, the address was undoubtedly as effective as it was able. It caused his candidature to be accepted with enthusiasm.

Mr. E. J. Reed, who is also about to effect a change in his affections, has been paying court this week to Cardiff. His first speech on Monday was an uncompromising, Radical attack on the Government. Nor was he less sweeping on Tuesday, when he addressed the electors of Llantrissant. Lambeth (in connection with which borough the name of Mr. George Augustus Sala has been mentioned as a possible Liberal candidate) has seen some exceedingly lively meetings, in which the services of Mr. Alderman M'Arthur, M.P., and of his colleague, Sir J. C. Lawrence, M.P., have not escaped sharp criticism from various sections of the constituency; but Mr. Alderman M'Arthur was not to be deterred from attending on Monday the meeting at which the Lambeth Advanced Liberal Association was launched.

Candidates for Parliamentary honours elsewhere are already cultivating the acquaintance of the constituencies they wish to represent. Mr. Bagot Molesworth, son of Dr. Molesworth, has been chosen as the Liberal candidate for Blackburn; Mr. Jesse Collings, in the Liberal interest, for Ipswich; and Mr. Charles Page Wood, on the same side, for East Essex. Mr. G. W. Bahr, a Liverpool shipowner, is to assail the Conservative stronghold at Preston; and Mr. H. G. Allen has issued an address as Liberal candidate for Pembroke.



Picnics and politics are usually coupled by the wire-pullers of Conservative Working Men's Associations. A leaf was taken out of their book on Tuesday at Broadlands, which, being the birthplace of Lord Palmerston, suggested to Mr. Cowper-Temple, M.P., the contrasting of Lord Palmerston's foreign policy with that of Lord Beaconsfield's—not altogether to the advantage of the latter.

Mr. Parnell, M.P., and Mr. O'Sullivan, M.P., have been vigorously upholding the Home-Rule League in Dublin; but it seems rather contradictory to speak of the unruly meeting of the 21st inst. as in anyway associated with Home Rule.

Scotland (ere long to be the campaigning ground of Mr. Gladstone) is to have a quiet election first. The Speaker of the House of Commons has given notice of his intention to issue a writ on the 31st inst. for an election of a representative of the counties of Elgin and Nairn, in the room of Viscount Macduff, now Earl of Fife. Finally, for the sake of members not anxious to hasten the appeal to the country, it may be added that Mr. R. W. Hanbury, M.P., on Monday, speaking at Bagnall, said it was desirable for Parliaments to sit out their seven years if possible, and it seemed most likely that the present one would do that.

On account of the death of Sir Thomas Monerieffe the Athole gathering and ball will not be held this year.

THE ZULU WAR.

The Illustration which occupies the two middle pages of this Number is furnished by a Sketch from the hand of our Special Artist, Mr. Melton Prior, representing the distant view before Lord Chelmsford's army in the advance upon Ulundi, on July 3, with the British encampment and fortified position in the middle foreground. The King's principal Kraal or town of Ulundi, in a circular inclosure, is seen afar off; also that of Nodwengu, which was the capital of his father, King Panda, or Umpanda, and several other places which have been mentioned in the account of recent military operations. The river called the White Umvolosi pursues its course through the low-lying valley, on the left-hand of this view, which looks northward from a hill rising on the bank of that river. Ulundi is about five miles east of Nodwengu; and ten miles below Ulundi is the confluence of the White and the Black Umvolosi, where Cetewayo had built a most formidable military kraal, with strong natural defences. Another of our Special Artist's Sketches is that showing the incident of Lord Chelmsford receiving from Lieutenant Lysons, an aide-de-camp, the Prince Imperial's sword, taken by the Zulus when he was killed, and lately sent back to the British Commander-in-Chief by their King, with his tardy overtures of peace. The view of St. Paul's Mission Station, in Zululand, situated thirty miles south of Ulundi, being the place where Sir Garnet Wolseley met Lord Chelmsford, is contributed by our Correspondent, who has accompanied Major-General Crealock's division of the army from the Lower Tugela along the route near the seacoast.

Lord Chelmsford, with Brigadier-General Sir Evelyn Wood, V.C., Colonel Redvers Buller, V.C., C.B., and other distinguished officers, arrived in England last Tuesday, landing at Plymouth from the Union Company's mail-steamer German. They were invited on board the Royal yacht Osborne to meet the Prince of Wales.

Captain J. B. Carey, better known as Lieutenant Carey, the rank he bore at the time of the Prince Imperial's death, has been fairly acquitted by the final judgment of the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief at the Horse Guards. An official letter has been written by the direction of the Duke of Cambridge to the General Commanding the Forces in South Africa announcing that her Majesty has been advised not to confirm the proceedings of the court-martial upon Lieutenant Carey. His Royal Highness proceeds to comment upon the events of June 1, having "received her Majesty's commands" to do so. The Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief approves all that Lord Chelmsford did for the reception and occupation of the Prince Imperial; but Lieutenant-Colonel Harrison mistook Lord Chelmsford's instructions to himself, and gave orders to Lieutenant Carey not sufficiently explicit, while he failed to impress upon the Prince the duty of deferring to the military orders of the officer who accompanied him. Lieutenant Carey formed a wrong conception of his position, and if his instructions were defective, his professional knowledge might have prompted him as to his duty. In conclusion, the Duke of Cambridge says he feels that he is speaking with the voice of the Army when he remarks that the "survivors of this fatal expedition withdrew from the scene of disaster without the full assurance that all efforts on their part were not abandoned until the fate of their comrades had been sealed."

Captain Carey arrived at Portsmouth yesterday week by the troop-ship Jumna, which also brought back the battalion of Royal Marines, who have not been required to fight in the Zulu War.

There is intelligence from the Cape to the 5th inst., forwarded by special telegram viâ Madeira. A successful Zulu raid is reported from Utrecht, and counter-raids on a large scale are projected under Colonel Villiers. The Pondos had attacked a native tribe under our protection, and it was feared that a war would ensue. Sir Garnet Wolseley, who reached Rorke's Drift on the 3rd inst., on his way to Ulundi, states in a telegram to the War Office that Cetewayo is still reported to be north of the Black Umvolosi with a few chiefs and a very small following. Five thousand Swazies were ready to attack him, and there would probably be 10,000 before crossing the Pongolo.

The Illustrations given in our last of the signal station at Port Durnford and the attempted landing of Sir Garnet Wolseley were from sketches by Captain H. M. G. Brunker, not by Lieutenant Crawford Caffin, as stated. In the brief memoir of Lieutenant G. R. J. Evelyn, of the 3rd Buffs, who died of fever at Ekowe, it should have been said that he was eldest son of Colonel G. P. Evelyn, commandant of the 1st Royal Surrey Militia, and grandson of the late George Evelyn, Esq., of Wotton, Surrey. Several of his family have been killed in the service of their country.

Lieutenant George Astell Pardoe, of the 13th Light Infantry, who has died of wounds received at the battle of Ulundi, was second son of the late Edward Pardoe, Esq., of Amberwood, Christchurch, Hampshire, formerly a Captain in the 15th Regiment, and a grandson of the late John Pardoe, Esq., of Leyton, Essex. Lieutenant Pardoe was born Sept. 5, 1855, and was consequently in his twenty-fourth year.

An official despatch has been received by the Peruvian Minister at Washington confirming the news of the suspension of the blockade of Iquique.

The Rev. Dr. Mullens, the well-known foreign secretary of the London Missionary Society, who left England a few months ago to aid in establishing a mission on Lake Tanganyika, died on the 10th of last month at Mpwapwa, in Central Africa.

There is a large extent of very arid and desert country lying to the south of Arizona, which is supposed to have been an ancient sea-bed. This district, which is only about forty miles from the head of the Gulf of California, and is considerably below the level of the sea, it is proposed to flood with the water from the Pacific by means of a canal. A lake, twenty miles long, which already exists, will shorten the canal by one half, and the work is expected to be completed in six months, at a cost of £200,000.

The San Domingo Government has superseded the existing Constitution and proclaimed that of 1854. General Bazelais has been proclaimed President of the Haytian Republic. The Haytian Minister at Washington has received information to the effect that the Provisional Government's troops, after a severe engagement, have captured Gonaives, the head-quarters of the insurgents. The town was partially burnt. Cape Haytian and Port de Paix had surrendered, and the revolution was at an end.

A special telegram to the Times from Calcutta says that the accounts from Cashmere continue to give a melancholy picture of the starvation and misery prevailing there. The Maharajah and his officers appear to be working well, and the Punjaub Government is doing its best to forward supplies; but little improvement in the situation can be looked for until the arrival of the rice harvest. The despatch adds that the state of things in Eastern Bengal still causes some anxiety to the local authorities, but it is hoped the distress will not attain serious proportions.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The Paris Figaro published a long account of a supposed interview with Prince Napoleon, in which the views and intentions of that personage with respect to the position to which he hopes to mount in France are stated with plausible elaboration. The Prince expresses his contentment to allow the Republic by its acts to bring about the desire for an Empire, and that he, in the event of coming to power, is determined entirely to exclude the influence of ecclesiastics from matters of temporal interest.

At a banquet given on the 20th inst. by the Prefect of the Aisne to the Council-General of the department, M. Waddington made a speech, in which he defended the Education Bill of M. Jules Ferry and maintained that there was nothing in the measure contrary to freedom of conscience. M. Waddington afterwards spoke of the relations of France with the other Powers as being altogether satisfactory.

M. Boerescu, the Roumanian Minister for Foreign Affairs, has arrived in Paris, and on Saturday last had an interview with M. Waddington. M. Boerescu has already visited St. Petersburg, Vienna, and Berlin, and from Paris proceeds to London. The object of his mission is understood to be to explain to the signatory Powers of the Treaty of Berlin the manner in which the Roumanian Government interprets article 44, relating to the Jews.

Detailed instructions have been issued for the autumn manœuvres on a large scale, which are to be carried out this year by the 2nd, 3rd, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, and 18th Corps, and by the 1st and 4th Divisions of cavalry of the French army. During the ensuing twelve months 769,000 men will serve with the colours in France, in accordance with the military regulations of this year. For financial reasons, only one class of the reserve is to be called out.

The Devastation, which was successfully launched at Lorient last week, is the largest ironclad of the French navy now afloat, with the exception of the sister-ship, the Redoubtable, built at Lorient by the same engineers. The Devastation is 327 ft. long, 70 ft. wide, and 25 ft. deep, with a mean draught of water of 25 ft. The total displacement is 9630 tons. The engines are of 6000-horse power, and the speed is estimated to reach fourteen knots an hour. The Devastation can carry enough coal to steam 2800 miles. The artillery consists of four 14-inch guns and two 10-inch guns placed in armour-plated turrets, and eight light guns. The iron plates are about 15 in. thick, with a backing of teak 13 in. thick, and the decks are also plated with armour.

A great fire has occurred at Bordeaux, and the damage to property is estimated at 2,000,000f.

BELGIUM.

As a preliminary to the national celebration next year of the fiftieth anniversary of the proclamation of Belgian independence, the fête organised in Tournai began on Monday. At a banquet given in the evening the King expressed a hope that next year's celebration would have the effect of reconciling the party differences now existing.

Proceedings are to be taken against the Paris Figaro by the Communal Council of Ostend for falsely announcing that cholera existed there and at Bruges.

SPAIN.

King Alfonso arrived at Arcachon yesterday week and in the course of the evening had a first interview with the Archduchess Marie Christine of Austria. The Grand Duke Nicholas and the Grand Duchess Catherine of Russia will, it is believed at Madrid, act as sponsors at the marriage of King Alfonso and the Archduchess.

It is stated that the Cortes will probably meet on Oct. 5, when the conditions of the marriage of King Alfonso with the Archduchess Marie Christine will be discussed. The marriage ceremony will, it is believed, take place in Madrid, at the expiration of the mourning for the Infanta Marie del Pilar.

ITALY.

The correspondent of the Daily News in Rome telegraphs that the manœuvres of the Second and Third Army Corps have been countermanded, owing to the prevalence of fever in the district where they were to have taken place.

The drought and heat of the last two months in Italy have proved as disastrous to husbandry as the rains that preceded them. From all parts of the peninsula like accounts come.

GERMANY.

An electoral manifesto has been issued by the new Conservative party, which says that the efforts for the restoration of peace between the State and the Roman Catholic Church should be met half way, but that the inalienable rights of the former must at the same time be guaranteed.

The Prussian military manœuvres to be held next month at Königsberg will be attended by General Skobeleff and a number of other Russian officers.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

Count Andrassy arrived on the 21st inst. at Vienna from Terebes, and proceeded to Schönbrunn, where he will take up his residence. At an audience had with the Emperor Francis Joseph, Count Andrassy officially tendered his resignation. In presence of the extreme difficulty, not to say impossibility, of finding a successor at the present moment, Count Andrassy has, however, consented to remain at his post for a short time.

Count Andrassy left Vienna on Tuesday morning for Gastein, where he had an interview with Prince Bismarck.

M. Tisza, the Hungarian Premier, arrived at Vienna last Saturday, and attended a conference of the Common Ministers of the Empire, under the presidency of the Emperor.

A Committee of the Croatian Diet has resolved that women can be elected members of the Common Councils.

The Seed Fair at Vienna, which was opened on Monday morning by the Minister of Commerce, was attended by 5300 persons. After the usual greetings the International Committee was constituted. The report, presented by Herr Leinkauf in the name of the Fruit and Breadstuffs Exchange of Vienna in regard to the crops in Austria and Hungary, shows the deficit throughout the monarchy to be in wheat 9,250,000, in rye 7,250,000, and in barley 5,000,000 hectolitres. The oat crop, on the other hand, has been good, exceeding the average by 2,500,000 hectolitres. In view of the accumulated stocks of last year, it is estimated that only between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000 hectolitres of wheat and about 4,500,000 of rye will have to be imported. The yield of barley will hardly suffice for home requirements, while of oats there will be 3,000,000 cwt. available for exportation.

RUSSIA.

The Czarewitch left St. Petersburg on the 21st inst. on a visit to Sweden and Denmark, on board the Imperial yacht Czarevna, escorted by the yachts Slawianka and Marewo. The Czarewitch arrived at Stockholm on Sunday afternoon, on board the Swedish Royal steamer Skoeldmoen, which had gone to Waxholm with the superior State officials to meet his Imperial Highness. The Czarewitch, who on his arrival was received with a salute of twenty-one guns, entered the Royal barge, which conveyed him to Skeppstro, where the principal authorities, together with a guard of honour and a band of music playing the Russian National Anthem, were in attendance. King Oscar, accompanied by a suite of military officers, cordially welcomed the Czarewitch on the steps of the gardens of the Royal castle. The King gave a state dinner on Monday in honour of the Czarewitch; the diplomatic body and the principal civil and military officials were present. On Tuesday the Czarewitch went by steamer to visit the Royal castles of Drottningholm and Gripsholm, and in the evening was present at a display of fireworks and illuminations at Maelarsen. On Wednesday his Imperial Highness was to pay a visit to the Queen of Sweden at Tullgarn, and thence proceed to Copenhagen.

According to advices received in St. Petersburg, the troops of the Russian expedition against the Tekke Turcomans are suffering from ophthalmia, diarrhœa, and scurvy, and a report had reached Tschikislar from Tchat that a mortality of 25 per cent prevailed in the force.

A St. Petersburg telegram states that of five persons condemned to death by the military tribunal at Odessa, three were hanged there yesterday week, and the other two at Nicolaieff. Among the persons sentenced to transportation to Siberia, for belonging to a secret society which conspired against the Government, is a girl of fifteen.

TURKEY.

Writing to the Pope to thank him for his cordial feelings towards Turkey, the Sultan has assured his Holiness that the Porte will do everything possible to allow all liberty of action to the Roman Catholic Church in Turkey.

We learn from Constantinople that the first meeting of the Turco-Greek Commission was held there on the 22nd inst., when the Commissioners exchanged credentials and discussed the course of procedure. The Sheik-ul-Islam has written a remarkable letter to his co-religionists in Epirus and Thessaly, preparing them for their transfer from the dominion of the Sultan to that of King George. The spiritual head of the Moslem Church quotes from the Koran as furnishing the Sultan with the motive for granting this demand on the part of the Greeks.

The Minister of Finance has reported that the Porte is maintaining half a million refugees in addition to the Turkish army. An Imperial Iradé has, therefore, been issued reducing the army, and stating that after the settlement of the Greek question the army will be further reduced to 100,000 men.

A financial arrangement has been concluded between the Porte and Baron Hirsch, by which the Government is to receive a sum of £1,200,000 in consideration of certain modifications in the convention for farming the Roumelian railways. The Porte agrees to declare its former claims liquidated, and renounces its right to receive 8000f. per kilometre of the receipts derived from the working of the railways.

A great fire has occurred at Sophia, by which the artillery barracks have been destroyed and several other buildings. During the fire shells and cartridges continually exploded. The total loss is estimated at £80,000.

GREECE.

A Royal decree calling out 8000 men of the second class of the Greek territorial army has been promulgated at Athens. The King of the Hellenes is reported to have postponed his intended autumn tour.

ROUMANIA.

The Senate and Chamber were prorogued last Saturday until Sept. 2. The Message from Prince Charles, which was read on the occasion, states that the Government will submit the measures relative to the revision of article 7 of the Constitution necessitated by the treaty of Berlin, which, with all the sacrifices which it imposes upon Roumania, has been accepted by the Legislature. The Prince expresses his conviction that the Ministers and the Legislature will exercise zeal, patriotism, and political prudence, in order to arrive at a solution which will give satisfaction to the principle of religious liberty and civil and political equality proclaimed by Europe, and reconcile with this principle the national and economical necessities of Roumania. M. Esarcha has been appointed Roumanian representative at the Italian Court.

EGYPT.

Gordon Pasha, the Governor-General of the Soudan, has arrived at Cairo, and the Khedive has placed a palace at his Excellency's disposal.

A decree of the Khedive appoints Mansour Pasha Minister of the Interior.

The Standard Correspondent at Alexandria telegraphs that the English and French Consuls-General in Egypt announced to the Khedive on Monday that their Governments had nominated Mr. Baring and M. de Blignières as Controllers. The Khedive consented to appoint them by a Decree, after their functions had been specified in writing; but at the same time expressed his regret that the French Government had disregarded his protest against M. de Blignières.

AMERICA.

The Philadelphia correspondent of the Times says that the State Department, in reference to the 103,000 dols. Fortune Bay Fishery Claim, announces that it is not a claim for restoration of any portion of the Halifax award, but a claim for a specific grievance based upon actual damage sustained by American fishermen through the violent invasion of their treaty rights at Fortune Bay, and to obtain security against similar offences in future. The Washington Government is anxious that England should abolish the local Canadian prohibitory laws overriding the treaty provisions; and that the present ill-feeling among the fishermen on the subject should cease through the withdrawal of the grievance.

A quarrel arising out of political disputes occurred in San Francisco, California, last Saturday, with the result that the working men's candidate for the mayoralty of the city, Mr. Kalloch, was shot by Mr. De Yong, the editor of the San Francisco Chronicle. Mr. Kalloch was not killed; but his supporters were rendered so furious that the authorities had to make extraordinary exertions to prevent De Yong being dragged out of the gaol and hanged.

The New York Herald publishes intelligence stating that the expedition in search of the remains of Sir John Franklin landed on the northern shore of Hudson's Bay, near Depolis Land, on Aug. 9, 1878, and started on a sledge journey to King William's Land on April 1 last.

AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND.

We learn by telegram that the South Australia Legislative Assembly has negatived a vote of want of confidence in the Ministry; that the Royal Commission for the International Exhibition at Melbourne have further extended the time for receiving applications for space at the offices of the Agent-General for Victoria in London to Dec. 31; and that Dr. Beaney has been re-elected to his former position as surgeon to Melbourne Hospital during his absence in England.

The Australian mails bear dates from Melbourne to July 10, Sydney to the 7th, and New Zealand to the 16th.

The Parliament of Victoria was opened on July 8. The Governor's speech stated that signs of a revival of trade were apparent, and that agriculture and mining prospects were improving. His Excellency expressed regret at the necessity for increased taxation, owing to the loss of revenue. He referred briefly to the recent mission of Mr. Graham Berry to England, which he hoped would result beneficially for the future progress of necessary legislation. He believed that the Prince of Wales would visit the Melbourne Exhibition, unless prevented by State reasons. The speech then proceeded to announce the introduction of bills for amending the land tax and measures of constitutional reform, including the amendment of the electoral law, the abolition of plural voting, and the amendment of the Local Government Act. The total revenue of Victoria for the past financial year amounted to £4,525,998, showing a deficit of £329,668. Additional taxation to the amount of £350,000 will be required, and the sum will probably be raised by an increase in the Customs, Excise, and Stamp Duties.

From New South Wales (where Parliament was still sitting) we are told that the revenue for the June quarter amounted to £1,175,034, showing an increase of £7203 as compared with the corresponding period of last year. The Customs revenue had decreased by £30,000, but that derived from land showed an increase of £34,000. The Government of South Australia has decided to introduce a bill for the amendment of the Constitution of the colony. The revenue for the past financial year amounted to £1,662,000, being £50,000 below the estimates. Mr. Justice Lilley has been appointed Chief Justice of Queensland in place of Sir James Cockle, resigned. The vacant Judgeship was offered to Mr. S. W. Griffith, who, however, declined it. The revenue of Queensland for the year ending June 30 amounted to £1,501,006, and the expenditure to £1,678,631, showing a deficit of £177,625.

Mr. Stone, the Attorney-General, and Mr. Ballance, the Colonial Treasurer, of New Zealand, have resigned their portfolios.

ART-BOOKS.

THE LATE SIR GEORGE GILBERT SCOTT.

An autobiographical work, however obscure the writer, has always peculiar interest. But tenfold is that interest increased when such work relates, as in the Personal and Professional Recollections of the late Sir George Gilbert Scott (Sampson Low and Co.) to the foremost figure (at least before the eye of the general public) in one of the greatest art-revivals of this or any other time, and to one also whose works have provoked, or at all events given occasion to, an infinite amount of controversy. That controversy is still, indeed, very far from abated, nor will it be allayed by these "Recollections"; a large proportion of them being of a strongly polemical character, and expressed with an outspoken bluntness and fearlessness which few would expect who have been acquainted only with the writer's courtesy, modesty, reticence, and tact in ordinary intercourse. Sir Gilbert Scott's strictures on his contemporaries—many of whom are still living, and can hardly defend themselves from posthumous attack—on his "assailants" and "traducers," as he is, it must be admitted, too apt to style his critics in the Press or elsewhere; on rival competitors, and even on his collaborateurs, cannot fail to give offence in many quarters. Some of his own gratuitous confidences are also calculated to prejudice his memory with rigid persons who cannot allow any want of straightforwardness even to procure a good end; and cannot forgive him—he a supposed champion of the Revival—for not having heroically refused to change his design for the Foreign Office from its original Gothic to the Italian, which we see, at the instance of the autocratic Lord Palmerston. An unfavourable impression may, further, be produced by the admiration which Sir Gilbert expresses for several of his works, and not always the best ones, although, on the other hand, he appears modest enough—nay, unduly so—regarding others. Then, again, he did not, like some of his almost equally fortunate rivals and successors, go the whole length with the sacerdotal dilettanti: he preserved a certain independent position; he worked, as he himself puts it, for moderate men and the multitude, which, of course, excited the rancour of extreme ecclesiologists. His strong practical common sense, sound knowledge, and wide experience were naturally equally antipathetic to the narrow and visionary bigot, and the critic who makes up in fancy and sentiment what he lacks in knowledge and judgment. Against the unexpected self-assertion and egotism of these "Recollections" we have to put the fact that no one has been more misrepresented through ignorance and partisanship. Nor in any estimate of Sir Gilbert Scott should we forget that he was the most extensively employed architect of our day, a circumstance that will explain much professional jealousy and detraction, as likewise occasional faults in the works of restoration he directed, for which he was not immediately, if he must be held morally, responsible. On the whole, however, we think these "Recollections" should raise their author in the estimation of all impartial persons, not only as regards his competency and marvellous industry, but also on account of his courage, candour, simplicity, and honesty of intention.

The early part of the book contains personal recollections, chiefly of a domestic nature. Of more general interest is the contribution to the early history of the Gothic revival, which he justly attributes to many concurrent causes. Sir Gilbert disclaims having been an initiator of the movement, though his early tastes and studies inclined in that direction. His first "awakening" arose from acquaintance with the Cambridge Camden Society; though the society afterwards preferred to him Messrs. Carpenter and Butterfield. To the elder Pugin he frankly owns great obligations, and, in particular, he "can hardly say too much as to the benefit he derived from Pugin's 'Specimens of Gothic Architecture.'" His first work of mark, for which he competed in 1840, was the admirable Martyrs' Memorial at Oxford, for which his earlier studies of the Eleanor Crosses were a good preparation. His Church of St. Giles, Camberwell—a very meritorious work for the period—soon followed. Then came his great success in the international competition for the rebuilding of St. Nicholas' Church, Hamburg, after the great fire. Very gratifying to him was his appointment as architect to Westminster Abbey. For details of his works there and in the adjacent Chapter House we must refer the reader to the book itself; as also for particulars of the formation of the Architectural Museum; the building of St. George's, Doncaster; the fruitless success in the competition for the Rathhaus at Hamburg, and the competitions for the Government offices. The whole story of this last competition is humiliating in the extreme, and the disgraceful injustice of the Government has been only too nearly paralleled in the later competition for the Law Courts. A chapter is devoted to some sensible remarks on the subsidiary arts in the Gothic revival, such as carving, metal-work, and stained glass. Sir Gilbert states, with apparent pride, that his idea in the design for the Prince Consort Memorial in Hyde Park was to erect a kind of ciborium to protect a statue of the Prince, and to adopt for this ciborium the principles, in some degree, of the ancient shrines, with their precious materials, enamels, gems, &c., on the assumption that those shrines were "models of imaginary buildings." Now, it has always seemed to us that although the intention of the Hyde Park Memorial commends itself from a sentimental point of view, yet the manner in which it is carried out involves a fundamental error, artistically considered. The mediæval shrine is, strictly speaking, not architectural; its precious materials cannot be rivalled on a larger scale; it is the minor and subsidiary goldsmith's and jeweller's art, and an attempt to reproduce its essential characteristics in another and major generic art is, therefore, a violation of æsthetic propriety.

An account of the Midland Railway Terminus brings us to the long list of restorations of our cathedrals—Ely, Hereford, Lichfield, Peterborough, Salisbury, Chichester, St. David's, Bangor, St. Asaph's, Chester, Gloucester, Ripon, Worcester, Winchester, Durham, and, last not least, St. Alban's. And in the description of these great works we are everywhere confronted with the policy or impolicy of restoration and the recent Anti-Restoration movement. The points thus raised are, however, far too numerous for discussion here. Yet we may say that the simple question of the propriety of reparative and "conservative" restoration lies in a nutshell. Thirty years ago extensive repairs of all these cathedrals were simply a necessity, to save them from ruin or a far greater amount of reparation and consequent restoration at a later period. We say "reparation and consequent restoration," because in many cases the one involves the other, whatever the anti-restorationists may say to the contrary. Moreover, alterations of many ancient buildings have been no less necessary if they were to be utilised at all for modern requirements. Such preservative reparation, or conservative restoration, and such needful alterations should be effected without interfering wantonly with any distinctive features of the building, though of a date or dates subsequent to the original construction, for such later additions form part of the history of the building. When, however, these more modern features very manifestly disfigure the building or interfere with its uses, and when, being unquestionably valueless in themselves, they conceal, replace, nullify, or destroy the beauties of the original architecture, good taste and common sense alike consent to their removal. The claims of good taste and good architecture are not to be entirely sacrificed to archæological and ecclesiological sentiment. These were Sir Gilbert Scott's principles, and it is evident throughout this book that he endeavoured loyally to apply them, though often more or less defeated by his employers, and by clerks of works, builders, and workmen interested in opposing conservative measures. Some acute remarks occur respecting the fashionable "Queen Anne style," or "family of styles," which Sir Gilbert regarded as a vexatious disturber of the Gothic movement, coming in after the "Italian mania" arising from Mr. Ruskin's writings, and the "French rage" engendered by the Lille Cathedral competition. The style, he says, was really a domestic variety of the architecture of Sir Christopher Wren; but now it embraces all varieties, from the close of the Elizabethan period to the middle of the eighteenth century, with a preference for that most resembling Elizabethan, so that it really brings in very much which is highly picturesque and artistic in character, such as no Gothic man would fail to appreciate. The Queen Anne-ites have at length "freely adopted all kinds of old fashions which a Gothic architect would hardly dare to employ; so much so, indeed, that a 'Queen Anne' house is now more a revival of the past than a modern Gothic house."

The Idealism of Art. By the Rev. A. R. Goldie, M.A. (Pickering and Co.). We must honestly warn the reader that this little book is a curious farrago of metaphysics, theology, and æsthetics, and its tone is as dogmatic and intolerant as its logic is shallow and its theory fanciful. The author's contempt for other writers on art is great, and he holds of small account such Pre-Raphaelite painters as Fra Angelico and Fra Philippo (sic) Lippi. His critical qualifications may be estimated from the fact that he names Mr. Hicks and Mrs. Louise Jopling as among the four or five British artists who "excell." Certain materialists, as he is pleased to term them, he makes very short work of by, first, flippantly asserting an imaginary solution of problems which have baffled the greatest intellects of all ages, and the solution of which, it is more than ever clear, is not within human limits of the "knowable;" and, having done so, he poses triumphantly, as though an unassailable logician. The "idealism of art" is to be realised in the person of our Lord, which when on earth was perfect in "Symmetry and Complexion," the last being "the sum of the primary colours, Red, Blue, and Yellow." "The number Three is the mark of the Godhead, the mark of the rainbow, and the mark of man." "In the brilliancy of the Rainbow tints we probably behold the colours of the future world." There is much more equally intelligible and serviceable.

A book which we may commend to artists, for other purposes, however, than those for which it is specifically designed, is Painted Tapestry, and its Application to Interior Decoration: Practical Lesson in Tapestry Painting with Liquid Colour. By Julien Godon; translated by B. Bucknall, architect. (Lechertier, Barbe, and Co.). The establishment of a Royal tapestry manufacture at Windsor has at once marked and stimulated the revived taste for tapestry hangings, as an almost incomparable means of wall decoration. But the costliness of good tapestry, whether ancient or modern, has led to various attempts at painted imitation of tapestry on canvas prepared to resemble the texture produced by weaving. These imitations, however, are generally fade and mechanical in appearance, and at once betray the false, servile, and inartistic principle on which they are produced. Yet it is easy to conceive that painting on canvas, with no reference either to the texture, design, or treatment of tapestry, is a mode of interior decoration susceptible of very great development, and promising many advantages, particularly as (when at least a flat surface has to be covered) oil and wax may be used in the media for painting, thereby rendering the canvas almost impermeable to damp. To painters and decorators desirous of adventuring in the novel field here indicated we commend this book, which contains, besides, some information respecting the various kinds of historical tapestry and their manufacture.

The prosecution of the directors and general manager of the late West of England Bank was begun on Tuesday in the Bristol Guildhall, the entire day being occupied by the counsel for the prosecution in opening his case.

The Lady Margaret Hall, one of the halls founded in Oxford for students attending the lectures of the Association for the Higher Education of Women, will be opened in October next. A house, with a good garden, has been secured in a quiet, healthy part of Oxford, overlooking the parks (Norham-gardens); and, as the Lady-Principal, Miss Wordsworth, has already had many applications from students, it seems probable that the hall may be full at its opening. The Lady-Principal would gladly receive for the hall gifts of books, good prints, or small articles of furniture. Communications may be addressed to Miss Wordsworth (present address, Riseholme, Lincoln), or to the Hon. Mrs. Talbot, Keble College, or Mrs. A. H. Johnson, 22, Norham-gardens, Oxford. An exhibition of £25 a year is offered at the hall to a student needing help towards the expenses of her education in Oxford. Candidates are requested to send in their names and references without delay. It is hoped that in time other exhibitions may be offered.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The two candidates for the St. Leger that appeared at Stockton last week fared very differently, for while Robbie Burns won his engagement in undeniable style, Palmbearer made a melancholy exhibition of himself. He was pulled out for the Great Northern Leger, in which he had only to meet Rycerski, Khamseen, and Blackthorn, and, with odds of 6 to 4 laid freely on him, he was beaten a long way from home, and finished a very bad third. He did not look half fit, and, remembering that he was returned by his intending purchaser after the Derby on the ground of unsoundness, it is probable that the Osbornes find it impossible to give him proper work. In any case, he retired to hopeless odds for his Doncaster engagement, for which he may not even start. Rycerski, who won, is a colt by Knight of the Garter—Klarinska, and had never previously figured in public, but he was too long in settling the moderate Khamseen to give promise of any great achievements in the future. The Lambton Plate produced a magnificent finish between Pride of the Highlands and Teviotdale, and Fordham, who never rode a finer race in his life, secured the verdict by a neck in the last two strides. Most unaccountably, however, he had been instructed to weigh out at 8 st. 3 lb. instead of at 8 st. 7 lb., and Osborne's objection proved fatal. Within an hour Pride of the Highlands was pulled out again for the Hardwicke Stakes, and ran second to Eirene, who was giving him 13 lb. and sex allowance. This filly must be a good one, as she gave weight to all her opponents, except Brown Tom. Old Grand Flaneur wound up a capital day's sport by securing the Wynyard Handicap Plate in gallant style. The general attendance on the Thursday showed a considerable falling off, and the programme was less interesting than on either of the previous days. Melton (8 st. 12 lb.) ran a very good horse in the Stockton Stewards' Cup, and Twine the Plaiden (7 st. 13 lb.), in spite of her advantage in the weights, could never get on terms with him. Jagellon (8 st.) again figured wretchedly in the Middlesborough Handicap, and his backers for the Great Ebor had to abandon even a forlorn hope of his success.

There was every promise of a grand three-days' sport in the York programme, and though the course was holding in parts, it was by no means so bad as might have been anticipated. The victory of Mycenæ in the first race on Tuesday gave a grand fillip to Robbie Burns in the St. Leger quotations, and instead of the "30 to 1 off." to which we have been accustomed lately, it became a case of "1000 to 60 t." Certainly, Mycenæ had nothing much to beat; still last week, even in receipt of a stone, he was of no use to "Robbie." During the morning rumours very adverse to Wheel of Fortune were in circulation, and at one time she receded to 3 to 1. When, therefore, she came out for the Yorkshire Oaks, there was a rush to inspect her. For the first time she wore cloths on her fore-legs, still it was clear that she had done plenty of good work, and, after Lord Falmouth, who also started Leap Year, had declared to win with her, it was a case of "10 to 1, bar one." The little wonder romped past the post just in her old style, almost pulling Archer out of the saddle, and, at once, 6 to 4 became the best offer against her for the Leger. Reconciliation, who was second, ran a good mare, but Leap Year never showed prominently at any part of the race. The Convivial Stakes was selected for the début of Glen Ronald, an own brother to Prince Charlie and Athol Lad. Like both of them, he is unfortunately a roarer, but in other respects he resembles the latter rather than the former. He stands considerably over 16 hands high, yet he jumped off very quickly as soon as the flag fell, and, though apparently in trouble at the bend, his long stride proved very effective, and he finally won pretty cleverly by half a length. Strathardle, a very nice filly by Blair Athol—Masquerade, was "plunged on" for the Badminton Plate, and the easy style in which Archer won upon her sent backers home rejoicing.

On Wednesday Ruperra did not start for the Ebor St. Leger, so Robbie Burns had only Coromandel II. to beat, which he did in very decisive style. The penalised animals had matters all their own way in the Prince of Wales's Stakes. Lord Falmouth evidently did not fancy the chance of Dolly Pentreath, for he gave up Archer to ride Bend Or, and upon the semblance of a finish with Brother to Ersilia the Duke of Westminster's grand colt won very easily indeed, the remainder of the field being quite out of it. The field for the Great Ebor finally dwindled down to five; and when Mar (6 st. 11 lb.), who had been beaten in his trial, retired to 7 to 1, it is not surprising that good odds were laid upon Isonomy (9 st. 8 lb.). Such a weight had never been successfully carried in this race; yet, though the running-track was almost under water in places, Mr. Gretton's marvellous horse came in alone.

A succession of hopelessly wet days has again played sad havoc with cricket, and most of the great matches of the past few days have remained unfinished. Still, the Cheltenham Week proved very successful, and there was a large company to witness the conclusion of the contest between Gloucestershire and Notts, when, for the first time in the annals of county cricket, the west-country eleven were beaten on their own ground. The scoring was not generally large, and the visitors mainly owed their great victory to the fine batting of Selby (87) and Barnes (53). This week the Notts team have made an example of the Kentish eleven, whom they have defeated in one innings with forty-four runs in hand. Oscroft (56), Scotton (77), and Barnes (54) did most of the scoring for the victors, and, on the other side, Messrs. Foord-Kelcey (42) and F. Penn (51) batted exceedingly well.

The annual meeting of the North London Swimming Club, which was held at the Wenlock Baths on Tuesday evening, was noteworthy for the defeat of Horace Davenport, the amateur champion, in the 500-Yards Championship Race. He could only get third in his heat to R. Daniels (captain North London S.C.) and W. Avery (captain West London S.C.), and in the final Daniels beat J. P. Taylor (Newcastle S.C.), the holder of the cup, in 7 min. 44¼ sec., the fastest time ever made in these baths. On Monday evening a large company assembled at the Lambeth Baths to witness a two-miles race between Miss Agnes Beckwith and Miss Laura Saigeman. The former has performed some wonderful long swims in the Thames, while Miss Saigeman has won several races in the sea, and is generally acknowledged to be the best swimmer of her sex on the south coast. The ladies kept together until about 300 yards from the finish, when Miss Beckwith, using a powerful side stroke, took a decisive lead, and won by exactly one length of the bath, or forty yards.

The English Society for the Execution of Public Works in Italy, the office of which is at 11, Via Condotti, Rome (secretary, Signor A. Liverani), have issued a map of Italy with all the existing railways, and also those ordered to be constructed by the Government. The map is based, by special authorisation of the Minister of War, on the Ordnance Map of the Italian Army; and, on account of its accuracy and clearness, will be found very useful to travellers as well as those interested in the railway system of Italy, into which so much English capital is embarked. The map may be had or ordered of E. Müller, Libreria Centrale, 146, Corso.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

Sir William Fraser, M.P., who is always ready to do kind and generous things, and who was one of the first and most munificent subscribers to the fund which I have been endeavouring to raise in this column for the relief of poor Mr. Buckstone and the family, has taken this most distressing case seriously in hand, and has written a touching appeal in the Times, in which he calls for help for the aged actor. Her Majesty the Queen has graciously sent a donation of £50, accompanied by expressions of the kindliest sympathy for Mr. Buckstone; and the Earl of Beaconsfield has recommended a grant of £100 from the Royal Bounty. All cheques and Post Office orders (I learn from Sir William Fraser) should be paid to the account of the "Buckstone Fund," Bank of England, Western Branch, Burlington-gardens. The modest peculium gathered by myself has, I am glad to say, been steadily growing since last week; and its latest outcome will be announced at the foot of my column. I do not regard it so much as a subscription from the general public, as an expression of the charitable sympathy on the part of many whom I have never seen in my life, but whom I am bold enough to look upon as friends of Mr. Buckstone and my own. At least, their letters tell me so.

Mem.: An erratum with respect to last week's Echoes. Paragraph the first, line the sixteenth, for "great grandmothers" read that which was obviously intended to be written, but was not written. I am not sure whether the error was a printer's blunder or mine. But the army of correspondents (the majority anonymous, and on post-cards) who have swooped down on me with taunting references to a trifling and palpable mistake, almost induce the belief that there are people who imagine that journalists who make a slip of the pen now and again, or printers' readers who inadvertently pass a compositor's blunder, are guilty of high treason, and should be hanged, drawn, and quartered forthwith.

Now for the Hundred Greatest Women (in the opinion of one fallible and not wholly unprejudiced enumerator). My selection runs thus:—Semiramis, Dido, Cleopatra, Sappho, Zenobia (I knew an Italian gentleman once who claimed to be lineally descended from the ex-Queen of Palmyra), Catherine de Medicis, Queen Elizabeth, Hypatia, Theodora, St. Helena, Mademoiselle de Montpensier, Madame de Maintenon, Aspasia, Madame Roland, Madame de Stael, Sarah Duchess of Marlborough, Héloïse, Eleanor of Aquitaine, Queen Philippa, St. Elizabeth of Hungary, Madame Mère (the mother of the Napoleons), Catherine II. of Russia, Isabella of Aragon, Maria Theresa of Austria, Joan of Arc, Charlotte de la Tremouille, Countess of Derby, Mrs. Siddons, Madame Malibran, Charlotte Corday, Flora Macdonald, Madame de la Valette, Mrs. Somerville, Harriet Martineau, Boadicea, Cornelia (mother of the Gracchi), Catherine Bora (who married the Rev. Dr. Luther), St. Ebba, Bianca Capello, Rachel Lady Russell, Angelica Kauffmann, Mrs. Elizabeth Montagu, Hannah More, Elizabeth Barrett Browning, Mary Wolstonecroft, Godiva, Penelope, Helen of Troy, Christina of Sweden, Giudita Pasta, George Sand, Mary Delany, Ann Flaxman, Lady Jane Grey, the Duchesse de Longueville, Grace Darling, Panthea (wife of Abradatas, King of the Lusians), Ida Pfeiffer, St. Theresa of Seville, Pocahontas, Maria dalle Donne, Ælia Pulcheria, Margaret Mercer, Doña Marina (the beautiful Indian girl who loved and befriended Cortes in Mexico), Marie Antoinette (not in prosperity, but in misfortune), Elizabeth Claypole (née Cromwell), Margaret Fuller, Anne of Brittany, Agrippina (wife of Germanicus), Madame Campan, Maria Edgeworth, Mary Grotius, Madame de Sévigné, Lady Mary Wortley Montagu (for the Letters and for inoculation's sake), St. Radegonde, Eleanor Macomber (of Albany, U.S.A.), Lucy Hutchinson, Clelia (who swam across the Tiber), Betisia Gozzadini, Charlotte Brontë, Francesca Farnese, Charlotte Cushman, Agnes Sorel, Sarah Martin (the missionary), Lady Franklin, Lady Mary Shipley, Catherine I. of Russia, Ann Seymour Damer, Joanna Baillie, Ninon de l'Enclos, Barbara of Ernecourt, Maria Gaetana Agnese, Felicia Hemans, the Countess d'Aulnois, and Lucrezia Borgia.

Yes, Donna Lucrezia, married en troisièmes noces to Don Alfonso d'Este, Duke of Ferrara. You are not to believe a word of M. Victor Hugo's wonderfully eloquent tirades against this famous lady. They are wholly unhistorical. She bore her husband three sons; she governed his duchy for him wisely and well while he was at the wars; she was the patroness of art, science, and literature; and she is mentioned by contemporary poets and historians in the warmest terms of eulogy. She died in her bed at Ferrara, in peace and honour, in 1523, having been twenty-one years the consort of Alfonso. For further particulars I refer the curious to Mr. William Gilbert, who probably knows more about the historical Lucrezia Borgia than any living writer does.

Miss Lydia Becker, in the section of Economic Science at the British Association meeting, has been vigorously taking up the cudgels (metaphorically speaking) against brutal or ignorant parents who take up physical cudgels or other weapons of chastisement against children of tender years. People do not "bang" their clocks, Miss Becker sensibly pointed out, when those machines do not go accurately. Why should we "bang" children for being a little too fast or a little too slow? The excellent lady went on to observe that she had heard of mothers who beat their children savagely because they were reluctant to go to school. I can scarcely wonder at their reluctance, seeing that when they do go to school they got thrashed there. Miss Becker's antibaculine arguments did not seem exactly to meet with the approval of a gentleman present, who quoted some such doggerel as the following:—

> Solomon said, in accents mild,
> Spare the rod and spoil the child;
> Be they man or be they maid,
> Whip and wallop 'em, Solomon said.

The dicta of the Wise Man concerning discipline have been the source of inexpressible dolour to children for very many centuries; and it has been only within the last sixty years that ferocity in the treatment of infants (I am speaking of English children, Jean Jacques Rousseau shamed the French out of the practice of beating their offspring, nearly a hundred years ago) has been gradually diminishing. In the eighteenth century the lot of the British juvenile was certainly a very cruel one. That admirable woman the Mother of the Wesleys held that a child should be made to desist from crying and to "fear the rod" at the mature age of twelve months; and Miss Maria Semple (she was of Miss Becker's way of thinking), writing on education in 1812, tells a story of a lady who was educated in early years by a relative. "On a certain day in every week she received corporal chastisement. If she had committed faults, 'the punishment was due;' if she had not, she probably would in the week ensuing. At the distance of more than half a century the memory of this person, who bore a public character for piety and virtue, was spoken of, and justly, with aversion by the person she had thus treated." Thus Miss Maria Semple.

I gratefully acknowledge receipt of the following donations for the relief of Mr. J. B. Buckstone, in addition to the sum of £143 3s., received up to last Wednesday at 46, Mecklenburgh-square, W.C.:—Walter B., £10 10s.; Miss Alice B., £1; M. Harris, £1; Lady G., £5 (will her Ladyship kindly favour me with her address? I have something to return to her); T. W. K., £10; M. Overend, £5; Mrs. Palmer, £2; J. L. Toole, £5 5s.; E. Johnson, £1 1s.; Samuel Seal, £1; T. J. G., £10; Lieut.-Col. Turnbull, £3; S. C. Hall, £2; "Three Cousins," £3; W. M. (second donation), 5s.; "Delta," £1 1s.; "Three Friends and well-wishers," £2 10; Marston J. Buszard, £5 5s.; Rev. T. H. Haydon, £1; "Tony Lumpkin" (Totnes), £1; J. Dearman Birchall, £2 2s.; Rev. C. Blatherwayt, £2 2s.; A. M. Tupp, £3 3s.; E. W. Clark, £1; "Whisper," £1; Messrs. Carpenter Westley, £5; J. S. M. (Belper), 5s.; Lieutenant-Colonel Napier, £2; J. de R., £1; M. E. T. Y., 10s.; A. Next week I shall close the subscription, so far as the "Echoes" are concerned; and if any stray donations come dropping in from time to time from far outlying friends abroad, I shall hand the money over to the order of Mr. Buckstone's representatives. THE BIRMINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

We have already given an account of the arrangements made for this great music meeting, and the programme of the performances; and have now to speak of the commencement of the Festival, which took place on Tuesday morning.

The work chosen for the opening performance was—as at several past Festivals—"Elijah," an oratorio that has taken a place in public estimation almost equal to that in which Handel's immortal "Messiah" is held. The choice of Mendelssohn's sacred masterpiece is peculiarly appropriate for the inauguration of a Birmingham Festival, it having been composed for and produced at the celebration of 1846, when the composer himself conducted it, his premature death having occurred in November of the following year. Had he lived, other important works would have been brought out by him at Birmingham, with which great centre of industry and intelligence the name of Mendelssohn will be for ever associated. Indeed, the enterprise and liberality of the festival authorities here have for years offered an example that might well be imitated in other quarters; new works, some specially commissioned, invariably forming features in a Birmingham Festival, as on this occasion, at which compositions have been produced (for the first time in England) of which we shall speak in due order.

Tuesday's performance of "Elijah" was characterised by that special grandeur of effect which has distinguished its rendering here at past festivals. The fine chorus-singing for which Birmingham is celebrated is heard to peculiar advantage in the noble choral music of "Elijah," the associations which identify the locality with the work and the composer evidently calling forth the enthusiasm of the executants. The grand choruses in each division of the oratorio again produced a special impression at Tuesday's performance, when the solo music was also well rendered. Madame Gerster gave the soprano solos with good effect; this having been her first appearance in an oratorio performance in England. The contralto solo music was divided between Madame Trebelli and Madame Patey, each of whom sang with her well-known excellence. The tenor music was also divided between Mr. E. Lloyd and Mr. V. Rigby, the efficiency of both being too familiar to the public to require fresh comment. The same is also the case with Mr. Santley, whose rendering of the music allotted to the character of Elijah was again a feature in the performance of the oratorio. In some of the concerted pieces, serviceable aid was rendered by Mrs. Sutton, Mr. Woodhall, Mr. Pountney, and Mr. Campion.

The splendid orchestra, numbering nearly 150 performers and including most of our best instrumentalists, gave full effect to the overture and the elaborate accompaniments of the oratorio. "Elijah" was preceded by the National Anthem. Sir Michael Costa conducted with his usual skill.

The evening concert (also in the Townhall, where all the performances take place) brought forward one of the new works above referred to—a setting, by Herr Max Bruch, of Schiller's "Lay of the Bell" ("Das Lied von der Glocke"). The composer has gained much distinction in Germany by many works, especially his two violin concertos, his setting of scenes from the "Frithiof's Saga" and his "Odysseus," and his reputation will probably be enhanced here by the production now referred to, the English text of which has been adapted by Mrs. Natalia Macfarren.

The work is divided into two parts, in each of which there is much skilful and effective writing, especially choral and orchestral. The pieces in the first part which produced the most effect were the chorus, "Joy shall its solemn chime betoken," the quartet and chorus, "Oh could ye linger," the elaborate and dramatic chorus, "The man must afield," the highly characteristic choral movement, "Hark! the signal of alarm," and the following closing music of the first part, descriptive of the horrors of a conflagration.

In the second part, the most noticeable features were a solemn dirge-like chorus, "From the steeple sad and slow," the plaintive contralto air, "Ah! the wife beloved is summoned" (admirably sung by Madame Trebelli), the fine chorus (preceded by a soprano solo), "Hallowed order," a melodious trio, "Peace benignant;" the music descriptive of the breaking of the mould, and that illustrating the successful casting of the bell; and the finale, "Now with might and main," in which the four solo voices, chorus, and orchestra are employed in alternation and combination, leading to a climax of great power. Among the orchestral effects are occasional ingenious imitations of the sounding of the bell. The soprano solo music was brightly rendered by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, that for contralto having been charmingly sung by Madame Trebelli—the solos for tenor and baritone having been effectively declaimed, respectively, by Mr. Vernon Rigby and Herr Henschel. The work was enthusiastically received throughout; and the composer, who conducted it, was greatly applauded and recalled. Of the merits and characteristics of the cantata we shall doubtless soon have further opportunity to speak in reference to its performance in London.

Wednesday morning was appropriated to a performance of Rossini's "Moses in Egypt;" and in the evening there was a miscellaneous concert, the programme having included Beethoven's symphony in A (No. 7), and a concert-overture by Dr. C. S. Heap. "The Messiah" was given on Thursday morning; and at the evening concert "The Lyre and the Harp" was to be produced, this being the new cantata composed by M. Saint-Saëns expressly for the festival.

The closing performances yesterday (Friday) consisted of Cherubini's "Requiem," Schubert's "Salve Regina," Sir M. Costa's offertorium, "Date Sonitum," and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," in the morning; and Handel's "Israel in Egypt" in the evening. Of the last three days' proceedings we must speak next week.

THEATRES.

At the Lyceum Miss Geneviève Ward labours hard to retrieve the misfortune of her opening night, and has placed a new play on the stage entitled "Forget me Not," which is not without merit, and is likely to meet with some favour. It is written by Messrs. Herman Merivale and F. C. Grove. It bears some resemblance to certain French dramas; nevertheless, it is claimed by its ostensible authors as original. Probably their claim is honestly made, and the resemblance is accidental. There is some crudity of structure in the arrangement of the story, which doubtless belongs to the writers; but the defect is skilfully balanced by the style of the dialogue, which is marked by antithesis, and stimulates the attention. Curiously enough for a fable which abounds in modern elements, the scene is laid in Rome; but the leading persons are an Irish lady, Alice Verney, her sister Rose, and a Mrs. Foley. Rose has lately lost her husband, the Viscomte de Brissac, whose mother early appears in the play, and exerts a serious influence on the plot and characters. Both are somewhat repulsive, and we prefer such an intimation of its nature to any analysis of its puzzling complexity. The part of the heroine contains elements which bring out the abilities of Miss Ward, and shows her capable of the sterner qualities that require great acting. She was frequently called before the curtain by an admiring audience.

The management at the Vaudeville have apparently completed their arrangements by adding a third piece to the evening's entertainment. It is not altogether new, having been originally produced at the Strand about thirteen years since under the title of "Our Domestics." Mr. Hay took his subject from the French, and made of it an agreeable trifle. Messrs. David James and Thomas Thorne played the two prominent servants, and so ably that the little drama achieved a remarkable success. With much judgment, they have resumed their original parts on the present occasion. Mr. Hargreaves sustains the rôle of the master, Mr. Crusty, on whose amorous disposition Francis, his butler, so successfully plays. The story is nearly the same as that of the English farce, "High Life Below Stairs," but there is a style in the thing which entitles it to be called a comedietta. With these three pieces, it is probable that the London public will be contented for some weeks.

The Haymarket reopened on Monday with Colman's comedy of "The Heir at Law," in which Mr. J. S. Clarke, as usual, represented Dr. Pangloss. The wonderful completeness of this assumption is well known and appreciated by all intelligent playgoers. Mr. Clarke also sustained the part of Major Wellington De Boots in "The Widow Hunt." Some new scenery has been provided for this revival, calculated to increase the general effect.

At the Park, a new drama by Mr. James Willing, in a prologue and four acts, entitled "Jane Eyre; or, Poor Relations," was produced on Wednesday.

Mr. Toole, who has lately shown himself ambitious to found a theatre named after himself, has ultimately resolved to take the Folly for about three years, after which period it is stated it will cease to be devoted to dramatic purposes, and made to form part of the adjoining Charing-Cross Hospital. The Folly will open under Mr. Toole's management early in October.

Mr. Edgar Bruce will, we understand, succeed to the management of the Prince of Wales's, upon the departure, early in the new year, of Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft to assume the conduct of the reconstructed Haymarket.

A meeting of the committee of the Iron and Steel Institute was held in the Liverpool Townhall recently—Mr. G. H. Horsfall in the chair—when it was arranged that this year's meeting shall be held in Liverpool on Sept. 24 and two following days. The use of St. George's Hall has been granted by the Corporation, and numerous places for inspection and excursion have been partly arranged for, including Messrs. Blundell's collieries, near Wigan, and the Tubular Bridge at Menia Straits. In addition to papers on the manufacture and application of steel and iron, papers on subjects of work more immediately connected with Liverpool have been promised.

Live stock from the United States and Canada arrived at Liverpool last week in double the numbers of the previous week, while the quantity of fresh meat, particularly mutton, also showed an increase. For the first time for several weeks a consignment of live pigs was landed. These animals, like the cattle and sheep from the United States, are to be slaughtered at the port of debarkation. When they were not so restricted they came to hand in large numbers, but disease having been found in one instance, they were placed under the provisions of the new Cattle Bill, since which time they diminished in numbers until not a single head was landed.

The following are the names of the gentlemen elected in 1877, who, after two years' training in this country, have passed the final examination for Civil Service of India:—J. O. The results of the first technological examinations held by the newly-formed City Institute for Promoting Technical Education have been published. These examinations were established by the Society of Arts in 1873, and at the beginning of the present year they were transferred to the institute. The number of candidates examined was 202, of whom 151 satisfied the examiners in technology. These candidates were examined in seven different subjects:—Cotton manufacture, manufacture of steel, &c., gas manufacture, wool dyeing, alkali manufacture, telegraphy, and qualitative blowpipe analysis. Besides these subjects there were nine other subjects in which it was announced that examinations would be held—viz., paper manufacture, silk manufacture, carriage building, pottery and porcelain, glass manufacture, cloth manufacture, silk dyeing, calico bleaching, &c., and photography. In these no candidates presented themselves. These candidates were examined at twenty-three different centres in various parts of the kingdom, including Oldham, Crewe, Manchester, Dublin, Liverpool, Preston, St. Helen's, Halifax, Cardiff, Bolton, Huddersfield, Blackburn, Redruth, and London.

POST OFFICE STATISTICS.

The twenty-fifth report of the Postmaster-General on the Post Office for the financial year ended March 31 has been issued. The number of post-offices established in the year 1878 was 258, raising the total number of offices open in the United Kingdom on Dec. 31 last to 13,881. Of these 905 were head-offices and 12,976 sub-offices. The number of road and railway letter-boxes were increased during the year by the erection of 580 new boxes to 11,880. The accommodation provided throughout the United Kingdom for the deposit of correspondence in the post is represented by 25,767 receptacles. In 1840, on the establishment of penny postage, there were only 4028 places of deposit. Now in London alone there are 1981.

In consequence of the London and North-Western Railway Company having put on a midnight passenger-train, it has been found practicable to extend the midnight dispatch of letters from London to Blackburn, Lancaster, Leamington, Stafford, Stratford-on-Avon, Warrington, Warwick, Wigan, Wolverhampton, and several other towns. The midnight dispatch of letters from London has also been extended in other directions, as opportunities occur.

A considerable reduction has been made in the scale of fees for late posting for evening mails at the General Post Office in London. Special letter-boxes for late posting for Continental letters, &c., for dispatch by the evening mails have been put up at the Cannon-street and Charing-cross railway stations.

The number of letters delivered in the United Kingdom during the year 1878-9 was greater than the number delivered during the preceding year by 39,640,500. The number of post-cards delivered during the year is greater by 9,208,400, of book packets and circulars is greater by 7,775,900, of newspapers is greater by 2,337,300. Thus, taking the correspondence of all kinds together, the year 1878-9 shows an increase of 58,962,100 on 1877-8. The weekly number of letters, newspapers, &c., posted in London and its suburbs during 1878 was 7,150,000, and the weekly number delivered was 7,145,000. The largest number of letters, &c., received daily by any one firm or company in London is about 3000.

The total money order business transacted during the past year shows a considerable decrease both in the number and in the amount of the orders issued, yet the transactions result in a profit to the department of £39,027, against a profit of £6420 on the transactions of the preceding year. The Inland transactions show, as compared with those of the year 1877, a decrease of 978,137 in number, and of £1,958,194 in amount. This decrease is attributed, no doubt, in some measure, to the depression in trade, but more especially to the increase in the rate of commission on orders for small sums, and to the reduction of the fee for the registration of letters. The discontinuance of the use of money orders for the payment of the salaries of National school teachers in Ireland, on April 1, 1878, was also, to some extent, especially as regards amount, the cause of the decrease, the amount paid for this purpose by means of money orders in previous years having exceeded £550,000 per annum.

The number of depositors in post-office savings banks in the United Kingdom on Dec. 31 last was 1,892,756, of whom 1,773,010 were in England and Wales, 1107 in Scotland, and 68,639 in Ireland, while at the end of 1877 the total number was 1,791,240, showing an increase during the past year of 101,516. The proportion of depositors to population was one in seventeen in the United Kingdom, one in fourteen in England and Wales, one in seventy in Scotland, and one in seventy-nine in Ireland. The balances standing to the credit of depositors on Dec. 31 last, together with interest accrued during the year, amounted to £30,411,563, being an increase of £1,670,806 upon the amount at the end of the year 1877.

Notwithstanding the continued depression in trade, the number of public telegraphic messages forwarded during the year shows an increase over the preceding year to the extent of £317,617. The total number of messages forwarded was 24,459,613, and of these 11,240,600 passed through the central telegraph office in London. Nearly 286,000,000 of words of news were delivered in the course of the year to various newspapers, clubs, exchanges, and news-rooms in the United Kingdom. The introduction of the quadruplex apparatus, by means of which one wire is made capable of simultaneously conveying four streams of messages, two in each direction, has added another to the fast-speed instruments in use by the department. Important improvements in apparatus and methods of working have, it is stated, also been effected by the officers of the engineering staff. The process of superseding overhouse by underground wires in London and other large towns has been continued.

The sale of receipt stamps by the Post Office for the Inland Revenue Department continues rapidly to increase, the amount of such sales having been £292,000 in the past year, as compared with £205,000 in 1877-78, and with £106,000 in 1874-75.

The total number of officers in the service of the Post Office on Dec. 31 last was 45,947, being an increase of 441 on the figures for the previous year; and of that number 11,448 are employed exclusively on telegraph work. There are 13,881 postmasters, 9836 clerks, and 22,068 letter-carriers, sorters, and messengers. The staff employed in London alone is 10,743, of which 5919 are attached to the chief offices in St. Martin's-le-Grand.

The government of Cyprus having been assumed by Great Britain, a post office was established in that island, as well for the purpose of regulating the internal conveyance of mails as for keeping up a postal communication with this country. At present the staff employed is a temporary one, consisting mainly of officers borrowed from this country, under the control of Mr. French, of the Telegraph Department, who has succeeded in organising a tolerably efficient service between the principal towns in Cyprus. The mail service with this country is in the hands of Bell's Asia Minor Company. It is a weekly one, the boat running between Larnaca and Alexandria, in connection with the Indian mails, viâ Brindisi, and the time occupied between London and Larnaca is eight days. Before the British occupation the mails were fifteen days in transit.

POSTAL CURIOSITIES.

The past year appears to have been no exception to the rule as regards the miscellaneous nature of articles passing through the post; many of which (about 6000 packets), having been forwarded contrary to the regulations of the department, were sent to the returned letter office for disposal. The following are some of the numerous articles observed during the year:—Live animals—such as rabbits, rats, moles, tortoise, bees, and crabs; Devonshire cream, eggs, fruit, mince and pork pies, sausages, horse-shoe nails, artificial teeth, revolvers, china ornaments, geranium cuttings, tobacco and cigars, glaziers' diamonds, &c. A packet containing a small snake and a lizard found its way to the returned letter office. Upon examining it the next day the lizard had disappeared, and, from the appearance of the snake, it was feared that it had made a meal of its companion. The following is one of many applications to the department upon matters not connected with the Post Office; it was addressed to the postmaster of Leeds:—

Sir,—I hope you will pardon me for asking of you the favour of satisfying a curiosity which cannot, without distortion, be called a morbid one. The question I am about to put is prompted by the statement in the London papers that Marwood is to be the executioner of Peace. Now, being fully cognisant, from my readings of journals more than fifty years back, that York has always retained its own executioners (Askern having succeeded Howard), I am sceptical as to the correctness of the above statement. But, assuming it to be correct, I should like to be informed why Peace's particular case should cause a deviation from the old bye-laws of your county, which gives name to an archiepiscopal province. Hoping to be pardoned for thus troubling you, I am, &c., H—— S——."

Many devices are still employed, either from ignorance or with the view of evading payment of the registration fee, small as it is, to make remittances in an irregular manner. In one instance a £20 Bank of England note was pinned to one of the pages of a book addressed to the initials of a lady at a receiving-house in the metropolitan district, and in another a halfpenny wrapper was found to contain a letter, a bill of sale, and four £5 Bank of England notes. A brown-paper parcel, which was tied with string, unsealed, and not even registered, was found to contain six sovereigns, one half-crown, two sixpences, and three threepenny pieces, wrapped up in small articles of ladies' dress. In several instances coins have been imbedded in cake and pieces of toast.

The parcels of Christmas presents which passed through the registered letter branch of the General Post Office in London exceeded 30,000 in number and three tons in weight: and the officers of the branch were continuously employed from 3.45 a.m. on Dec. 24 until noon on the 25th in disposing of this unprecedented amount of extra work. Inquiry was made respecting a letter addressed to Paris, and intended to have been registered, the contents of which were stated to be worth £125,000. The letter was found among the ordinary correspondence. Inquiry was also made for a packet containing a watch, addressed to a watchmaker in London, who positively denied having received it. The missing watch was found in a drawer in his shop.

The total number of letters received in the returned letter offices or returned direct to the writers during the year was 5,025,333, showing an increase of 151,708 as compared with the number for the preceding year, and the total of post-cards, book packets, and newspapers received was 4,080,974, or an increase of 212,057 on the number for the preceding year. 501,968 letters could neither be delivered nor returned to the sender. 18,252 articles of different kinds reached the returned letter offices without covers or addresses, showing that the necessity for the use of strong wrappers and for careful packing is not yet sufficiently recognised by the public. The number of unaddressed letters posted during the past year was 22,672. Of these 923 contained in the aggregate £249 2s. 1½d. in cash and bank-notes, and £7853 14s. 0½d. in cheques, bills of exchange, &c. 72,580 postage-stamps were found loose in the various post-offices throughout the country.

Many curiously-addressed letters are found among those undelivered in consequence of insufficient addresses. A letter from America was addressed to "Little Alice, Serio-Comic Singer, London, England." From Versailles there was one addressed, "Please to put this young man in the right train for Penge." In one case a depositor, whose occupation had been given as a "vendor of cat's-meat," in applying for an acknowledgment for a deposit which had failed to reach him in due course, took occasion to add, "The next time it occurs I shall write to the Queen."

Two packets addressed to Australia were returned to this country marked "unclaimed," and on being opened were found to contain respectively one hundred sovereigns and fifty sovereigns, without any communication in either. It is presumed that the sender directed these packets to himself, and followed them in another ship bound for the colony; but that, having died on the passage or the ship having been lost, no application was made at the post-office for them.

THE FRENCH POST OFFICE.

M. Engelhard has presented to the Paris Municipal Council a report on the establishment in the Rue Jean-Jacques Rousseau. In 1780 the little post in Paris occupied 117 postmen and had 395 receiving-boxes. It produced a gross revenue of 50,000f., which, at two sous the letter, indicated a total of 500,000 missives. In 1865 the number of objects transmitted had increased to 172,000,000. In 1878 it exceeded 430,000,000. The old buildings, now occupied as the central office, were not constructed or arranged for their present use, and the inconveniences experienced are very prejudicial to the accurate working of the system and the health of the agents. Everything is cramped; and at the great distribution of the morning the arrangement and division of the letters has to be conducted on the landings and steps of the staircase. The slightest incident gives rise to almost insurmountable difficulties, and causes deplorable errors. At the Hôtel des Postes arrive ever day the enormous quantity of about 1,200,000 objects—200,000 letters, and the rest printed matter and packets. The work is carried out by 3000 agents, 1200 of whom are postmen. The services of arrival and departure and of distribution require the employment of eighteen omnibuses for the transport of the postmen, which make 180 journeys a day; thirty-six smaller vehicles which make ten rounds each per day to collect letters, and finally numerous vans, which make 208 journeys in twenty-four hours to and from the various stations. The total number of journeys made daily by the vehicles belonging to the post-office amounts to 628, besides those of all sorts belonging to business firms and journals which are constantly arriving and departing, so that the very limited space belonging to the authorities is in a continual state of block. During the last ten years the situation has become constantly worse. The creation of post-cards in 1873 immediately caused an augmentation of 4,300,000 objects to deal with, and those figures rose in 1878 to 8,800,000 cards. The postal reform effected in May, 1878, has produced an increase of 20 millions in the number of letters, and 60 millions in printed matter.

Mr. Thomas Carlyle was able to attend the marriage of his niece and amanuensis, Miss Aitken, which took place on the 21st inst., at the house of her parents, in Dumfries. The bridegroom was one of her Canadian cousins, Mr. Alexander Carlyle, B.A., of The Bield, Brentfield, Ontario. It is understood that the newly-married pair are to reside at Chelsea with their venerable relation.

The first turf of a new line intended to establish railway communication between the northern and southern counties of England by a line about forty miles in length, beginning near the Didcot station of the Great Western Railway and running viâ Newbury to Winchester, was turned on Tuesday by the Countess of Carnarvon. The Countess was accompanied by Lord Carnarvon and a distinguished party from Higden Castle. The members for the county, Mr. Walter, Colonel Loyd-Lindsay, and Mr. Wroughtons; the Mayor and Corporations of Newbury, Winchester, Andover; and Odd Fellows, Foresters, rifle corps, volunteers, fire brigade, and other bodies attended. Triumphal arches were erected, and there was a great display of bunting. After the ceremony of turning the turf, luncheon was served in the Corn Exchange, at which 700 persons were present.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Lady Rosebery has promised to contribute 200 guineas to to the fund for repairing the Western Synagogue (St. Alban's-place), and the sum has been accepted by the synagogue.

A cheque for the sum of £200, bequeathed to the Lord Mayor by the late Mr. J. E. Ralli, of the firm of Ralli Brothers, for the use of the Mansion House poor-box (as stated in our "Wills" column), was handed in at the Mansion House on Saturday on behalf of the trustees under Mr. Ralli's will.

The fifteenth annual exhibition of flowers and plants, in connection with the East Tower Hamlets Floricultural Society, was held on Monday and Tuesday in the large hall attached to the Grecian Theatre, City-road. Although the season has been somewhat backward for the growth of flowers, there was a profuse display of floral beauty. In addition to the flowers and plants exhibited by the members of the society, there was exhibited a choice collection of fine foliage plants from Victoria Park, by the express permission of Mr. S. Noel, Commissioner of Works.

There were 2370 births and 1322 deaths registered in London last week. Allowing for increase of population, the births were 21, and the deaths so many as 186, below the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths included 4 from smallpox, 42 from measles, 61 from scarlet fever, 11 from diphtheria, 40 from whooping-cough, 19 from different forms of fever, and 174 from diarrhœa; thus to the seven principal diseases of the zymotic class 351 deaths were referred, against numbers increasing from 194 to 296 in the four preceding weeks. These 351 deaths were 68 below the corrected average number from the same diseases in the corresponding week of the last ten years. In Greater London 2874 births and 1568 deaths were registered. The mean temperature of the air was 58·7 deg., being 2·8 deg. below the average. The duration of registered bright sunshine in the week was 17·5 hours, the sun being above the horizon during 99·8 hours.

The Royal Humane Society's silver medal has, on the recommendation of the Prince of Wales, been unanimously voted to Henry Voisard, of Havre, formerly a captain in the French merchant service, for saving Douglas Yates, of the yacht Hildegarde, under the following circumstances:—On the 7th ult., during the International Yacht-Race at Havre, Douglas Yates was washed overboard from the bowsprit of the Hildegarde while tending the jib topsail in the course of the race. Captain Voisard, who witnessed the accident from on board the Hermine, a small screw-steamer, at once plunged in to the rescue of the drowning man, who had become disabled from the fall, and after great difficulty, owing to the wind blowing fresh from the westward with considerable force, the weather being cloudy and squally, succeeded in rescuing the man from being drowned, although, unfortunately, Yates died about two hours afterwards of congestion of the brain. The gallantry of the act was much enhanced by the fact that at the time of the accident the Hildegarde was going at full racing speed through the water, with all sail set, in a west-going tide, which caused a short, chopping sea.

Mr. Gladstone was present at a dinner given on the 21st inst. to the paupers in St. Pancras Workhouse by Mr. Skoines, one of the guardians. All the poor people present were either seventy years old, or had nearly attained that age, and Mr. Gladstone said he was thus able to address them as his contemporaries. He said he had come up to town mainly to attend the entertainment, because he felt that it was "a kindly and a generous endeavour to brighten for one day, at least, the existence of those to whom external fortune has not been kind in allotting what are called the goods of life." He felt that Mr. Skoines was doing a good act and setting a good example. Mr. Gladstone also expressed his sympathy with the inmates of the workhouse, and his desire that every possible indulgence should be afforded them consistent with the interests of the community. During the dinner the boys' band from the Industrial Schools of St. Pancras at Leavesden performed some lively music, and the piper and six of the boys with their bagpipes from the Royal Caledonian School passed round the tables. The programme of the day's amusements included a garden party in St. Pancras-gardens (which, however, could not be carried out in consequence of the rain), tea at six o'clock, the dancing of M. Wilmott on an invisible tight-rope, a performance of Moody and Sankey's revival music by the Rev. Z. B. Woffendale, "Professor" Vaughan's Punch and Judy show, and a concert.

Baroness Burdett-Coutts and party arrived at Malta in the yacht Walrus on the 22nd inst., and proceeded to the Ionian Islands without disembarking.

The Welsh Eisteddfod concluded at Carnarvon yesterday week, the Mayor presiding. The chief literary prize was awarded to the Rev. David Griffith, Aberdare, for an ode on faith, other literary honours falling to the Rev. Eiddon Jones, Llanrug; Owen Jones, Cricieth; John Owen, Wigan; and Mr. John Jones, Rhyl. Mr. Rees, Swansea, was adjudged best musical composer, and Miss Parry, Birkenhead, best pianist. Portdinorwie choir won the choral competition, and workmen from Mr. Assheton Smith's quarries prizes for slate carving.

The following are the successful candidates at the recent open competition for admission to the Royal Indian Engineering College, Cooper's-hill, Surrey:—R. W. Rowland, 3018 marks; H. Taylor, 2749; C. THE BLACKBIRD.

To the "Zoo" one morn in May
Moodily I bent my way;
Idly to a corner went
Where bright foreign birds are pent.
Mid their screaming, chattering, croaking,
While a tame one I was stroking,
Suddenly a blackbird's song
Burst melodious, clear, and strong:
From a flowering hawthorn near me
Came the joyous strain to cheer me.
Other birds were stricken mute
With the sweet stops of his flute.
As his fluttering ecstasy
Shook the blossoms from the tree,
So the throbbings of his song
Surged in a tumultuous throng;
Yet distinct each mellow note
As from prima donna's throat;
Touched with thrilling plaintiveness,
Sweeter e'en than joy's excess.

With the first faint breath of spring
You may hear the blackbirds sing,
See them busily nest-making
Odds and ends of all kinds taking—
Moss, root-fibres, and small sticks—
Which with skill they intermix;
And, when woven this and that in,
Line it warm and soft as satin.
Here full soon a fledgeling brood
Will be clamouring for their food.
Gathering every day more strength,
Greatly daring grown at length,
These bold birdies leave their nest,
Bent upon adventurous quest;
On a friendly limb alight,
In a state half joy, half fright;
Here they rest awhile; then try,
Flutteringly at first, to fly;
But, assured of their new might,
Take each time a bolder flight;
Lastly, bid their nest adieu,
For "fresh woods and pastures new."—J. L.

BURST MELODIOUS, CLEAR, AND STRONG."

MUNICH ART-EXHIBITION.

(By our Special Correspondent.)

Pictures are being daily added to the Munich International Exhibition, although it has been open nearly a month, and the catalogue is consequently far from complete. One looks in vain for the names of Leighton, Millais, Watts, Marcus Stone, and the one or two other Englishmen, whose pictures—from the wish of their owners probably—have found their way to Munich. How far the pictures which have been sent are representative of their authors shall be considered in the proper place. In the meantime it may be remarked that this almost total absence of British work is not altogether the fault of our artists. Very few of them, from the inadequate manner in which the exhibition was advertised, knew of it; and other sources of information were closed from the circumstance that the London agents of the Munich authorities, although very energetic business men and highly esteemed in the City, were quite unknown in art-circles, and therefore powerless as to influence. Another thing adverse to the possibility of the German people becoming better acquainted with British art was the fact that our Government, unlike that of France, gave no official recognition, by money vote or otherwise, to the scheme.

Although the international element is thus but partially present in some instances, and totally absent in others, and although there is nothing from the immediate hand of Piloty, Germany's greatest master, on its walls, the Munich Exhibition is both brilliant and varied, and to the English student eminently instructive. Including painting, sculpture, architecture, drawings—which in Germany invariably means works in black-lead pencil—water-colours, cartoons, and engravings, the collection numbers about two thousand.

The building in which these are contained is in design something after the manner of our first Great Exhibition, and was erected in 1854 for the International Art-Show of that year. A similar exhibition was held in it in 1869, and the present is the third. The vestibule in the centre, which serves also the purposes of a transept, is a large square hall, with a coved ceiling, rich in architectural and other decoration. It was designed by Albert Schmidt, and the figure-subjects in the various spandrils have been painted by fifteen of the most eminent artists in Munich. Round the coved ceiling are golden medallions of the great painters, and in the centre of the hall rises a fountain, which reveals itself pleasantly to the ear, although the bosky greenery which environs it conceals it from the eye. This great reception-hall, as we may call it, is approached by a wide entrance-space, hung with rich tapestries after Raphael's famous composition in the Vatican; and all round both halls, and, indeed, all through the whole of the exhibition, are placed at appropriate intervals, and at salient points, works in sculpture without regard to nationality. They are used, in short, decoratively as well as objects of exhibition, and the first work of this kind which meets the eye on entering the grand square hall alluded to is a colossal bust of Wagner's Royal patron, backed by the masses of foliage through which the fountain babbles to the passers by of its whereabouts.

To the right of this space, then, lies the foreign region; to the left, that of Germany. On leaving it architectural design ceases; the walls have the pictures for their decoration, and the glass roof is concealed by white awnings, so arranged as to temper and direct the light. The reader will have a fair idea of what the Munich Exhibition is like, if he imagines himself walking through the various courts of our first Great Exhibition, or, for that matter, of the Crystal Palace at Sydenham; only, instead of looking at objective representations of architectural epochs, he glances his eyes along walls fairly covered, but by no means crowded, with examples varying in size and excellence of contemporaneous European art.

We do not propose inflicting on our readers anything like detailed criticism, space would not allow of it, and our object is rather to give them a general idea of what the exhibition is like than an exhaustive analysis of its contents. The paintings adorning the vestibule, for example, are both historical and legendary, and lifesized portraits of Bismarck and Moltke, by Lenbach, we believe; and a Nile landscape, by Vertunni, of Rome, showing through palm-trees the setting sun, add further to its variety. One picture represents the susceptible Hagen contemplating the water-nymphs of the Rhine by J. Schmid, of Vienna; another, whose author's name we could not ascertain, shows Perseus holding the Gorgon's head towards the monster which threatens Andromeda; and a third represents a "Temptation of St. Anthony." All these are lifesize, and treated in a very unconventional manner. In historical subjects there are Francis the First, when detained in Madrid, laying before Charles the Fifth the stipulations of peace, by A. Treidler, of Berlin; and Mrs. Claypole beseeching her father, Oliver Cromwell, not to think of aspiring to the Crown, by J. Schrader, of Berlin. It may be remarked here that English history and the dramas of Shakspeare are frequently resorted to by German artists for the subjects of their pencil.

The sculpture adorning the same apartments consists of such works as Toberentz of Berlin's nude "Elf;" S. Salvini of Bologna's "Youthful Giotto;" E. Braga of Milan's seated Bacchus; and the famous negress pulling indignantly at her manacles, which attracted much admiration in the Italian section of the French Exposition last year, but is omitted altogether in the catalogue of the Munich Exhibition. These are all in marble. There are also two groups in clay of great art excellence, the one touchingly pathetic, representing a man holding up his right hand appealingly to Heaven, with his drowned son lying across his knees. The author, though not mentioned in the catalogue, is, we believe, R. Ohmann. The other clay group is called the "Goose-Stealer," and is by R. Diez, of Dresden. A wandering musician of sturdy proportions, with his pipes at his back, has been successful in securing a couple of geese; but the birds prove rather refractory, and while he grips one awkwardly with his right hand the other is likely to escape, if not prove his overthrow by the uncontrollable splutter it makes between his legs. The modelling is very facile, and there is much spirit in the rendering. Besides these there are a "Phryne," by F. Barzaghi, of Milan; a "Cupid Closing the Eyes of Love," by Donato Barcaglia, of Milan; a similar subject by F. G. Villa, of the same city, showing Cupid on tiptoe placing a bandage on the eyes of a seated Venus; a "Vanitas," by G. Tscherne, of Vienna; a magnificent female figure seated on a flower-wreathed throne, by L. Sussmann-Hellborn, of Berlin; a winged sorceress, of startling mien, holding a serpent, by C. Cauer, of Creuznach; and several others, mainly of the Italian school, some of which graced the Paris Exposition of last year. While among the sculptures, we must not omit to mention the magnificent bust of Beethoven, by C. Zumbusch, of Vienna, notable for its colossal size and masterly modelling.

Turning to the left, we enter the picture region proper, which consists of a series of large rooms and side recesses, making upwards of thirty in all. For the most part these are devoted to landscapes and subjects in genre, with here and there a portrait, and occasionally a figure-subject lifesize. In seapieces the Germans have in many instances followed the Belgian school, and in some of their landscape and cattle pictures the same influence prevails. The "Fox in Trouble," which consists in his being worried by a powerful black dog, while a group of sheep look wonderingly on, and a cock makes a hasty exit with the aid of wings and feet, crowing loudly as he goes, is from the spirited pencil of M. Lebling, of Munich. Another rustic subject is "The Return from the Hay-field," by J. Nörr of Munich, the hay-cart being drawn by bullocks, while some geese and children occupy the foreground. The aerial perspective here is nicely rendered. A "Sheep-stall in Higher Weimar," by A. Brendel, of Weimar, belongs to the same class of subject, and all are characterised by sound drawing, vigorous modelling, and a tendency to subdued tones, and, in some instances, when the Munich school is concerned, these subdued tones disappear in what looks very like absolute blackness.

To this category certainly does not belong L. Dill, of Munich, for his "Morning on the Venetian Lagoons" is remarkably luminous, and the large sand bents on which a lad and three girls hold friendly intercourse, with the beach of Scheveningen beneath them, has also a very bright outdoor look. This remark applies also to the works of G. Oeder, of Düsseldorf, and G. Bauernfeind, of Munich.

As examples in genre we would point to E. Hildebrand's (Karlsruhe) "Anxious Hours"—a father and mother at the bed of a sick child, and to A. Spring's (Munich) "Card-players." We class with this, although drier, and perhaps scarcely so suave in treatment, A. R. Grünenwald's (Munich) enraged "Reitersknechte," a subject into which the comical element enters. For real stirring incident, however, blended with humour, we turn to P. Borgmann's "Upset Coach" and to the three contributions of Professor Diez. Like many other pictures, they are not yet in the catalogue; but they doubtless will be when the house of Fleischmann issues the third edition. First, we have a poor terrified woman on her knees, having her creel ransacked by a robber, who has dismounted, while his companion of the road sits with Don Quixote-like calmness motionless in his saddle. Second, we have an amusing picture of the excitement created by "His Excellency's Coach" pulling up before a village ale-house; and third, we have all the bustle, and almost the noise, occasioned by a horse-market which is being held before a village, with one of the prettiest sky-lines we ever saw. The colouring in these cabinet pictures is very charming, and the execution as spontaneous as the figures and the grouping are natural. Breling is a pupil of Diez, we believe, and his works show that he is not altogether without some claim of being considered the Meissonier of Munich. Professor Knaus, who is one of the best genre painters in Germany, like Piloty, has nothing in the present exhibition. A. Oppel, of Munich, has a white-bearded jewel-dealer, a small picture with all the exquisite finish of an old Flemish master; and there are several German artists who adopt the same minute style.

Foremost among the bolder handlers of the brush is Pigelheim, whose "Moritur in Deo" is, for rich suggestive colour and vigorous execution, one of the pictures of the exhibition. It represents an angel stooping over the beam of the cross, and kissing devotionally the dead brow of Our Saviour. Another free handler of the brush is A. Erdtelt, whose portraits are all good, especially that of the student in the broad sombrero, with the long clay pipe in his hand. We have also a large canvas covered very spiritedly with an episode in the legend of "The Wild Huntsman," whom we see on a white charger dashing through the air with fitting accompaniments past the hoary walls of an old castle. It is by A. Tschautsch, of Berlin. Close by hangs A. Conrad's woman selling geese from a cart, and near it several remarkably able pictures by P. Meyerheim, of Berlin. There is a charmingly painted life-sized "Julia Capulet," attired in white, leaning back on her couch trying on her ring, by Bertha Sieck, of Munich, and Hero embracing the dead body of Leander as he lies on the shore, by C. Gebhardt, all lifesize.

In the long hall at the extreme end of the left wing are several large canvases illustrating incidents in the late Franco-German War. First of all, there is depicted on a canvas, some thirty feet by eighteen, the proclamation of the King of Prussia as Emperor of Germany in the grand hall of Versailles. It is painted by A. Von Werner, of Berlin; and, considering the number of portraits he had to introduce and the all-prevailing dark-blue uniform of the many dignitaries, he has succeeded wonderfully. At one end is a portrait, larger than life, of the Emperor in full career on his bay war-charger, pointing commandingly with his gloved hand, painted by W. Camphausen, of Düsseldorf, and at the other end of the hall is the Crown Prince, booted and spurred, seated on a red charger. O. Von. Faber du Faur, the painter of this equestrian portrait, was once an officer of cavalry himself; but, taking to art, became a pupil of Piloty, and ultimately succeeded in gaining a high position as an artist. The battle-pictures we have referred to are by H. Lang, of Munich, W. Emélé, E. Hunten, and F. Adam. The picture which in this hall redeems it from being entirely given over to incidents in war is by G. Papperitz, and represents, with figures, male and female, larger than life and in a variety of attitudes which would have attracted the admiration of Michael Angelo himself, the arrival of Charon's laden boat at the far side of the Styx. As to composition, the sweep of line and the distribution of mass is grand, and the colouring rich, with a rocky background appropriately gloomy and striking.

The other pictures which give character and individuality to the German section of the exhibition are "Luther's Entrance into Worms on a Country Cart," preceded by a stalwart man in fluted armour on a mighty war-horse, and welcomed as he passes under the city gate by crowds of eager disciples, male and female, old and young, painted by K. Weigand, of Munich; a large canvas by F. Keller showing the Margrave Ludwig William of Baden (the Turk-Conqueror) mounted on a cream-coloured horse, swooping down with his troopers on a Turkish camp, much in the manner of Makart; J. F. Brandt has a similar subject on a smaller scale as to the figures, and has succeeded wonderfully in rendering swiftness of motion, the confusion arising from overturned tents, and the terror inspired by sudden battle. Here we have a very good example of the Munich tendency to blackness which has already been referred to, and which finds its supreme exponent, perhaps, in Munkacsy, whose noble picture of "Milton Dictating 'Paradise Lost' to his Daughters" has but just been added to the exhibition.

The two pictures, however, which will make most impression upon judges are E. Zimmermann's Christ in the Temple when twelve years old Disputing with the Doctors, and "The Infanticide" of G. Max. Both are Munich artists, and it is much to the credit of the school that it should have produced two works of so much originality and of such quality. The mother seated by a lonely reed-grown rock and kissing tenderly the baby she has killed is too painful further to describe; yet the fascination of the picture permits no one to pass it, and the terrible tragedy of the thing goes straight to the heart of every beholder. "Christ in the Temple," on the other hand, with his frank boy-face, and his loose white dress, encircled with a pale lilac sash, as he stands with Rembrandtish luminosity, in the midst of a dark group of four aged priests, and discourses to them with easy hand-gesture, is delightful to look at; and the simplicity, spontaneity, and directness of the whole seem to make the spectator forget the supreme character of the act, and busy himself only with the interesting actuality before him.

Our next article will treat of the various foreign schools which have sent contributions to the Munich Exhibition.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

At the ranges at Wormwood-scrubbs a rifle contest by members of the St. George's for prizes of the value of several hundred pounds, including the St. George's Challenge Cup and the Turner Challenge Plate (each of the value of 100 gs.), the Ladies' Challenge Plate (value 50 gs.), and other handsome trophies, was held on the 20th inst. The challenge plates were won as follows:—The St. George's Challenge Cup, gold medal, and silver badge, Private Jackson; the Turner Challenge Plate and silver medal, Private Williams; and the Ladies' Challenge Plate and silver medal, Quartermaster Andrews. The regimental prizes were keenly contested for, the first prize, value £6, being taken by Private Rosenthal, and the second, of £5, by Private F. A. Williams. Lieutenant Johnson and Private W. C. Williams, both £4 each; and the other prizes, ranging in value from £3 10s. to £2, were awarded to Private A. Thornton, Private Thrower, Private Jackson, Colour-Sergeant Snowdon, Private D. Smith, Private King, Private A. Fearnhead, Private Taylor, Quartermaster Andrews, Private Troake, Corporal Stafford, and Private Harris. In the third series, restricted to members who had not won a prize in any series this year, the winners were Private C. Thornton, Private A. Graves, Captain Holloway, Private Coram, Private Wenmoth, Private Parsons, and Captain Criddle. The last contest was for the Volley-firing Challenge Plate—in a military point of view the most important. No. 2 (Captain Holloway's) company were the winners.

The highest score that has ever been reported as made with the Snider rifle was obtained on the 21st inst. by Sergeant Woolley, of the 6th Cheshire R.V., at the All-comers' contest of the Yorkshire Rifle Association. He made 97 out of a possible 105 points, Queen's ranges, 200, 500, and 600 yards, seven shots at each distance, the score being respectively 34, 33, 30. This is one point higher than the score which took the silver medal in the Queen's Prize at Wimbledon this year, when the weapon used was the Martini-Henry.

The results of the annual rifle contest of the London and Westminster (46th Middlesex) on the 16th inst., at the Government ranges, Milton, near Gravesend, have been announced. The Hawkshaw Challenge Cup, value 25 guineas, which has to be won two years in succession by the same member before it becomes his property, was won by Private A. Gentle. The Ladies' Challenge Cup was won for Mrs. Routledge by Sergeant Simmonds, and a silver challenge cup for the best aggregate by Captain Knight. An extra battalion prize was awarded to Surgeon Jackson. The second-class prizes were won at 400 yards by Private Chapman, Sergeant W. A. Smith, Corporal Tucker, Sergeant Dovaston, and Private Hood; at 500 yards, by Private Wood, Sergeant Allinson, Corporal Marten, Private Finigan, and Lance-Corporal Olley; and at 600 yards by Private C. Martin, Corporal Lowe, Private Gentle, Sergeant Simmonds, and Sergeant French. The highest scores for the third-class prizes were—200 yards, Colour-Sergeant Biden; and 300 yards, Sergeant J. T. Mackey. The aggregate prizes, at 200 and 300 yards, were awarded to Private Holloway, Sergeant Caley, Sergeant Stebbing, and Colour-Sergeant Robertson; and at 400, 500, and 600 yards, to Surgeon Jackson, Private W. Edwards, Colour-Sergeant Collings, and Corporal Hoffman. The regimental badge for the highest aggregate at 200, 300, 400, 500, and 600 yards, was won by Captain Knight, next to whom were Sergeant Edwards, Sergeant Buckland, and Sergeant Simmonds. The list also included Nursery prizes and a Permanent Staff competition.

The annual Regimental Prize Meeting of the London Irish (28th Middlesex) has also been held at the Milton Ranges, and resulted in some very good practice. Among the donors of the prizes were the Duke of Connaught (Honorary Colonel), the Marquis of Donegal (Commandant) and the Marchioness of Donegal, Major-General Sir H. Daubeney, K.C.B., Lieutenant-Colonel Ward, and other persons of distinction. In Series A of the Battalion Prizes the highest winning scores were—£12 and Challenge Cup, value £25, Sergeant Clifford; £8, Colour-Sergeant Watts; £6, Sergeant Browne; £5, Private Eade; £4 each, Captain Inglis and Corporal Guthrie; £3 10s. each, Private English and Corporal Denman; £3 each, Private Glover, Private Barnes, and Private Tough; £2 10s. each, Sergeant Wheeley, Captain Despard, Sergeant Lee, and Colour-Sergeant Osborne; and £2 each, Sergeant Burrowes, Corporal Knight, Private Richardson, and Private Dunn. The principal prizes in the remaining contests were won as follows:—Series B (five shots at 200 yards), Corporal Weale and Corporal Good; Series C (five shots at 200 and 500 yards), Sergeant-Instructor Fitzgerald and Sergeant-Instructor Reynolds; Series D (volley-firing for a silver challenge cup, five shots at 400 yards, rear rank standing), winners, A company. The same company also won the Daubeney Challenge Cup for the highest company scores of eight men in Series A.

Last Saturday the Holms Challenge Trophy was fired for at Ilford between the Tower Hamlets Rifle Brigade and the 1st Administrative Battalion, Tower Hamlets. The 9th Essex were eligible, but did not appear. The weather was very unfavourable, rain descending heavily; but, notwithstanding this, the shooting was remarkably good, the brigade winning the cup with the fine total of 700 points, against 541 made by the 1st Administrative Battalion. The ranges were 200, 500 and 600 yards, seven shots at each, and ten men competed from each regiment.

At Rainham the 1st City of London Engineers held their annual prize-meeting, the principal prizes going to Corporal Ridgway, Sergeant Belville, Sergeant Coredon, Lance-Corporal Brock, Bandmaster Rayner, Sergeant Cotter, Sergeant-Major Clarke, Sergeant-Major Collins, Quartermaster-Sergeant Peck, Lance-Corporal Glover, Sapper Hirkup, Lance-Corporal Wellingham, and Lance-Corporal Andrew.

At Wormwood-scrubbs Mr. Godwin's prize of 25 guineas was shot for by the South Middlesex, and resulted in a tie between Private Mempes and Corporal Cooper.

The nineteenth annual prize meeting of the 33rd Middlesex took place on the range belonging to the corps on the 16th inst. Private Knight, jun., made the highest possible score for the Ladies' Prize, putting seven consecutive "eyes" on at 200 yards; and a five-guinea cup, given by the Drapers' Company, was carried off by Corporal H. Conn. In nearly all the events points were added according to the number of drills the competitor had attended during the year. In some cases as many as ten points were added, which raised an indifferent shooting score into a prominent place on the register. About forty members took part in the contest.

A rifle-match took place on Monday between the London Scottish and the 2nd Administrative Battalion Surrey, at the ranges of the former on Wimbledon-common. The scores were as follows:—London Scottish, 703; Surrey Corps, 604—showing an easy victory for the Scottish. The three highest scorers, who won the sweepstakes in connection with the match, were Private G. Wright, Private R. Murray, and Colour-Sergeant G. Mortimer—all members of the winning team.

At the Park Ranges, Tottenham, about 150 competitors of the Honourable Artillery Company of London held their annual rifle-meeting for prizes of an aggregate value of several hundred pounds, presented, among many others, by the Prince of Wales, who holds the position of "Captain-General and Honorary Colonel." The results on Monday were as follow:—The Hon. Mrs. Loyd-Lindsay's competition: Private R. Parker, £10 10s.; Lieutenant H. Munday, Fitzroy Lodge prize, £5 5s.; Private T. Wace, officers' subscription prize of £5 5s.; Private T. Munn, Major Taylors' prize of £5; Lieutenant J. A. Hunt, Veteran Company's prize of £4 14s.; Private W. James, officers' subscription prize of £4 4s.; Private H. Howkins, officers' subscription prize of £3 3s.; Lieutenant Stohwasser, officers' subscription prize of £2 2s; and Private F. Parker, officers' subscription prize of £1 1s. Non-commissioned Officers' Prizes: £3 3s. each—Private Girling, Drill-Sergeant J. Pash, Drill-Sergeant H. Bateman; £2 2s. each—Private E. Hodgkinson, Private A. Hodgkinson, and Private J. Quarm; £1 1s.—Lieutenant L. T. Crook. Lieutenant-Colonel Loyd-Lindsay's Prize, £15 15s., and the Court of Assistant's Prizes: Winners—Lieutenant H. Munday, Private A. Kitt, and Private T. Wace. Lieutenant Munday thus took the two principal prizes of the first day, amounting to 25 gs. The big event of Tuesday was the Prince of Wales's Prize, £20 in money, awarded to the highest scorer, and three additional prizes, value £10, voted by the Court of Assistants, for those members who made the next highest figures. Another prize depended on the result—that of Mr. Henry Freshfield, president of the Hon. Artillery Company, for "the best aggregate in the competition for the Prince of Wales's, Lieutenant-Colonel Lindsay's and the Hon. Mrs. Lindsay's prizes." By a rule of the company, all previous winners of the Prince's prize were ineligible; and among the number was Lieutenant Munday, the well-known shot. Lieutenant J. H. Williams, who tied for the St. George's Prize at Wimbledon in 1878, and at Ayr this year, won the Prince of Wales's Prize. Private C. E. Lewis, No. 6 company, the Court of Assistants' Prize of £5; and Private F. W. Bowring the Court of Assistants' Prize of £3; the Right Hon. Lord Colville of Culross's Prize, for the member making the highest aggregate in the preliminary contests for the Prince of Wales's, Lieutenant-Colonel Loyd-Lindsay's, and the Hon. Mrs. Lindsay's prizes, was won by Lieutenant Stohwasser. Private Wace made 197, and Private Munn 195, but were ineligible, having won other prizes.

FINE ARTS.

The autumnal exhibition of the Birmingham Royal Society of Artists opened on Monday last. Since the last exhibition several improvements have been made in the rooms, which are now second to none in the provinces for effect, convenience of arrangement, ventilation, and lighting. The Society has set an excellent example to other bodies of the same kind by not only limiting the right of members to places on "the line," but by making this privilege available only every alternate year instead of annually, as hitherto. The collection, which numbers 828 items, consists, as usual, in large proportion of works which had been previously exhibited at the Royal Academy or other London exhibitions, but there are many others by London, foreign, and local artists which are now exhibited for the first time. Among the better known pictures may be mentioned "The Princes in the Tower," by Millais; "The Poacher's Widow," by Briton Rivière; J. Brett's "Home of the Kittywake" (Carnarvon); "Captive Briton," by W. Small; "Wasteland," by Aumonier; "An Arab Surveying the Cross," by P. R. Morris; Vicat Cole's autumnal picture from the last Academy Exhibition; "An Ambuscade, Edgehill," by Seymour Lucas; "A Greek Ode," by A. Elmore; "The World Forgetting," by J. C. Horsley; A. W. Hunt's "Norwegian Midnight," which has been purchased for the Birmingham Picture Gallery; "Leafy June," by the same artist; and "The Cottabo," an important picture by the Roman artist Signor Scifone, which was "skied" at the late Academy Exhibition. The portraits include Cardinal Newman, Mr. Gladstone, and Professor Huxley, by a local artist, Mr. W. T. Roden. Other local contributors are—in figure-subjects, Mr. Jonathan Pratt; and in landscape, &c., Messrs. E. R. Taylor, Henshaw, Edwin Taylor, S. H. Baker, and P. M. Feeney and F. H. Harris. Mr. Allen Everett, the honorary secretary, is a contributor of architectural subjects.

An excellent portrait of Dean Stanley has been published by Mr. Robert Dunthorne, of Vigo-street. It is the work of the accomplished etcher M. Leon Richeton, and to the usual suggestiveness of the etching-needle is added a rare degree of animation due to the work having been executed from life; at the same time, the expression is characteristically thoughtful and grave. The autograph of the worthy Dean is attached to the first ten impressions. The same publisher has issued a very good etching by M. V. Lhullier, from Mr. Seymour Lucas's picture "As Dry as a Kiln," a cavalier with rueful visage looking askant into an empty tankard.

The Scotsman states that the very valuable and interesting collection of antique glass, collected in Rome and its neighbourhood by the Earl of Northesk, has been presented by that nobleman to the Edinburgh Museum of Science and Art, where it has long been on loan. The importance of the gift is enhanced by the fact that the museum has just acquired the collection of antique Egyptian, Phœnecian, Egypto-Roman, and Greek glass made by the eminent collector M. Piot, of Paris. These two collections will render the museum especially rich in antique glass; and, as it already possesses a good collection of more modern examples, few museums will exceed it in this interesting branch of art-industry.

On Monday last the Cambrian Archæological Association assembled at Welshpool for their thirty-fourth annual meeting, the inaugural address being delivered by the President-elect, Mr. C. W. Williams-Wynn, M.P. The Welsh archæologists have been occupying the whole of the week in excursions into the surrounding districts and in the reading and discussion of papers.

Some photographs possessing great sweetness and clearness of tone of the Queen and Princess Beatrice have lately been taken at Windsor by Mr. Arthur J. Melhuish, and are published by Messrs. Marion. An improved process, almost instantaneous in its celerity, is said to have been employed, and the statement is borne out by the way in which a gracious smile on the face of her Majesty has been caught; we remember no previous photograph of the Queen with so pleasing an expression.

The City Press states that the portrait of Mr. Sheriff Burt, painted by Mr. J. Edgar Williams, which was at the Academy this year, has been subscribed for by upwards of a thousand of the employés of the firm of Messrs. J. Mowlem and Co., and presented to Mrs. Burt.

An important work of restoration is reported from Rome to have been successfully accomplished in the Church of Sta. Maria del Popolo—namely, the restoration of the mosaics and paintings in the famous Chigi chapel of that church. This chapel was constructed and decorated from the designs of Raphael. The mosaics of the cupola—which, however, were not finished till long after Raphael's death—represent the creation of the heavenly bodies, with each planet being figured its guardian angel. This series has been reproduced in outline by L. Grüner. Below, in the pendentives, are the Four Seasons by Salviati, after Raphael's cartoons. The Nativity of the Virgin, over the altar, and the paintings between the windows, were begun by Sebastiano del Piombo, and finished by Salviati. The mosaics were much dilapidated, and the paintings were very greatly injured by humidity and almost hidden from view by a thick layer of soot from the smoke of the altar candles. The restoration has been effected at the expense of the present representative of the Chigi family, Prince de Mario Chigi, by Signor Angelini, under direction of Signor Cavalcaselle, as agent of the Royal Commission. Signor Angelini had previously restored the frescoes by Giovanni da Udine in the Loggie of the Vatican, those in the Pauline Chapel, and the frescoes by Pierino del Vaga in the Palazzo Doria at Genoa.

The other chapels of Sta. Maria del Popolo containing frescoes by Pinturicchio, &c., are to be successively restored.

In answer to the remonstrance made by "Ouida" against the demolition of the fountain of the Ponte Sisto at Rome, on which we lately commented, the Roman papers state that the fountain will be re-erected opposite the Via del Mascherone, near the Farnese Palace.

The report lately circulated of the sanguine anticipations entertained respecting the success of the Philadelphia "Permanent Exhibition" has no foundation. It is said that the Park Commission consider that the exhibition fails to serve the purpose originally contemplated—that of a grand educator of the people in arts and sciences, but has degenerated into a place of mere amusement. The Commissioners have, therefore, passed a resolution unanimously ordering the Exhibition Company to remove their building and its contents from Fairmount Park within two years from the date of notice, July 19.

The only buildings in Paris hitherto decorated with paintings have been churches and mairies; but in future the new schools will participate in the credit of 300,000f. annually voted for this purpose by the city. The Administration is preparing a programme of a competition to be opened for artists. The fine-art service of the Prefecture is also preparing a project for the decoration of the Champs Elysées. Along the sides of the avenue are to be erected statues of such personages as have a right to the gratitude of the Parisians.

The French Archæological Society, founded by the reviver of antiquarian studies in France, M. de Caumont, will open their forty-sixth session on Sept. 2. Vienne, the ancient capital of Dauphiné, a very mine of Roman remains, is the place selected for the centre of operations, from which excursions will be made in various directions.

The excavations in the island of Delos, which were begun some time back but have been suspended, are about to be resumed under direction of the French Government.

The restoration of Strasburg Cathedral is actively approaching completion. The gilding of the great doors of the principal entrance is intrusted to M. Chertier, a Parisian goldsmith. Still more considerable works of restoration have been in progress in the Cathedral of Metz ever since the Franco-German war. During the present year attention has been directed to the restoration of the painted windows and the architectural details. It is now decided that an entirely new roof shall be built.

A fine-art exhibition is to be held shortly in Algiers. M. Turquet, the Under-Secretary of State for Fine Arts, has consented to preside at the opening, and will take this occasion for examining the condition of art in Algeria and visiting the various art schools and museums.

Signor Franceschi, the sculptor and intagliatore of Naples, has executed a remarkable statue representing a Christian virgin martyr crucified.

The bronze equestrian statue of the Duke of Brunswick, by Caen, has arrived in Geneva from Paris, and in a few days will be placed on its pedestal at the apex of the mausoleum in the Place des Alps.

The eminent painter Carl von Piloty has resigned his post as director of the Royal Academy of Munich, and will probably be succeeded by Feuerbach of Vienna.

The Swiss historical painter, Ludwig Vogel, died on the 21st inst. at Zurich. His best-known pictures are the "Battle of Senpach" and scenes from the Life of William Tell.

HENRY GLAVE'S

VELVETEENS.

For many years we have sold very large quantities of Velveteens, both Black and Colours, and with rarely ever hearing of a complaint from our numerous Customers. For the coming Autumn and Winter trade, our Velveteens will be found superior to any we have hitherto shown, both in richness of dye and perfection of finish, and they are certainly more moderate in price. We wish to call especial attention to the following choice Goods:—

THE JET OR RAVEN-BLACK VELVETEEN,
A very handsome and popular fabric, which is evinced by the fact that it has maintained an unchallenged superiority for the last fourteen years. It is a true black, and has the merit of matching well with blacks of all other fabrics.

THE ROYAL BLUE-BLACK VELVETEEN
Is an exact imitation of the shade now commonly dyed in the best Silk Velvet; and in good qualities, while new and not pressed, it is almost impossible for the eye to distinguish the one from the other. Another important feature of this Velveteen is the long time it keeps its original colour, never turning brown.

THE LOUIS VELVETEEN,
In texture, appearance, and durability, bears the closest resemblance to the best Lyons Silk Velvet. It is a very close and admirably-wearing material, with a lustrous silky surface, draping richly and softly, and the brilliant blue light on the folds cannot be surpassed by the best Silk Velvet.

A Dress of any of the above materials would be a most elegant and useful addition to any Lady's Wardrobe, successfully representing a Silk Velvet of more than four times the cost.

We have COLOURED VELVETEENS in the Newest French Tints, and very pretty Velveteens, both Brocaded and Striped, in Black and Colours.

Orders by post receive strict attention; and Ladies writing for Patterns are requested to state which Black they prefer.

Patterns post-free.

COLLARD'S NEW IRON GRAND PIANOFORTES and PIANINOS, in Italian walnut.—J. B. CRAMER and CO. have entered into an arrangement with Messrs. Collard and Collard to place on very favourable terms their new short grand pianoforte and pianino, in Italian walnut, among the instruments Cramer and Co. send out on their special THREE-YEARS' SYSTEM of hire.
The superiority in tone and general finish of these charming pianofortes is altogether incontestable, while the cost is no greater than that usually asked for a very ordinary and by no means very durable cheap instrument.—Full particulars on application to 201, Regent-street, W.; 46, Moorgate-street, E.C.

THE PHYSICAL BASIS OF LIFE.
GOOD FOOD.
HOW to assimilate or enjoy good food, that would otherwise cause constipation, bilious headache, disordered stomach, and other disasters, use ENO'S FRUIT SALT; being a genuine product of nature, it is a true or natural way of preserving and restoring health. It removes effete matter or poison from the blood, thus preventing and throwing off fevers, boils, and other morbid conditions of the blood. On that account you cannot overstate its great value in keeping the blood pure and free from disease; without such a simple precaution the jeopardy of life is immensely increased. 4s. 6d.

"ROUND THE WORLD IN SIX MONTHS."
By Lieutenant-Colonel E. S. BRIDGES, Grenadier Guards. In a list of what to take with you is given ENO'S FRUIT SALT. See page 298.

DON'T go to Sea without a Bottle of ENO'S FRUIT SALT.

ENO'S FRUIT SALT.
"From a Town in British Guiana, South America, Dec. 5, 1878.
"J. C. Eno, Esq., London.
"Sir,—After two years' trial of your excellent FRUIT SALT, I can safely say that it has saved me much misery from colonial fevers, indigestion, and impaired appetite, to which I have been subject during eleven years' residence in the tropics.
"It is invaluable to travellers as a preventive of seasickness, and a relief from the other ailments of life aboard ship; and, for myself, I would as soon think of going a voyage without my tooth-brush as my bottle of FRUIT SALT. With ordinary care, it does not get hard and caked, as other effervescent preparations do in warm and humid climates, and this is greatly in its favour.
"I am, Sir, yours respectfully, "W. J. B."

"SUCCESS IN LIFE."—A new invention is brought before the public, and commands success. A score of ABOMINABLE IMITATIONS are immediately introduced by the unscrupulous, who, by copying the original closely enough to deceive the public, and yet not so exactly as to infringe upon legal rights, exercise an ingenuity that employed in an original channel could not fail to secure reputation and profit.—ADAMS.
CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see the capsule is marked "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without it you have been imposed on by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists. Price 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. Prepared only at ENO'S FRUIT SALT WORKS, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. Eno's Patent.

ILLUSTRATED NEWS:

A SKETCH OF THE RISE AND PROGRESS OF PICTORIAL JOURNALISM.

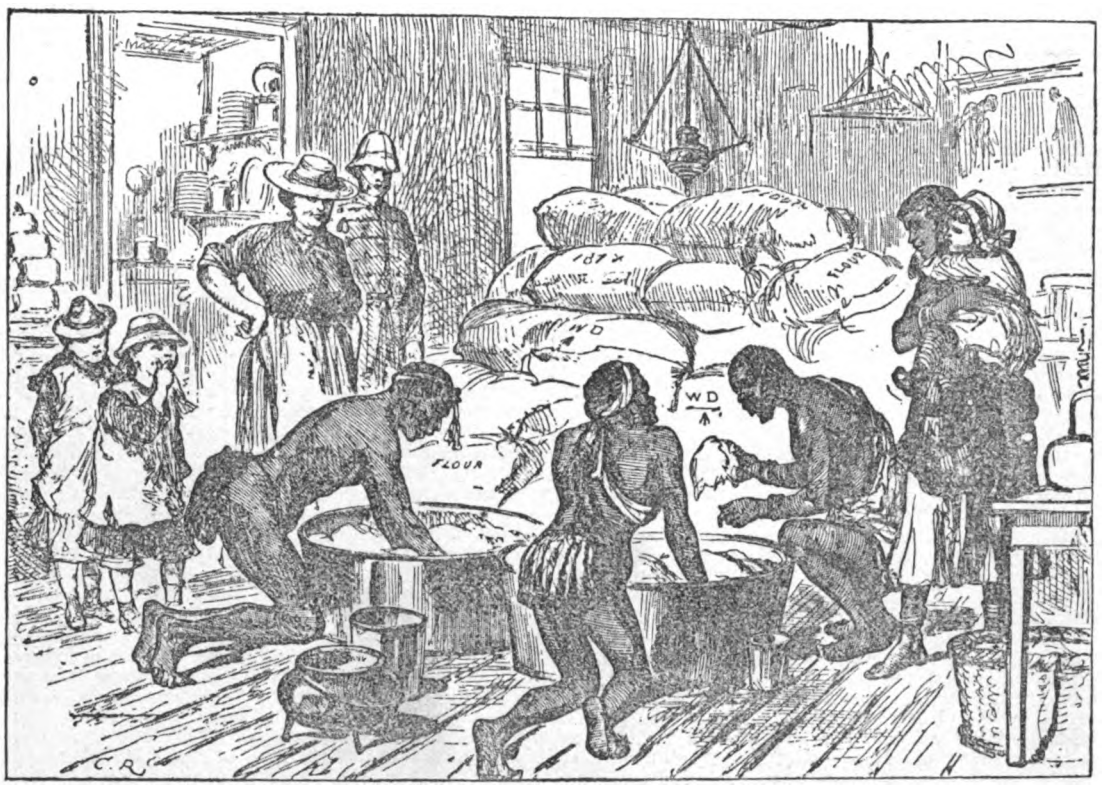
Before sketching the production of a modern illustrated newspaper it may be as well to premise that the material used for wood engraving is Box-wood, which is preferred to all other kinds of wood on account of its close grain, hardness, and light colour. It admits of finer and sharper lines being cut upon it than any other wood, and great quantities are consumed in producing the engravings of an illustrated newspaper. According to Mr. J. R. Jackson, Curator of the Kew Museum, the box-tree is at the present time widely distributed through Europe and Asia, being found abundantly in Italy, Spain, Southern France, and on the coast of the Black Sea, as well as China, Japan, Northern India, and Persia. The box of English growth is so small as to be almost useless for commercial purposes. What is called Turkey box-wood is the best, and this is all obtained from the forests that grow on the Caucasus, and is chiefly shipped at Poti and Rostoff. The forests extend from thirty to a hundred and eighty miles inland, but many of them are in the hands of the Russian Government, and are closed to commerce. Within the last few years a supply of box-wood has been obtained from the forests in the neighbourhood of the Caspian Sea; but Turkey Box is becoming dearer every year and inferior in quality. After the wood is cut in the forest, it is brought down on horseback to the nearest river, put on board flat-bottom boats, and floated down to the port of shipment. It arrives in this country either at Liverpool or London, chiefly the former, and is usually in logs about four feet long and eight or ten inches across.



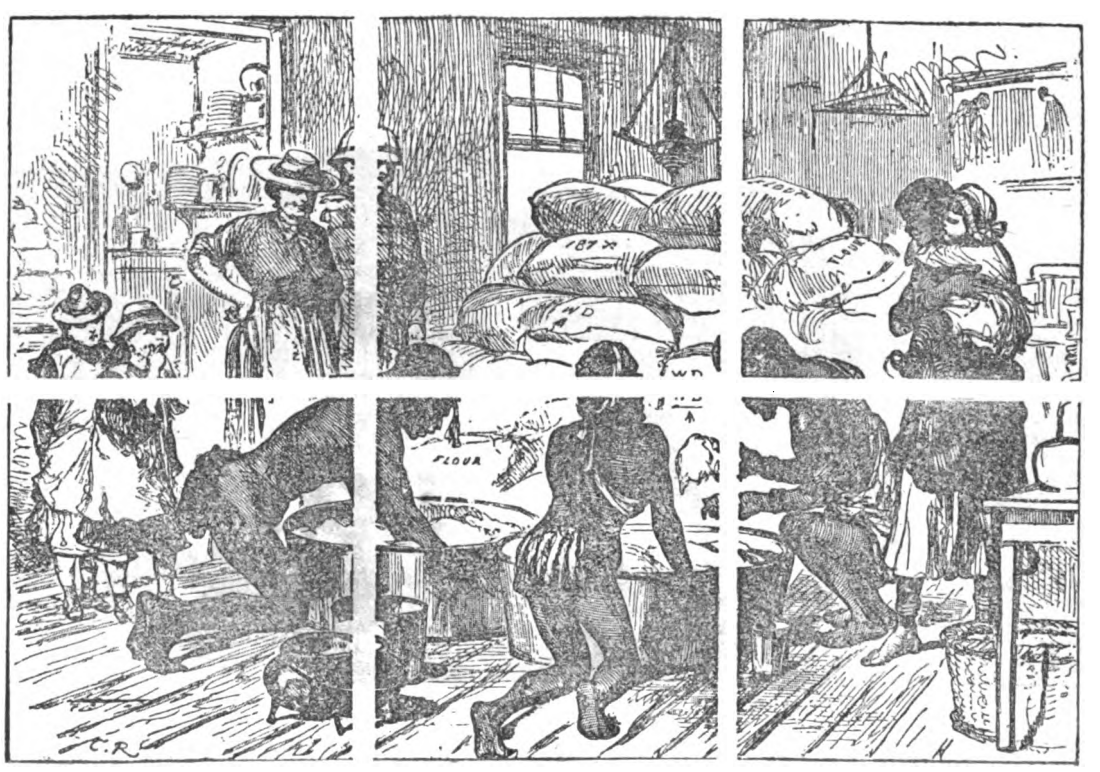
BACK OF A BLOCK, SHOWING THE WAY IN WHICH THE PARTS ARE FASTENED TOGETHER.

The wood intended for engraving purposes is first carefully selected and then cut up into transverse slices about an inch thick. After being cut the pieces are placed in racks something like plate racks, and thoroughly seasoned by slow degrees in gradually heated rooms. This seasoning process ought to last on an average four or five years. They are then cut into parallelograms of various sizes, the outer portion of the circular section near the bark being cut away, and all defective wood rejected. These parallelograms are then assorted as to size, and fitted together at the back by brass bolts and nuts. By this means blocks of any size can be made, and they possess the great advantage of being capable of being taken to pieces after a drawing is made, and distributed among as many engravers as there are pieces in the block. This invention of making bolted blocks was brought forward just about the time the Illustrated London News was started, when large blocks and quick engraving came to be in demand. In the days of the Penny Magazine blocks were made by simply glueing the pieces of wood together, or they were fastened by means of a long bolt passing through the entire block.

The cut given above represents the back of a half-page block of the Illustrated London News, and shows the way in which the bolts and nuts are used for fastening the different parts of the block together.

For the production of a pictorial newspaper a large staff of draughtsmen and engravers is required, who must be ready at a moment's notice to take up any subject, and, if necessary, work day and night until it is done. The artist who supplies the sketch has acquired by long practice a rapid method of working, and can, by a few strokes of his pencil, indicate a passing scene by a kind of pictorial shorthand, which is afterwards translated and extended in the finished drawing. The sketch being completed on paper, the services of the draughtsman on wood come into requisition, for it is not often that the drawing on the block is made by the same person who supplies the sketch. Sometimes the sketch to be dealt with is the production of an amateur, or is so hastily or indifferently done that it has to be remodelled or rearranged before it can be drawn on the wood. Faulty or objectionable portions have to be left out or subdued, and perhaps a point in the sketch that is quite subordinate is brought forward and made to form a prominent part of the picture. All this has to be done without doing violence to the general truth of the representation, and with due consideration for the particular conditions of the moment, such as the amount of finish and distribution of light and shade suitable for rapid engraving and printing.

A BLOCK BEFORE IT IS TAKEN TO PIECES.



Sometimes more than one draughtsman is employed on a drawing where the subject consists of figures and landscape, or figures and architecture. In such a case, if time presses, the two parts of the drawing are proceeded with simultaneously. The whole design is first traced on the block; the bolts at the back of the block are then loosened, the parts are separated, and the figure-draughtsman sets to work on his division of the block, while another draughtsman is busied with the landscape or architecture, as the case may be. Occasionally, when there is very great hurry, the block is separated piece by piece as fast as the parts of the drawing are finished—the engraver and draughtsman thus working on the same subject at the same time. Instances have occurred where the draughtsman has done his work in this way, and has never seen the whole of his drawing together. The double-page engraving of the marriage of the Prince of Wales in the Illustrated London News, March 21, 1863, was drawn on the wood by Sir John Gilbert at 198, Strand, and as fast as each part of the drawing was done it was separated from the rest and given to the engraver. Considering that the artist never saw his drawing entire, it is wonderful to find the engraving so harmonious and effective. Photographing on the wood is sometimes resorted to, and, in the hands of skilful and artistic engravers, with the happiest results.

The drawing on wood being completed, it passes into the hands of the engraver, and the first thing he does is to cut or set the lines across all the joins of the block before the different parts are distributed among the various engravers. This is done partly to ensure as far as possible some degree of harmony of colour and texture throughout the subject. When all the parts are separated and placed in the hands of different engravers each man has thus a sort of key-note to guide him in the execution of his portion, and it should be his business to imitate and follow with care the colour and texture of the small pieces of engraving which he finds already done at the edge of his part of the block where it joins the rest of the design. The accompanying cuts represent a block entire and the same subject divided.

Though this system of subdividing the engraving effects a great saving of time, it must be admitted that it does not always result in the production of a first-rate work of art as a whole. For, supposing the subject to be a landscape with a good stretch of trees, the two or three engravers who have the trees to engrave have, perhaps, each a different method of rendering foliage; and when the whole is completed, and the different pieces are put together, the trees perhaps appear like a piece of patchwork, with a distinct edge to each man's work. To harmonise and dovetail (so to speak) these different pieces of work is the task of the superintending artist, who retouches the first proof of the engraving and endeavours to blend together the differences of colour and texture. This is often no easy task, for the press is generally waiting, and the time that is left for such work is often reduced to minutes where hours would scarcely suffice to accomplish all that might be done. Or the block to be engraved may be a marine subject, with a stormy sea. In this case, like the landscape, two or three engravers may be employed upon the water, each of them having a different way of representing that element. Here it is even more difficult than in the landscape to blend the conflicting pieces of work, and requires an amount of "knocking about" that sometimes astonishes the original artist. All this is the necessary result of the hurry in which the greater part of newspaper engravings have to be produced. When the conditions are more favourable, better things are successfully attempted, and of this the illustrated newspapers of the day have given abundant proofs.

It is obvious that when a block is divided and the parts are distributed in various hands, if any accident should occur to one part the whole block is jeopardised. It is much to the credit of the fraternity of engravers that this rarely or ever happens. I only remember one instance of a failure of this kind within my own experience. An engraver of decidedly Bohemian character, after a hard night's work on the tenth part of a page block, thought fit to recruit himself with a cheering cup. In the exhilaration that followed, he lost the piece of work upon which he had been engaged, and thereby rendered useless the efforts of himself and his nine compatriots.

When the block is finished the parts are screwed together by means of the brass bolts and nuts at the back of the block. It is then electrotyped and delivered to the printer, who has his "overlays" all ready, and the business of printing begins. The office of the Illustrated London News claims to be the fastest woodcut printing establishment in the world, and the recent invention of the Ingram Rotary Machine will still further accelerate the quick production of illustrated newspapers. By the old two-feeder machines the engravings are printed on one side of the sheet, and the type on the other side. The machines now in use each turn out 1500 impressions of the engravings in an hour; while the type side is printed (by a six-feeder American machine) at the rate of 12,000 impressions an hour.

The Ingram Rotary Machine will change all this. It can print both sides of the sheet at once, cut each number to its proper size, fold it, and turn it out complete and well printed at the rate of 6500 an hour. It occupies no more space than an ordinary perfecting machine, and only requires four men to attend to it, while thirty men and five "two-feeders" would be required to do the same amount of work by the old system. The Ingram Rotary Machine was described and illustrated in this Journal, Oct. 6, 1877, and a larger machine, with several improvements, was at work in the Paris Exhibition last year.

There is nothing more wonderful in the history of printing than the rapid development of the printing machine and the extraordinary increase of its productive power. The ordinary press, though greatly improved, was found quite inadequate to the demands made upon it; and, the attention of practical men being directed to some more rapid means of production, the steam printing-machine was invented. As early as 1790 Mr. W. Nicholson obtained letters patent for a machine very similar to those since in use; but it was not till 1814 that any practical use was made of the steam printing-machine. In that year a German named König constructed a machine for the Times newspaper, which worked successfully; but, though highly ingenious, the machine was very complicated, and it was soon superseded by the invention of Messrs. Applegarth and Cowper, possessing several novel features. This machine, again, was replaced by another where the type was arranged vertically. A machine of this description printed the Illustrated London News in the Great Exhibition of 1851, and was one of the attractions of the "World's Fair." Then came Hoe's American machines; and, finally, the Walter Press, the principle of which last invention has in the Ingram Rotary Machine been successfully applied to the printing of engravings with type.

If a block be well engraved and carefully used in printing there is practically no limit to the number of impressions that may be taken from it. Of the Christmas Number of the Illustrated London News of Dec. 19, 1863, there were 365,000 impressions taken; and the engravings representing the marriage of the Prince of Wales had 310,000 impressions taken off them in one week. Even after the comparatively rough usage incidental to hurried printing, most of the blocks are still good for another 300,000. The sheets of paper used for this Royal marriage number would, if placed side by side, have covered 660 miles; and, as they were printed on both sides, they represented a printed surface, after deductions for margin, of more than 1115 miles in length. Nearly eighty tons of paper, and twenty-three hundredweight of printing ink were used in the production of that number.

After the paper is printed each sheet is neatly folded by folding-machines, which fold the entire edition in a few hours. One double-action folding-machine will fold fifty sheets in a minute. As it is found that machinery for folding newspapers works much better at a moderate speed, in the case of the Ingram Rotary Machine it has been arranged in duplicate, so that each folder only works at half the speed of the printing-machine. After the paper is printed and folded it has still to be inserted in the covers before it is ready for delivery to the newsagents. As machinery for this purpose has not yet been invented, the nimble fingers of many women and girls are employed to insert each number in its cover as fast as they are brought from the folding-machines.

The publishing office is apt to become something of a pandemonium when there is any exciting news, or when a special number is issued. On such occasions the newsmen fill the place in such crowds that it is barely possible for a stranger to purchase a paper, and if, as sometimes happens, the demand is greater than the supply the choicest expletives are freely hurled at the head of the publisher by the clamorous crowd. During the French Revolution of 1848 so great was the excitement that the sale of the paper was more than doubled in three months. The vigorous sketches published week after week were so eagerly bought that the publisher was not always able to meet the demands made upon him. On one occasion he was freely pelted with flour and other harmless missiles because the London "trade" could not get their supply soon enough to satisfy their impatience. The noisy newsboys, in mocking imitation of the Paris mob, which was then making the streets of that city ring with cries of "à bas Guizot," vented their indignation against the publisher of the Illustrated London News by shouting "à bas Little! à bas Little!"

Having in these chapters on pictorial journalism attempted to lay before the reader the rise, growth, and gradual development of the idea of illustrating the news of the day, I may fitly conclude at the period when the first regular illustrated newspaper was established. The Illustrated London News is now the parent of a very numerous progeny, having been imitated in nearly every large city in the civilised world. It is hoped that it has had a refining influence on public taste and has helped to diffuse a knowledge and love of art among the people. It has always endeavoured to advocate good and upright principles in literature and in morals, keeping fully and justly the promises made at its commencement. To the future historian its pages will prove of the highest value and interest.

As I have before remarked, picture newspapers are to a certain extent independent of language, and are prized alike by the civilised foreigner and the untutored savage. The King of Siam is a regular subscriber to the Illustrated London News; and bundles of that Paper, with its Coloured Supplements, were found in the King of Ashantee's palace at Coomassie when the British troops entered that place. Copies of the same Paper have been found carefully preserved in the huts of savages who knew not what reading or writing meant. On one of the Polar Expeditions in search of Sir John Franklin, one of the pleasantest sights the English sailors saw, after a long absence from their native country, was a copy of the Illustrated London News in an Esquimaux hut, where it had probably been left by a whaling-ship, and where it was treasured up as a thing of great value. A forlorn traveller in Africa once trusted to the same journal for informing his friends of his whereabouts and probable fate. He left a letter on the path, with a request written on the outside that whoever found it would forward it to the Illustrated London News for publication in the hope that his friends would see it. It was found, forwarded as directed, and duly published. The native boatmen on the Chinese rivers are very fond of decorating their cabins with cuttings from the pictorial journals; and even in the huts of the Modoc Indians copies of the Illustrated London News have been found.

Illustrated journalism has found much favour in our Australian colonies, where the pictures of home events are received with great interest. Australia has now several papers of its own, some of which would do no discredit to the old country as regards typography and illustration. In a lecture on the "Multiplying Art" by Mr. Cyrus Mason, delivered at Melbourne on May 11, 1871, the lecturer thus concluded his discourse:—"I regard a copy of the Illustrated London News as the greatest triumph of art that the world has yet seen! Not only can we admire the drawings as artistic and beautiful; but, when we note the number and size of the subjects—when we consider that the designs must be carefully drawn upon blocks of wood—that every white space, every minute speck of white which appears in the print, has to be cut out of the wood by an engraver before the blocks are ready for the printer—and hundreds of thousands of copies printed, all in a week, we can only regard a copy of the Illustrated London News as the perfection of art combination, the division of labour, and the advantages of multiplying art."

If the reader has had the patience to follow me through these desultory chapters, he will have seen that the illustrated newspaper began as a small and dingy sheet, slowly and laboriously printed at a rude hand press. He will have traced it from the early "news-book," through its various phases of existence, until he beholds it issuing from the steam-press almost as rapidly as water flows from a fountain. Instead of the dirty scrap of rough paper, we see a spotless web three miles long rapidly unrolling from a great cylinder. The paper is quickly caught by another cylinder, which impresses upon it whole pages of letterpress at one revolution. Thence it is carried to yet another cylinder, where it receives the impressions from carefully prepared woodcuts. After this it is brought forward to a species of guillotine, which cuts each paper to its proper size, and then without rest or pause it is carried by tapes with as much precision as if moved by the fingers of a sentient being to the folding-machine, which finally delivers a finished newspaper—all ready for reading—at the rate of 6500 an hour. We see the web of white paper go into the machine at one end and come out at the other a clean, well-printed, and neatly-folded illustrated newspaper. This is truly the perfection of "multiplying art," and a marvel of patient and persevering ingenuity. The latest form of the steam-printing machine must mark an epoch in the history of illustrated journalism, should it ever come to be written with the completeness it deserves. When we look at the machinery represented in the annexed Engraving we are divided between admiration of the skill and ingenuity displayed in its construction and wonder at the universal thirst for knowledge that makes such contrivances necessary. While the printing-machine has become the potent agent of human power and wisdom, it also fulfils the remarkable function of sending forth to the world a constant supply of "illustrated news."

MASON JACKSON.

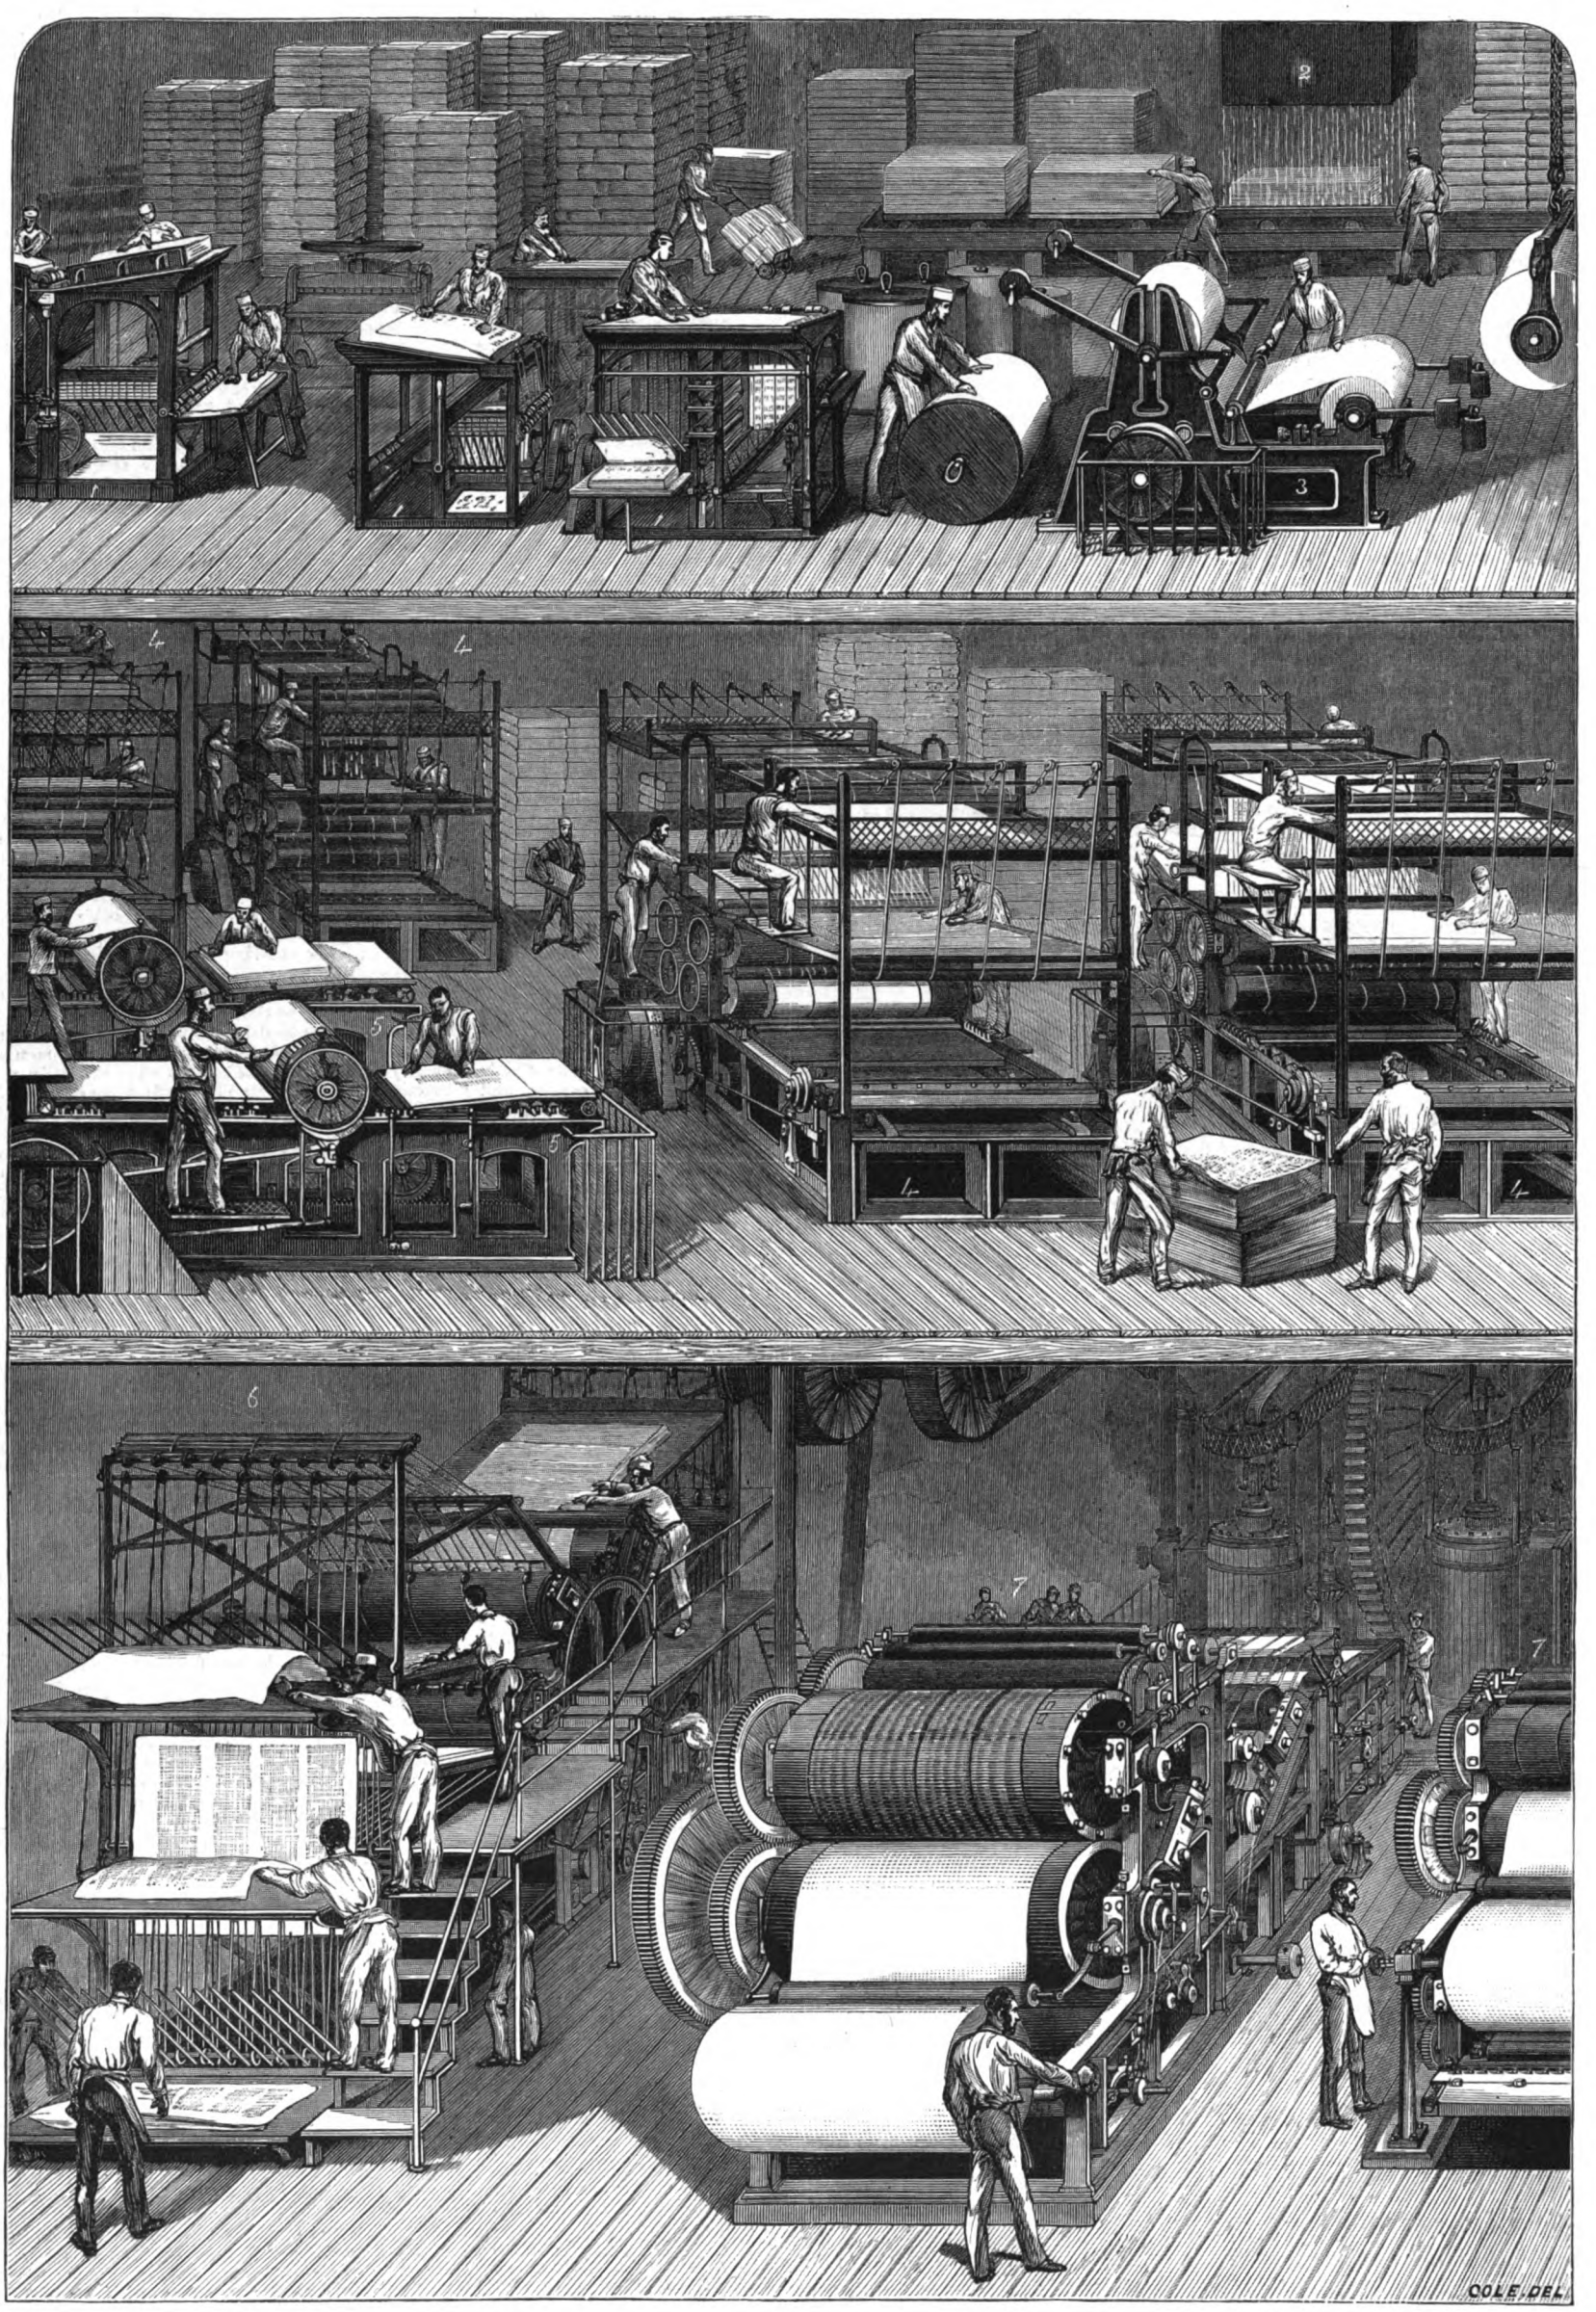
THE PRINCE OF WALES ON EXMOOR.

Dunster Castle, where the Prince of Wales has been staying to enjoy the sport of hunting the red deer on Exmoor, is situated on the high moorland above the seacoast of West Somersetshire, between Watchet and Minehead. This ancient mansion, the seat of Mr. George Fownes Luttrell, lord of the manor of Dunster, is situated in a park of broken hilly ground, not very extensive but varied and picturesque, with knolls and dells and groves of oak, on the side of the bold hill, commanding fine views over land and sea. The Castle was founded in the Norman times, if not earlier, and was held by William de Mohun, who built the gate-house tower still remaining; but in the reign of Henry VII. it passed from the Mohuns to the Luttrells. The great gateway is of Edward III.'s time. The present house was built in the reign of Elizabeth. It was twice besieged in the Civil Wars, and was captured by Blake; Prynne was here imprisoned in 1648, and Charles II. visited Colonel Windham here. In the great hall are the portrait of Cromwell, by Vandyke, and other old pictures.

Exmoor Forest, not a forest of trees, but a wild upland tract of hilly moorland, often rising 1000 feet above the sea level, extends over fourteen square miles, partly in Somersetshire, partly in North Devon. Its loftiest eminence is Dunkerry Beacon, 1668 feet high, above the Vale of Porlock, commanding a distant view of the British Channel to the south, and a near one of the Bristol Channel and entrance to the Severn. The Upper Exe and Barle, with the little town of Dulverton near their junction, flow southward down from Exmoor; to the west are the hills above Lynton and Lynmouth; to the east are the Quantocks, overlooking the vale of Taunton. The central part of Exmoor, comprising 20,000 acres, is the property of Mr. F. Knight, of Simonsbath, near Lynton, a great patron of ancient English sports. Here only in all England are the red deer preserved for the chase with horsemen and stag-hounds, instead of stalking and shooting that noble game as in the Scottish Highlands. This was the object of the Prince of Wales's visit to Dunster Castle and Exmoor.

The following animated description of the sport is furnished by the Daily News' special correspondent:—

"The glorious run over the heart of Exmoor which the Prince of Wales shared with so much zest on Friday was a brilliant exception to the sport that generally prevails thus early in the season. Before a stag has lost the 'velvet' which encases the new antlers during the period of their growth in summer, his limbs are scarcely equal to the strain of long running, and a chase like that of Friday is not often to be hoped for until the keener autumn air has braced lax muscles into more lusty strength. Not that an old deer is to be easily caught in spite of the slowness induced by gross living and luxurious laziness. He knows his weakness and that of his pursuers, and trusts during the first months of hunting rather to the cunning that baffles young hounds than to his fleetness of foot. When he seems to be dead beaten as he plunges into a deep pool to refresh himself by "soiling," and it seems certain that he must fall a prey to the pack that is close at his heels, he will back the stream and lie so close, with only a nostril above water, that only the skill of a practised huntsman or the instinct of a well-trained hound will be able to detect his whereabouts. The scent will be borne down current, and thither a young pack will clamourously follow it; but an old stag-hound knows better, and will feel his way cautiously by every tuft of rushes on the bank, every boulder in the bed of the river, before he ventures to break silence, even by a whimper. Or the hunted deer, after washing away something of the scent by his bath, will dash into a thicket where, by some mysterious means, he knows a young one to be lying, will turn the brocket out to be his substitute, and take possession of the lair. Hitting off the fresh scent, the pack will go away joyously after their new game, and if nobody is far enough forward to know what has happened, or to stop the pack in good time, this trick will probably have saved the hunted one's life, or at all events it may be an hour or more before the huntsman succeeds in fresh finding him. Thus the chase may be prolonged hour after hour, first up and down one big covert, then another, until horses, hounds, and quarry are all wearied out, and yet there may not have been twenty minutes of good galloping all day. This was sometimes the case with the old hounds, which scarcely ever found a deer but they killed him sooner or later, and it is sure to happen frequently with a new pack which has been got together from many sources, and which for the first three or four weeks of hunting hardly knows whether its proper game is deer or Exmoor sheep. A fast burst over sixteen miles of moor, with not a single check to stop us for a minute out of the hundred during which the run lasted, was, under these circumstances, a thing not to be hoped for; and those who had the good fortune to be in it may be excused for dwelling on its incidents with much delight, even to the depreciation of longer runs over recollections of which old sportsmen grow enthusiastic. So little was a run of the kind anticipated that several hundreds of people waited placidly on the slopes looking down on Water Badgeworthy for an hour after the hounds had disappeared far over distant hills, and did not know that a deer had gone away. Some of the keenest followers, who rarely fail to be in at the finish, were thrown out, and, had the deer held on over the inclosed country after he had gone within a mile or two of Lynton, not a dozen bold horsemen would have been in at the death. Those terrible hills had choked off the weak ones; the broad, deep grips wherein two or three horses had been seen heels uppermost as we sped on over the North Forest had stopped others; and the boggy ground had frightened many more. In this country the stranger must select a good pilot, and harden his heart to follow closely wherever this pilot leads him. A moment's hesitation at what looks like a soft and dangerous place may leave him hopelessly grounded in a bog and unable to find the one track where safety lies. It demands nerve to ride in a country that is new to one, but nowhere will a man find his coolness, determination, and readiness of resource more frequently taxed than in crossing the bogs of Exmoor or Dartmoor. It is little wonder, then, that those who follow the glorious sport of stag-hunting on the hills of Devon and Somerset should seem to be the type of true manliness. Without pluck and endurance, for which most of them are distinguished, they would not see the end of many glorious chases. There is something in the sport, too, that gives a poetical colour to the thoughts and the conversation of those who have pursued it all their lives. It could hardly be otherwise. One could not ride day after day, year after year, alone or in the excitement of a gallop, over the rolling hills that seem illimitable, through the deep and densely-wooded combes where the romantic gloom and silence may be unbroken for many months until the notes of horn and hound come to waken the echoes, or by headlands where the long waves beat with a thunderous sound, without gathering some inspiration from these sublime surroundings. Even if thrown out of the hunt, one must be hard to please indeed if he can find no pleasure in gazing on long stretches of rolling hills brightened with the green leaves of the whortle and the purple of heather, where the ridges are bathed in glorious sunlight and the valleys gloomy with a settled shade; now startled by the whirr of a blackcock's wings, then by the sudden appearance of a herd of hinds sweeping over the hills; now crossing a brawling stream where speckled trout swarm, then winding down a narrow lane where odorous honeysuckle hangs in clusters and the luscious fruit of wild raspberries reddens the hedgerows. A contemplation of these things may give health to a mind that has been vexed by the littleness of everyday life, and must make men who are constantly in the midst of such scenes mentally robust, as the bracing air makes them physically fit to endure fatigue. The spirit of romance, too, clings to the place. The old roads that were traversed by Elizabethan gallants and Carolian cavaliers, but are now overgrown with the gnarled branches of stunted oaks, have all a history in which something of interest lingers. The valley of the Doones and the low walls of the ruined castle that crown the heights above Water Badgeworthy, the wood of ancient oaks fringing the deep pools and cascades of that river, and the tall grey rocks that throw long shadows over it, have been the subject of charming idyll, and will be a place of pilgrimage as long as the beauties of "Lorna Doone" are appreciated. There it was that the Prince of Wales saw his first stag killed; and many will preserve pleasant recollections of that scene, with the hundreds of horsemen and horsewomen grouped on either side of the deep valley, the noble stag at bay in the stream, the pack around him, the rugged heights on either side, and the dark oak wood for a background. A fair artist was engaged in sketching the spot when the hounds burst on her solitude, and so startled her with their music that the pencil became still, or a pictorial record might have been preserved of such a spectacle as will probably never again be witnessed in Water Badgeworthy."



A CHURCH DESTROYED BY LIGHTNING.

Early on Sunday morning, the 3rd inst., a terrific thunderstorm burst over the town of Wells-next-the-Sea, Norfolk, causing intense alarm, and ending in sad disaster to the fine old church. The electric fluid struck the east face of the tower immediately above the apex of the roof, driving out a large portion of the stonework, the flints flying hundreds of feet around. After firing the roof, the electric fluid appeared to have passed through the body of the church to the vestry, which was also set on fire at the same moment. In spite of all exertions to subdue the flames, in less than two hours the whole interior was a mass of ruin. The destruction of the stonework was greatly assisted by the three large galleries. Seven out of the eight bells were completely melted, and fell to the bottom of the tower.

This church—dedicated to St. Nicholas, patron of sailors—was a fine structure built, in the Perpendicular style, probably about the middle of the fifteenth century. It comprised a nave, with aisles and clerestory, south porch, chancel, vestry, and a lofty square embattled tower of dressed flints, with eight bells and a clock. The spandrils of the roofs of the aisles were filled with rich geometrical patterns, intricate tracery of foliage, with small birds and other curious designs. The roof of the nave also had been very fine, with rich ornamental work: figures of angels with extended wings relieved the flat spaces on the wall-plate between the mouldings; and angels with shields covered the intersections of the ribs and principals. The woodwork of the entire roof was of sweet chestnut. In the year 1866 the chancel was restored by the late Rev. H. E. Downing, the Rector, who placed a beautiful stained-glass memorial window in the east end. This and two other painted windows in the chancel were more or less destroyed. The loss of such an edifice is a national calamity. Although it can never be restored to its pristine state, a sum of not less than £10,000 will be required to rebuild the fabric. This is a sum utterly beyond the means of the town and neighbourhood alone to provide, and it is earnestly hoped that subscriptions will be forthcoming from those of the public interested in church work. With the exception of £1000 on the chancel, the church was uninsured. Subscriptions may be paid to the Rev. J. H. Pilling, or to the churchwardens; to Messrs. Gurney, bankers, Norwich, and their branches; or to their agents, Messrs. Barclay and Bevan, London; and at all other banks in the country.

OBITUARY.

LORD GORDON, OF DRUMEARN.

The Right Hon. Edward Strathearn Gordon, Baron Gordon, of Drumearn, a Lord of Appeal in Ordinary, died at Brussels, on the 21st inst. His Lordship was born in 1814, the eldest son of the late Major John Gordon, 2nd Regiment (of the family of Gordon of Embo), by Catherine, his wife, daughter of Alexander Smith, Esq., and received his education at Edinburgh University. He was called to the Scottish Bar in 1835, and became Q.C. in 1869. He held the offices successively of Sheriff for Perthshire from 1858 to 1866, Solicitor-General for Scotland, 1866 to 1867, and Lord Advocate of Scotland, 1867 to 1868, and again from 1874 to 1876. He was M.P. for Thetford from December, 1867, to December, 1868, when that borough was disfranchised, and he sat for the Universities of Glasgow and Aberdeen, 1869 to 1876. Under the "Appellate Jurisdiction Act," he was created, in 1876, a Lord of Appeal in Ordinary, with the style and title of Baron Gordon, of Drumearn, "for and during the term of his natural life." In point of fact, the title thus conferred appertained to the appointment of Lord of Appeal in Ordinary, and consequently expires with the grantee. Lord Gordon married, in 1845, Agnes, only daughter of John McInnes, of Auchenreoch, in the county of Stirling, and leaves four sons and three daughters. Of the latter, the eldest, Ella, is wife of Colonel John James Gordon, Bengal Staff Corps.

THE DOWAGER COUNTESS OF LICHFIELD.

The Right Honourable Louisa Catherine, Dowager Countess of Lichfield, died at her residence, Hill-street, Berkeley-square, on the 20th inst., at an advanced age. Her Ladyship was daughter of the late Nathaniel Philips, Esq., of Slebech Hall, in the county of Pembroke, and was married, Feb. 11, 1819, to Thomas William, Viscount Anson, created Earl of Lichfield in 1831, who died March 18, 1854. Her Ladyship's issue consisted of four sons and four daughters. The eldest of the former is Thomas George, present Earl of Lichfield, and the youngest the Hon. and Rev. Adelbert John Robert Anson, Rector of Woolwich, Kent: there were two other sons, both deceased, the Hon. W. V. L. H. Anson, Royal Navy, and Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. Augustus Archibald Anson, V.C. The daughters are Lady Louisa King-Tenison, of Kilronan Castle, Lady Elcho, Lady Vernon, and Lady Gwendolina O'Shee.

SIR J. G. SHAW-LEFEVRE.

Sir John George Shaw-Lefevre, K.C.B., LL.D., F.R.S., late Clerk of the Parliaments, died on the 20th inst. at Cliftonville, in his eighty-third year. He was the second son of Charles Shaw-Lefevre, Esq., M.P. for Reading, by Helena, his wife, daughter of John Lefevre, Esq., of Heckfield Place, Hants, and was brother of the present Viscount Eversley, for eighteen years Speaker of the House of Commons. Sir John was educated at Eton, and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he became a Fellow, and graduated M.A. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple 1824, and was a Bencher since 1856. In 1832 and 1833 he sat in Parliament for Petersfield, and in the latter year he was appointed Under-Secretary for the Colonies. He was made a Poor Law Commissioner in 1834, Joint Assistant Secretary to the Board of Trade 1841, Deputy Clerk of the Parliaments 1848, and Clerk of the Parliaments in 1856. The last-named office he held till his retirement, in 1875. Sir John was associated with numerous Governmental and other commissions, on which his extensive legal and Parliamentary knowledge were invaluable. He was for some time a Civil Service Commissioner, and an Ecclesiastical Commissioner, and Vice-Chancellor of the University of London. He was created K.C.B. in 1857. Sir John married, Dec. 29, 1824, Rachel Emily, daughter of Ichabod Wright, Esq., of Mapperley, Notts, and leaves one son, George John Shaw-Lefevre, Esq., now member for Reading, and six daughters. Of the latter, the eldest is wife of the Hon. Sir Arthur Hamilton Gordon, Governor of Fiji, and the fourth, of Mr. Charles Ryan, Commissioner of Audit. The Lefevres came from the neighbourhood of Rouen, and established themselves in England at the revocation of the edict of Nantes. Their descendant, Helena Lefevre, of Heckfield Place, Hants, married Charles Shaw, Esq., M.P. for Reading, and had three sons, of whom the second was Sir John George Shaw-Lefevre, the subject of this notice.

SIR ROWLAND HILL.

Sir Rowland Hill, K.C.B., D.C.L., F.R.S., the originator of the Penny Postal System, died at his residence at Hampstead on Wednesday morning. He had been in failing health for some time past, and his condition became critical about a week ago. Sir Rowland was the son of Mr. Thomas W. Hill, a schoolmaster, near Birmingham, and was born in 1795. He is best known as the author of the penny postal system. He first advocated his plan in a pamphlet published in 1837, and the system was recommended for adoption by a committee of the House of Commons in the following year. The penny post was put into effect in 1840, when Sir Rowland received an appointment in the Treasury to enable him to afford the authorities his assistance in carrying it out. On a change of Government in 1842 he was removed from his post, on the ground that his services—the value of which was fully acknowledged by the Government—were no longer required. A public testimonial of the value of £13,360 was presented to him in 1846. From 1843 to 1845 Sir Rowland Hill was engaged in the management of the London and Brighton Railway, and in 1846 he was appointed secretary to the Postmaster-General, and became Chief Secretary in 1854. He was made a K.C.B. in 1860, and retired in 1864 on account of failing health. The Treasury issued a minute acknowledging the full success of his plans, and awarded him for life his full salary of £2000 a year. He also received a Parliamentary grant of £20,000, the first Albert Gold Medal of the Society of Arts, and the honorary degree of D.C.L. (Oxford). Quite recently he was presented with the freedom of the city of London in a gold casket in recognition of the valuable services which he had rendered to his country. We gave a portrait of Sir Rowland Hill on May 21, 1864.

The deaths have also been announced of—

THE NEW EDDYSTONE LIGHTHOUSE.

A description of the ceremony of laying the foundation-stone of the new lighthouse to be erected on the Eddystone rocks, fourteen miles off the shore at Plymouth, in the British Channel, was given in our last. This act was performed on Tuesday week by his Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, in his office as Master of the Trinity House Corporation, who have the care of lighthouses and other coast accommodation; and he was assisted by the Prince of Wales. They came in the Royal yacht Osborne from Portsmouth the day before. The Galatea, not her Majesty's frigate of that name, which Captain the Duke of Edinburgh formerly commanded, but a yacht belonging to the service of the Trinity House Corporation, took on board the two Princes, at ten o'clock in the morning, with Mr. W. H. Smith, First Lord of the Admiralty, Admiral the Hon. Sir Henry Keppell, Admiral Sir Astley Cooper Key, the Deputy-Master and members of the Trinity House, the Earl of Mount-Edgcumbe, and other personages. Their Royal Highnesses were in naval uniform. They were conveyed out to the Eddystone, over a calm sea, and landed on the rock. The standing-room there was very limited, and not above fifty people could witness the actual laying of the stone, which was set in the northern coffer-dam, about 3 ft. below the level of the sea at low tide. It was a block of Wadebridge granite, weighing three tons and a half. The proceedings began with a prayer uttered by the Rev. Dr. Wilkinson, Vicar of St. Andrew's, Plymouth. The chief engineer, Mr. James Douglas, handed to the Duke of Edinburgh a trowel provided for the occasion by the Trinity Corporation. This tool is a unique memento of the event, its handle being a Turk's head knot and rope's-end of polished gneiss taken from the core of the Eddystone south rock, and the silver blade is appropriately inscribed and engraved. On one side is the coat of arms of the Trinity House; underneath are the delineation of the four towers which have been built on the rock; and toward the point is a scene representing the site of the new building. Round the edge is inscribed the motto, "Except the Lord build the house, they labour in vain that build it." On the other side of the trowel is the Royal coat of arms surmounting a commemorative inscription. The trowel is inclosed in a box composed of polished oak taken from the present lighthouse, the lid bearing a plate with the following inscription:—"This box is made from a portion of the original internal fittings of Smeaton's lighthouse on the Eddystone, 1757. 1879." A white glass bottle containing a parchment inscribed with the date and the circumstances of the ceremony, and the names of the Master, Deputy Master, and engineer, was deposited in the cavity under the stone. In the mean time the engineer in charge, Mr. Thomas Edmond, had prepared the cement setting for the block. This the two Princes further tempered, each having a silver trowel for that purpose, and Mr. Douglass assisting in the operation. The block was slowly lowered by hand-power, and the Duke of Edinburgh, after trying it with his trowel, said, "I declare this stone well and truly laid." The words were a signal for a round of cheers from those on the rock and those on board the steam-boats within sight, some of the more distant ships joining. We give an Illustration of the ceremony and one of the trowel above described. The great stone-cutting establishment at the Oreston granite quarries, near Plymouth, which will supply a large portion of the material for the new lighthouse, was visited by the Prince of Wales and his two sons, the naval cadets, two months ago. This is the subject of another Illustration. We gave last week a view of the proposed new structure, which is to supersede the existing lighthouse on the Eddystone reef of rocks.

TROWEL FOR LAYING FOUNDATION-STONE OF EDDYSTONE LIGHTHOUSE.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated Dec. 31, 1874) with a codicil (dated Sept. 6, 1875), both made at Paris, of her Majesty the Queen Doña Maria Cristina de Borbon y Borbon, who died on Aug. 22 of last year at the Pavillon de Mondesir Le Havre, France, was proved in London on the 13th inst. by Don Lino Munoz, the acting executor, a power being reserved to Don Francisco de Cardenas, Don Pedro de Egaña, and Don Luis Pidal, Marques de Pidal, the other executors named in the will, to prove hereafter should they desire to do so. The personal estate in England is sworn under £6000. The testatrix directs that 5000 recited masses shall be performed for her soul, 5000 for the souls of her late husbands, 1000 for the souls of her deceased children, and 500 for the souls of her deceased grandchildren, to be performed by poor priests in churches to be selected by her executors, the alms for each mass to be 10 reals. She bequeaths 50,000 reals vellon to the needy poor and sick of the towns of Tarancon, Saelices, Villarrubia, and Belinchon, in the Province of Cuesta, in Spain, and of the town of Rueil in France—viz., 20,000 reals to Tarancon; 15,000 reals between Saelices, Villarrubia, and Belinchon; and 15,000 reals to Rueil. Special directions are given as to her numerous papers: they are divided into four classes—viz., her business papers, political papers, confidential papers, and intimate private papers; her secretary, Don Antonio Maria Rubio, is charged with the arranging of them, and he is to deliver the papers of the first three categories, sealed up, to her son Don Fernando, and the papers of the last-named category to her daughter, Doña Maria Cristina, also sealed up; they are not to be opened until the expiration of forty years from her decease, and the testatrix states that she so orders not for her own convenience or from any want of confidence in her children, but with views of delicacy towards the many persons she has had political relationship with during her long and chequered career. If upon examination any papers are found among her own properly belonging to her first husband, or the Government of Spain, they are to be delivered to her august daughter, the Queen Isabella, for eventual transmission to the successor of her first husband in the Crown of Spain, "say her grandson King Alfonso." Such parts of her property as she has power by law to appoint, and which appears to be very considerable, she distributes among the members of her family. The deceased, who was a daughter of the King of the two Sicilies, had for her first husband King Ferdinand the VII. of Spain, and for her second husband the Duque de Riansares, who also predeceased her. By the former she had two children (Queen Isabella and the Duchess de Montpensier), and by the latter eight children.

Ralli, and his brother-in-law, Alexander Anthony Vlasto, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £350,000. The testator, after giving certain pecuniary legacies, free of duty, including £500 to St. Mary's Hospital, Paddington, and £200 to the Lord Mayor of London to be applied in aid of the poor-box at the Mansion House, gives all the residue of his real and personal estate to his widow.

C. F. Craven, and the Incumbent of the parish of Ashford, Derbyshire, upon trust to apply the dividends in the month of November in every year for ever in purchasing useful articles of bedding and clothing to be distributed by the Incumbent of Ashford among such of the poor inhabitants of the said parish as he may deem expedient. The residue of his real and personal estate is to be divided between his sisters, Mrs. Susanna Peel and Mrs. Alice Sergeant, and the children of his deceased sister, Mrs. Mary Goodled.

All his real estate in the counties of Lancaster, Lincoln, Chester, and York or elsewhere in England, and in the county of Dumfries or elsewhere in Scotland, and the residue of his personal estate, the testator gives to his said son, Robert Whitaker, and he specially bequeaths to him the testimonial, consisting of a silver tea-tray and an epergne, given to him by the guardians of Bacup Union, with a request that he will leave it to his eldest son.

The will (dated June 23, 1874) with a codicil (dated Jan. 1, 1879) of Mr. John Oxley, late of Upper Clapton, who died on the 18th ult., was proved on the 14th inst. by Henry Masterman and Edward Masterman, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £ ,000. Master Isaac Lambertus Cremer van den Berch van Heemstede, Knight of the Lion of the Netherlands, Member of the Second Chamber of the States General, late of No. 18 in the Benoordenhoutschen Weg of the Hague, who died on the 2nd ult., was proved in London on the 16th inst. by the Vrow Christina Elizabeth van den Berch van Heemstede, the widow and sole executrix, the personal estate in England being sworn under £30,000. The testator makes his wife sole and universal heiress of everything he has liberty to dispose of, nothing excepted whatsoever.

The will (dated Jan. 23, 1878) of Mr. Felix Vaughan Smith, late of No. 3, Lyall-street, Belgrave-square, who died on Jan. 31 last, was proved on the 21st ult. by Captain Leopold James Yorke Scarlett and Edward Hamilton, M.D., the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. Subject to a few legacies, the testator leaves all his real and personal estate upon trust for his two daughters, Mrs. Anna H. M. Watkin Wingfield and Miss Frances J. M. Smith.

The will (dated April 7, 1874) with a codicil (dated Oct. 16, 1877) of Mr. John Grimston, late of Neswick, Yorkshire, who died on May 3 last, was proved on the 16th ult. at the district registry, York, by Robert Charles Wilmot and Col. Sir Henry Wilmot, Bart., V.C., M.P., the nephews, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £18,000.

The following bequests have been paid to the undermentioned charitable institutions by the executors to the will of the late Mr. James Graham, of No. 11, Cornwall-terrace, Regent's Park, being the second gift from the funds placed at their disposal, the total amount of the second bequest being over £29,550:—The London Hospital, £2500; St. Thomas's Hospital, £2000; National Hospital for Diseases of the Heart, £1000; the Orphan Working School, £1000; Royal Naval Female School, £1000; United Kingdom Beneficent Association, £1000; the Royal Hospital for Incurables, £1000; the Scottish Corporation, £1000; British Orphan Asylum, £250; British Home for Incurables, £500; Charing-cross Hospital, £500; Cheyne Hospital for Sick and Incurable Children, £250; Central London Throat Hospital, £500; the City of London Lying-in Hospital, £250; the City Orthopædic Hospital, £250; Dreadnought Sea Hospital, £250; Deaf and Dumb Asylum, £250; East London Hospital for Children, £250; Hospital for Sick Children, £500; Hospital for Hip Diseases, £500; Hospital for Women and Children, £500; Brompton Consumption Hospital, £500; Home for Little Boys, Farningham, Kent £500; Infant Orphan Asylum, £250; King's College Hospital, £500; London and Dover Convalescent Home, £250; London General Porters' Association, £250; London Orphan Asylum, £500; Marine Society (Warspite), £250, Merchant Seamen's Orphan Asylum, £250; Middlesex Hospital, £250; National Hospital for Consumption, £250; Westminster Hospital, £250; Warehousemen and Clerks' School, £500; Western General Dispensary, £500; Royal National Life-Boat Institution, £500; Royal Alfred Aged Merchant Seamen's Institution, £250; Royal Medical Benevolent College, £500; Royal Free Hospital, £500; School Ship Society, £250; Samaritan Free Hospital, £250; St. Luke's Hospital, £500; St. John's Foundation School for Sons of Clergymen, £250; St. George's Hospital, £500; the London Female Penitentiary, £250; Royal Asylum, £500; the London Fever Hospital, £250; Asylum for Idiots, £500; Ealing College Hospital, £250; the Friends of the Clergy, £500; the Boys' Farm Home, £250; the Metropolitan Free Hospital, £250; Westbourne Provident Dispensary, £250; General Domestic Servants' Benevolent Institution, £250; the Poor Clergy Relief Corporation, £250; the Girls' Refuge Industrial Schools, £500; the Royal Caledonian Asylum, £500; the Asylum for Fatherless Children, £250; the Victoria Hospital for Children, £500; the National Refuge for Homeless and Destitute Children, £500; and the University College Hospital, £250.

ASTRONOMICAL OCCURRENCES IN SEPTEMBER.

(From the "Illustrated London Almanack.")

The Moon is near Saturn during the evening hours of the 3rd, being situated to the right of the planet, the space decreasing until about midnight, when the Moon will be the higher of the two, and from this time the Moon will pass to the left of the planet during the morning hours of the 4th day. During the night common to the 6th and 7th she will be near Mars; the nearest approach will be at about 2 a.m. on the 7th. She is near Mercury on the morning of the 15th, near Venus on the morning of the 17th, and to the right of Saturn a second time during the evening and night hours of the last day of the month. She is nearest the Earth on the 18th, and at her greatest distance on the 6th. Her phases or times of change are:—

Last Quarter	on the 8th	at 4	minutes after	8h.	in the afternoon.
New Moon	„ 16th	„ 57	„	5	„ morning.
First Quarter	„ 22nd	„ 19	„	9	„ afternoon.

He is stationary among the stars on the 1st, in his ascending node on the 8th, at his greatest western elongation (17 deg. 57 min.) on the 9th, at his least distance from the Sun on the 13th, and near the Moon on the 15th.

Venus sets very nearly at the same time as the Sun at the beginning of the month, and is badly situated for observation till towards the end of the month. On the 30th she rises at 5h. 29m. a.m., or half an hour before sunrise. She is near the Moon on the 17th, and in inferior conjunction with the Sun on the 24th.

Mars rises at 8h. 48m. p.m. on the 7th, or 2h. 16m. after sunset; at 8h. 16m. p.m. on the 17th; and at 7h. 40m. p.m. on the 27th; and is visible after these times throughout the night. He is near the Moon on the 7th. He is due south on the 1st at 4h. 36m. a.m., on the 15th at 4h. 0m. a.m., and on the last day at 3h. 13m. a.m.

He is near the Moon on the 3rd and 4th, and again during the evening hours of the last day. He is due south on the 1st at 2h. 19m. a.m., on the 15th at 1h. 21m. a.m., and on the last day at 0h. 18m. a.m.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications relating to this department of the Paper should be addressed to the Editor, and have the word "Chess" written on the envelope.

A E S (Fort Tenedos, Zululand).—A welcome and interesting budget of news! We have communicated with you through the address at Capetown.

J M (Wenchow, China).—A book of the games played in the Paris tournament is in the press, we believe. Apply to Preti and Co., Rue St. Saveur, Paris.

W H T (Yokohama).—We addressed a notice to you some months ago informing you that your problem admitted of a second solution, but infer from your letter that it has escaped your observation. The "other way" is as follows:—1. Kt to B 3rd (double ch), K to B 4th; 2. Q to Q 5th (ch), K to Kt 5th; 3. Q to Kt 3rd (ch), and mates next move.

J J W (City Club).—Please note that the first and second moves of the solution of your four-move problem can be transposed, and that White can mate with either Rook or Bishop if Black plays 3. K to B 6th. The three-move problem is correct, and shall appear in due course.

C F J (Swansea).—The "idea" of No. 2 is hackneyed. We have not yet fully examined No. 1, but, if found correct, it shall have a diagram.

C G M P (Nottingham).—Kindly send the position upon a diagram.

W R (Birmingham).—Castling is, of course, permissible in the solution of a problem, but it is such a transparent as well as stale device that it deceives no one.

Sampson.—In the case submitted White captured a man by a false move, and the penalty incurred is one of three, at the discretion of the adversary:—1. Either to move his own or take the adverse man legally; 2. Forfeit his turn to move; 3. Play any other man legally moveable which his adversary may select.

A B.—Of course there is nothing new in the mating position, which is much older than what you call the "celebrated two-move problem" is likely to be.

East Marden (Chichester).—We have referred to your problem below. The book mentioned is probably Montigny's "Stratagèmes," published at Strasbourg, 1802, by Jean-Andre Fischer. Almost all the problems were "looted" from Stamma.

G W M (Manchester).—Thanks; it shall be examined in due course.

F O N H (Liverpool).—You have only to persevere. One of your problems shall appear in the course of the next month.

H N N (Cairo).—We have not any problems marked with your initials.

Problem No. 1849.—The author of this problem requests that a White Knight may be placed on Q R sq. The Kt so placed will remedy the flaw pointed out by many of our correspondents since the publication of the solution.

2. Kt to Kt 4th	Any move

By C. E. Tuckett, Bristol.

BLACK.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

Played recently between Delta and an Amateur from India.

(Muzio Gambit.)

WHITE (Delta).	BLACK (P. S.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th
2. P to K B 4th	P takes P
3. Kt to K B 3rd	P to K Kt 4th
4. B to B 4th	P to Kt 5th
5. P to Q 4th

The Ghulam Kassim, as this phase of the Muzio Gambit is called, presents a fine scope for the operations of bold and imaginative players; nevertheless, it is an unsound variation of an unsound opening.

5.	P takes Kt
6. Q takes P	P to Q 4th
7. B takes Q P	P to Q B 3rd
8. B to Kt 3rd	Q takes P
9. Q B takes P	Q takes Kt P

9. Kt to K B 3rd is the correct move here; Black obtains no adequate compensation for the imprisonment of his Queen which follows the move in the text.

10. B takes P (ch)	K to Q sq
11. Castles	Q takes R
12. Kt to B 3rd	B to B 4th (ch)
13. K to R sq	Q to Kt 7th
14. B to K 5th

Regaining the Rook at once. It strikes us, however, that 14. Q to Kt 3rd would have given Black even more trouble, especially if he attempted to save the Rook.

14.	Kt to K 2nd
15. B takes R	B to Q 2nd
16. B to K 5th	Q to Kt 5th
17. B to R 5th	B to Q 3rd
18. R to Q Kt sq

White might have won here as follows:—

18. Q to B 8th (ch)	K to B 2nd
19. Q takes Kt	Kt to R 3rd
20. B to Kt 4th	B to Q sq

WHITE (Delta).	BLACK (P. S.)
21. R to B 7th	B takes B
22. Q takes K B (ch)	Q to Q 3rd
23. Q takes Q (ch)	R takes Q
24. P to K 5th (ch)	K to B 2nd
25. P to K 6th, &c.

18.	Q to B 4th
19. B takes B	Q takes B
20. R takes P	K to B sq
21. R to Q Kt sq	Kt to Kt 3rd
22. B takes Kt	Q takes B
23. Q to B 8th (ch)	B to K sq
24. Q to K 7th	Q to B 2nd
25. Q to R 3rd	P to Q R 3rd
26. Kt to R 4th	Kt to Q 2nd
27. P to K R 3rd	R to Kt sq
28. B takes B (ch)	Kt takes R
29. P to Q B 4th	Q to B 8th (ch)
30. K to R 2nd	Q to B 5th (ch)
31. K to Kt sq	Q takes P
32. Kt to Kt 6th (ch)	K to B 2nd
33. P to B 5th	Q to Kt 8th (ch)
34. K to R 2nd	Q to Kt 4th

The purport of this rather quaint move would appear to be to defend the Q R P, and so bring out the Q Kt; but the Queen should have been kept on the other flank, and White could not then have had any hope of winning the game.

35. Q to Kt 3rd (ch)	K to Kt 2nd
36. Q to Kt 7th (ch)	B to Q 2nd
37. Kt takes B	Kt takes Kt
38. Q takes Kt (ch)	K to Kt sq
39. Q takes R P	Q takes P
40. Q to Kt 8th (ch)	K to Kt 2nd
41. P to K R 4th.

Black resigned.

The match between Messrs. Mason and Potter will be memorable as one of the closest struggles on record. Nineteen games have already been played, of which Mr. Mason has won five, Mr. Potter four, and ten have been drawn; but, as all the drawn games beyond eight are counted at half a point to each side, the score in the match stands—Mason, 6; Potter, 5. Mr. Mason has now only to win one game to attain the winning score of seven; but, in view of the singular equality of the players, we should not be surprised to see them reach that point simultaneously. This not improbable event may be brought about by Mr. Potter winning the next game played and drawing the two following.

Mr. F. C. Collins requests us to announce that he has arranged a problem tournament in connection with the chess department of Brief, a weekly newspaper published in London. Competitors are required to contribute two original problems, one in two moves and one in three moves, to be addressed, under the usual conditions of sealed envelopes, &c., to Mr. Collins, 81, Great Queen-street, London, on or before Oct. 15 next from composers resident in the United Kingdom, and on or before Nov. 15 from composers residing abroad. Substantial prizes will be given for two of the best sets.

A match for a stake of a thousand dollars has been arranged between Captain Mackenzie, of New York, the champion of America, and Mr. Hosmer, of Chicago. The players have met before in the chess arena, at Cleveland in 1871 and at Chicago in 1874, the result of their individual contests being game for game, although the champion made much higher tourney scores on both occasions.

THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION.

The forty-ninth meeting of the British Association was opened on Wednesday, the 20th inst., in Sheffield, as recorded in a large portion of our last issue. The President, Professor Allman, gave the opening address in the evening in the Albert Hall, his subject being the most recent researches into the nature and phenomena of protoplasm. A vote of thanks to the President was adopted on the motion of Mr. Mark Firth, seconded by Professor Huxley.

The practical work of the association began on Thursday morning. All the sections met, and in most of them the presidential addresses were delivered. Mr. Shaw-Lefevre, the president of the section devoted to the study of Economic Science and Statistics, was absent, owing to the death of his father. Mr. Clements R. Markham gave the address in the Geographical Section, Professor Mivart in that of Biology, Mr. Robinson in that of Mechanical Science, Professor Dewar in that of Chemical Science, Mr. G. J. Stoney in that of Mathematical and Physical Science, and Professor Duncan in that of Geology. The members of the association were entertained by the Mayor of Sheffield in the evening.

Yesterday week Dr. Tylor gave an address in the Anthropological Department, and Major Serpa Pinto read a paper describing his discoveries in connection with the Upper Zambesi. Professor Adams related his explorations of a bone-cavern in Gaterford; and Commander Cameron, the African explorer, discoursed upon the Euphrates Valley Railway. All the sections met, and in the evening Mr. Crookes lectured in the Albert Hall on Radiant Matter.

A few of the sections assembled last Saturday; but the excursions, including as they did visits to Chatsworth, Matlock, Clumber, Wentworth, Wharncliffe, and Haddon Hall, proved the greatest attraction. The weather was fine. In the Anthropological Department Commander Cameron, Major de Serpa Pinto, and Count Savorgnan de Brazza gave descriptions of the native races they have come across in their African explorations; and some papers were read on Geology and Mathematical and Physical Science. In the evening the members of the association were entertained at dinner by the Mayor.

On Sunday the members of the association attended Divine service, the sermon on the occasion being preached by the Archbishop of York, who dwelt on the mutual relations between Science and Faith and the separate fields occupied by them.

The subjects brought before the association on Monday included the system of education adopted in School Board schools and reformatory punishment, and considerable discussion took place on the educational points raised. The principal interest, however, was centred in the Geographical Department, where a series of papers was read relative to the seat of the Afghan war and the frontiers of India. The various practicable routes into Afghanistan, which proved to be more numerous than had previously been supposed, were described at length, and particulars were given of the explorations of ancient Buddhist and other ruins. One of the results of these was to show that the trade of the country was at one period of an extensive and valuable character. Mr. Simpson, one of the Special Artists of the Illustrated London News, who was attached to the Peshawur field forces in the late Afghan campaign under Sir S. Browne, and accompanied it from the Khyber to Gundamuck, gave a description of the geographical conformation of the district. But his paper was devoted principally to an account of the Buddhist remains to be found in the Jellalabad Valley. A portion of the wall of the room in which the section met was covered with Mr. Simpson's beautiful water-colour sketches of the scenes through which he passed. Mr. Simpson holds that in the Buddhist period the population of the Jellalabad Valley must have been much more numerous than it is at present, and that the area of cultivation must have been also more extensive. He described the exploration of a Buddhist shrine and the discovery of the site of the old Buddhist city of Nagarahara. A second paper on the Khurum Valley, sent by Captain Gerald Martin, enumerated and described all the principal routes up the Khurum Valley and roads branching from it to Khost or across the Safaid Koh Range to Jellalabad. The surveyors visited important passes in this range. The most important paper was probably that sent by Captain T. H. Holditch, R.E., describing the new routes to Candahar, and declaring that the hitherto unknown region between the Pishin Valley and the Suleiman Range is found to be open, rich, and fertile, with nothing in its physical character preventing travel across it in almost any direction. A column under General Biddulph, starting from the end of Pishin Valley, crossed the Surduari Pass, and discovered two great rivers radiating eastwards through open valleys and affording the finest openings for a route to India. Captain R. Beavan, jun., writing from Candahar, described the country between that station and Girishk; and a paper from Lieutenant Gore described the Pishin Valley as a perfectly open, nearly flat, alluvial plain, forty-eight miles long and about twenty-five to thirty wide. Major Maxwell Campbell described the Shorawak Valley and the Toba Plateau, suggesting that Shorawak was once a lake, which had gradually silted up by the deposits from the lava. Captain Holditch discussed the capabilities of the various passes in the mountain frontier of Western and North-Western India, and Captain Malcolm Rogers gave an account of the recent survey operations in Beloochistan and Southern Afghanistan. Commander Markham, in bringing the reading of these papers to a close, said it appeared to be the idea of the Government that there were three entrances into India, and that if these three were blocked up India would be safe. It now appeared that the whole of the country from Jellalabad to the Bolan Passes could be crossed in almost any direction, and that it was useless to occupy three or four special positions. There must, he thought, be a continuous frontier somewhere or other from north to south, with lateral communications along it.—Mr. F. Brown at last got his paper, describing his three months' stay in Cyprus, read to the section. The author had charge of the preliminary surveys undertaken with a view to the improvement of the harbour, inland communications, and sanitary condition of Cyprus. Mr. Brown thinks Cyprus neither an earthly paradise nor a fever-stricken wilderness. He anticipates a great extension of vine-culture. The writing telegraph engaged the attention of the Mechanical Science Section, and luminous meteors that of the Physical Science Section.—Dr. Pye Smith, one of the Vice-Presidents of the Biological Section, gave an address on the Advancement of Natural Science. He advocated the encouragement of physiological researches by the State.

The most important paper read on Tuesday was the address which Mr. Shaw-Lefevre was to have given as Chairman of the Economic Science Section, and which, in his absence, was read by Mr. Mundella. It dealt with the state of agriculture and the causes of its depression. Dr. Hime made a valuable contribution upon the vital statistics of Sheffield. The Geographical Section was again very attractive, Arctic research and the proposed cutting of the Isthmus of Panama being the chief topics.

Professor Ramsay has been elected President for next year, when the meeting will be held at Swansea. The meeting for 1881 will take place at York.

TESTIMONIALS.

THOMAS FAIRBANK, M.D., of Windsor, referring to Anti-Fat in the "British Medical Journal" of June 7, 1879, says:—
"I gave some of this extract (Fucus Vesiculosus) to a very corpulent lady, who in three months lost three stones in weight without any change of diet. Since then I have frequently given it for reducing weight, depending on the accumulation of adipose tissue, and have never found it fail. I may state that a patient who has been lately taking it as an anti-fat, and who always suffered very much from rheumatic pains about the body, has been entirely free from such trouble while she has been taking the extract, a fact which she quite independently noted."

EDWARD PARRETT, Esq., Chemist, of Market-square, Winslow, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 12, 1879:—
"One lady to whom I have sold Allan's Anti-Fat has decreased 9lb. in four weeks."

THOMAS NEWBOULD, Esq., Chemist, of Bradford, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 11, 1879:—
"The gentleman for whom I obtained four bottles of Allan's Anti-Fat has derived great benefit from the same, and has recommended it to a friend. Please send me one dozen at once."

C. J. ARBLASTER, Esq., Chemist, of Birmingham, writes, under date of June 4, 1879:—
"Have just received a capital account of the effects of Anti-Fat in reducing corpulency."

"A gentleman having used one dozen bottles of Allan's Anti-Fat, reports a satisfactory reduction."

DR. DE JONGH'S (KNIGHT OF THE LEGION OF HONOUR, KNIGHT OF THE ORDER OF LEOPOLD OF BELGIUM) LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL, proved by nearly thirty years' medical experience to be THE ONLY COD-LIVER OIL which produces the full curative effects in CONSUMPTION, DISEASES OF THE CHEST, THROAT AFFECTIONS, DEBILITY OF ADULTS, WEAKNESS OF CHILDREN, RICKETS, SCROFULOUS DISORDERS.

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.

SIR G. DUNCAN GIBB, Bart., M.D., Physician to the Westminster Hospital.
"The value of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL as a therapeutic agent in a number of diseases, chiefly of an exhaustive character, has been admitted by the world of medicine; but, in addition, I have found it a remedy of great power in the treatment of many Affections of the Throat and Larynx, especially in Consumption of the latter, where it will sustain life when everything else fails."

DR. PROSSER JAMES, Lecturer on Materia Medica, London Hospital.
"DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL contains the whole of the active ingredients of the remedy, and is easily digested. Hence its value, not only in Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, but in a great number of cases to which the Profession is extending its use."

LENNOX BROWNE, Esq., F.R.C.S.E., Senior Surgeon Central London Throat and Ear Hospital.
"The action of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL has proved, in my own experience, particularly valuable, not only in those diseases for which it was originally employed, but also in many cases of Weakness of the Singing and Speaking Voice, dependent on Bronchial or Laryngeal Irritation, and in all forms of Strumous Enlargement of Glands, and Discharges from the Ear."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S., Late Staff Surg., Army, Prof. of Hygiene, Birkbeck Institution.
"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of "hydro-carbons" in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognised."

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 6, 1879.

The prospects of Agriculture in this country, proximate as well as remote, are engaging not a little anxious attention. The Season has been one of the most unfavourable with which England has been visited for many years past. Even 1860, as compared with 1879, is said to show a very palpable advantage. We had a cold Spring, streaked only here and there with thin patches of sunshine. We had a persistently wet Summer, the average temperature of which has been greatly below the mean. We have now entered the month of September, and Harvest operations, over a very wide extent of country, are but commencing. Last week one might have travelled hundreds of miles without catching sight of a single harvest scene. A few brilliant days have, it is true, somewhat lightened the sombre aspect of agricultural affairs; but no weather can give us back that which weather has already taken from us. It is calculated by those who have thoroughly studied the matter that the product of cereals this year will be deficient at least 25 per cent, a deficiency which, expressed in money value, will reach £60,000,000 sterling. Others go considerably beyond this gloomy estimate, and set down the loss inflicted on us by this extraordinarily unpropitious season at fully £100,000,000. It would, perhaps, be unwise to accept as final these speculative conclusions, against which it is possible that there may be discovered some compensation in the facts of the case. But there can be no room to question the extreme seriousness of the calamity which has overtaken us—one which there is good reason to believe will cast its baleful shadow over all departments of business in the realm.

The interests most immediately affected by the strange meteorological phenomena of the year, are those of the fundamental industry of the country—we may say, of all countries—those which grow out of the tillage of the soil. Bad harvests did not always import ruin, or even damage, to the farmers. High prices often compensated for scanty crops. The brunt of the evil used to be faced by consumers rather than by producers, and they who had to mourn over deficient crops were the swarms of work people whose wages hardly sufficed to buy them daily bread. It is not so now. The price of wheat is not very seriously enhanced by the scant production of our own soil. The imports from abroad are sufficiently abundant to keep down prices, and thus one part of the earth supplies the most urgent wants of another. The chief sufferer now is not the consumer, but the producer of bread, and hence, the greatest staple industry of the land is called upon to bear an overwhelming burden of discouragement. Nor, as things now stand, is there any near prospect of amendment. Seasons may vary, and it is quite possible that abundance next year may make up for deficiencies felt during the last two or three years. But abundance will not go far towards recouping the losses of the farmers. The immense areas of wheat-growing land now being brought under cultivation in the West of Canada and the United States, the comparative facilities of transport, and the remunerative price which the British Market, even at its lowest, can give for the staff of life, render it improbable that the land of this country, at least as now held, can compete with that of many other countries in its capacity for the growth of wheat.

They, however, who augur from present appearances the ultimate ruin of agriculture in the United Kingdom deduce from the facts far more than they will warrant. We are, perhaps, in this respect, on the verge of a most important transition. But there is no sufficient ground for the apprehension that the cultivation of the soil will not yet become a remunerative, and even a highly prosperous, calling. Man does not live by bread alone, even in a material sense, nor is it the sole object of agriculture to produce wheat. Here are above thirty millions of people within the compass of a comparatively few square miles covered with the best-developed means of locomotion. Those millions must needs be fed. Their physical wants are various. Meat, as well as bread, butter, milk, poultry, beer, cheese, fruit, vegetables of every kind, are required for the sustentation of most households above the range of poverty. These the land ought to supply in abundance. The market is magnificent and near at hand, and the demand would increase with the supply. Let no one suppose that the feeding of thirty-four millions of people, inheriting as they do amongst them such an untold accumulation of wealth, need be anything but a prosperous occupation. Even wheat-growing, under perfectly free conditions, and dealt with simply with a view to its substantial ends, may, under proper conditions, be made to pay.

The truth is, land in this country—not so much, perhaps, by law as by tradition and custom and practice and fashion—is not allowed to become that powerful factor of prosperity which it is capable of becoming. The cultivation of the soil is so shackled by artificial arrangements that it is impossible to get out of it all that, under wise management, it is adapted to produce. No class, perhaps, is specially to be blamed for this result. All classes, however, will, in the long run, derive benefit from a change. Foreign competition cannot deprive our people of the wealth which may be extracted in some form or another from the land which they occupy. In this or that particular form it may have the advantage over them. But, in the main, British farmers, whose sole study it is to supply such food as they can to the British people, can never be distanced by foreign competition.

This, however, is the remoter change to which things are tending. Many difficulties and much suffering will probably be met with before it is reached. Meanwhile, our sympathies are demanded by the immediate troubles of the agricultural class. They are of a kind which no Royal Commission is likely to remove. To them, it is to be feared, many occupiers, and even some proprietors, will be compelled to succumb. It does not in any way alleviate their lot that other industries are in a like case. All the pressure which now bears so heavily upon them bears, or has borne, also upon others. In the battle of life no man, and no occupation, is exempt from disaster. We may all be called to face it in turn, and it becomes our duty as well as our interest to turn it to as good an account as we are able. We do not believe in national decay where the spirit of a nation retains its manliness; and we are certain that under the severest trials the most fitting motto of any country is Nil desperandum!

THE COURT.

The Queen and Princess Beatrice have taken daily drives since their arrival at Balmoral. Princess Beatrice visited the bazaar held at Braemar in favour of the fund being raised for the enlargement of the church at Castletown. Her Royal Highness inspected all the stalls, and made purchases at each. Her Majesty and the Princess attended Divine service on Sunday performed at Balmoral by the Rev. Archibald Campbell. The Queen's grandsons, Princes Christian Victor and Albert of Schleswig-Holstein, who are staying at Braemar, visited her Majesty, and remained to luncheon. Lord Chelmsford arrived at Balmoral on Tuesday. Colonel Pickard met the General at Ballater, and accompanied him in one of the Queen's carriages to Balmoral. Lord Chelmsford received great ovations at the several stopping places on his route northwards. At an audience of the Queen, his Lordship was invested with the Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath, and he had the honour of dining with her Majesty. The Right Hon. R. A. Cross is the Minister in attendance upon her Majesty.

The Prince of Wales made numerous excursions during his stay in South Devon. Yesterday week he passed a portion of the evening walking on the new ground at Dartmouth witnessing the regatta ball, afterwards returning on board his yacht Hildegarde. On Saturday his Royal Highness, accompanied by the Marquis of Hastings, whose yacht was lying in Dartmouth harbour, visited Lord Churston at Lupton. On Sunday afternoon the Prince, accompanied by Captain Stephenson, Mr. Wheeler, whose yacht was at Dartmouth, and Mrs. Wheeler, visited Totnes. They steamed up the Dart in a launch belonging to Mr. Avis, of Dartmouth, and in his charge. The party landed on the Bowling Green, the Totnes side of the river, and walked to the Seymour Hotel, where they lunched, after which they drove to Berry Head and inspected the ruins of Berry Castle. His Royal Highness returned to Totnes at five o'clock, and went on board the launch and steamed down the Dart. The Princess of Wales, with her family, continues at Copenhagen.

Prince and Princess Christian are visiting the Crown Prince and Crown Princess of Germany at Potsdam.

The Duke of Connaught went to the Criterion Theatre on Monday evening. His Royal Highness and the Duchess of Connaught arrived at Muncaster Castle on Tuesday on a visit to Lord and Lady Muncaster. Their Royal Highnesses are expected to arrive at Balmoral to-day (Saturday) on a visit to the Queen.

Prince Leopold arrived in Devonport Harbour on Saturday last in her Majesty's paddle-steamer Lively, Commander Egerton. The Prince landed at Mount Edgcumbe, and drove around the park, and afterwards lunched at Edgcumbe House. His Royal Highness gave a dinner party in the evening on board the Lively. The steamer left Mount's Bay early on Monday morning for the Scilly Isles, where she arrived in the afternoon. The Prince landed, and drove direct to Tresco Abbey, the seat of Mr. Dorrien Smith, the lord proprietor. After a three-hours' visit his Royal Highness proceeded to St. Mary's, and inspected the castle, returning to the Lively in the evening. On Tuesday night the Prince arrived at Pembroke Docks. It is stated that his Royal Highness's visit to Sheffield, for the purpose of opening Firth College, is fixed for Oct. 15.

The Grand Duke of Baden has been visiting the Duke of Sutherland at Dunrobin.

The Crown Prince of Sweden and Norway was entertained last week with a torchlight dance given by the Earl and Countess of Seafield at Castle Grant, Grantown, in honour of his visit. The Crown Prince, after having excellent sport in the Taymouth preserves, has left Aberfeldy for the south.

His Excellency the Austrian Ambassador and Countess Karolyi have left Dunrobin Castle, after visiting the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland, for Black Mount, the Earl of Dudley's shooting-lodge in the Highlands, which his Excellency has taken for a few weeks' shooting. Count and Countess de Montebello have left for Paris, Admiral Pothuau having returned to the French Embassy, Albert-gate, to resume his diplomatic functions. His Excellency Lord Lyons has arrived from Paris. His Excellency the Siamese Envoy was, by command of the Queen, conducted over Windsor Castle on Monday. His Excellency also visited the Frogmore Gardens and Mausoleum, the Home Farm and Dairy, and drove to Virginia Water. The Lord President of the Council, with the Duchess of Richmond and Gordon and the Ladies Gordon Lennox, has arrived at Gordon Castle. Earl and Countess Sydney have arrived at Frognall, Kent, from Germany and Paris. The Earl of Dunraven has left Kenry House, Putney Vale, for New York. The Countess of Dunraven has arrived at Dunraven Castle, Bridgend, Glamorganshire.

POLITICS.

The chief gladiators of the political arena are girding up their loins—the Earl of Beaconsfield to wrestle with habitual adroitness at Aylesbury among "old friends whom I much love," on the 18th of this month; and Mr. Gladstone to begin his electioneering campaign in Midlothian towards the end of November, the right hon. gentleman, meantime, keeping his hand in by discoursing of cottage gardening at Hawarden. Seeking renewed strength by grappling with "Agricultural Depression," if not with mother earth, the Marquis of Hartington speaks on the absorbing topic ere the week closes at the dinner of the Radnorshire Agricultural Society, to be held at the quaintly named town of Pen-y-Bowt; and Sir Stafford Northcote will have an early opportunity of answering any political criticisms of the noble Lord on Monday next, when the Chancellor of the Exchequer will have the agreeable duty of introducing his eldest son, Mr. H. S. Northcote, to Exeter as the second Conservative candidate at the General Election.

Mr. Raikes, at Rhyl, on Monday addressed a large open-air meeting of Cheshire Conservatives, who, having duly taken their pleasure on the pier and in the Winter Gardens, and having been regaled at dinner into the bargain, were naturally not indisposed to give ear unto the emphatic utterances of the esteemed Chairman of Committees. Mr. Raikes did not fail to plume himself, it was to be noticed, on his conduct in the chair during the past arduous Session; but the gist of his speech was a spirited rebuke of the "great electioneering agent," Mr. Gladstone, for having had the temerity to commend a relative of his as a Liberal candidate for Chester. The Government of Mr. Gladstone, and all their acts, were likewise uncompromisingly denounced by Mr. Raikes, whose sharp criticisms may be taken as signs of the vivacity of the portending struggle. Had it been anything but a Church meeting that Mr. Childers attended at Knottingley, on Tuesday, even that placid Liberal might have been tempted to answer Mr. Raikes in lieu of making a few common-place remarks regarding ecclesiastical matters.

The Liberal Associations of Lancashire are actively bestirring themselves. North Lancashire Liberals have been holding consultations with the view of selecting a candidate for the General Election; and the Liberals of Manchester last Saturday combined business with pleasure by holding a monster meeting in the grounds of Manley Hall, under the presidency of Mr. R. Leake, and by passing resolutions condemnatory of Lord Beaconsfield's Administration.

The representation of Moray and Nairn is being keenly contested by Sir George Macpherson Grant, the Liberal candidate, and by Mr. Brodie, upon whom the choice of the Conservatives has fallen; and the interest taken in the candidature of both is plainly to be gathered from the liveliness of the Scotsman's reports of their meetings.

Mr. Parnell has evidently resolved to maintain unflinchingly the firm attitude which (not to put too fine a point on it) he has taken up in the House of Commons as the unconquerable advocate of Home Rule for Ireland. The hon. member on Sunday addressed a great meeting in Limerick, and was accompanied by a few other Irish members, Mr. O'Shaughnessy, Mr. W. H. Sullivan, and Mr. Gabbett. There was great uproar during the meeting, over which the Rev. Marcus O'Cleary endeavoured to preside; but the vast assemblage was pretty unanimous in supporting the resolutions countenanced by Mr. Parnell and the rest of the speakers, and advocating a sweeping reform of the land laws of Ireland. Exclamations of reprehensible violence interrupted the orators at times—such as, "Give them [the landlords] an ounce of lead!"—and signs were not lacking that Mr. Parnell may not possess the power to control the storm he is essaying to raise. On the morrow, under the assuaging influence of a lunch on board a Shannon steamer, Mr. Parnell so far moderated his ardour, however, as to attempt a justification of his Parliamentary action on the grounds of expediency.

THE ISLAND OF KAKONKAH.

On the West Coast of Africa, thirty miles north of Sierra Leone, adjacent to the frontier of Senegambia, is the mouth of the Great Scarcies River, with this small island at its entrance. We are indebted to Sub-Lieutenant Henry Baker, R.N., on board H.M.S. Pioneer, for the view presented in our Engraving from a sketch by his pencil. On April 28 of this year formal possession of the island was taken in the name of her Majesty Queen Victoria, under the treaty of Massawah, which was signed in 1876 by the most influential native chiefs on that coast, to confirm the British right of sovereignty, claimed by our Government since 1847. A custom-house has now been erected, with the British flag, under guard of a detachment of Sierra Leone police, commanded by Captain Richmond, late of the 10th Hussars. But the neighbouring tribes are dissatisfied, and it has been thought prudent to station H.M.S. Pioneer, under Lieutenant-Commander J. L. Burr, for the prevention of any attack on Kakonkah. Our Illustration shows that vessel lying at anchor; the small pier, with a cargo-boat, and the sheds of the French factory, as well as the Custom-house, are shown along the beach.

THEATRES.

There is at present a lull in serious dramatic effort. The only attempt made at novelty is, not an original drama, serious or comic, but a burlesque by Mr. H. J. Byron, contributed to the Gaiety. It seems designed to prolong the influence of the visit of the Comédie Française Company to that theatre; and the subject of the new extravaganza is indicated by the title, "Handsome Hernani, or The Fatal Penny-Whistle." But it scarcely satisfies expectation. We have no references in it to, or imitations of, Mdlle. Bernhardt, or of her compeers; but, instead, the usual amount of punning, parody, song, and dance, aided by the really handsome Miss Farren for the imaginary stage hero. Herr Lutz is to be congratulated on his selection of the music, and Messrs. Hann and Perkins on the scenery. The costumes by Madame Alias speak for themselves. And "this is the sum of the matter."

The Royal Aquarium has given a new and remarkably elegant entertainment on the central stage in the Grand Hall, which ought to prove attractive. It is a grand ballet divertissement, in Two Tableaux, entitled "The Fairies' Fancy Ball," the invention of which is due to Madame Katti Lanner. It is an exceedingly pretty arrangement of adult and infant dancers, very skilfully and gracefully realised. The principal parts are taken by Mdlles. Marie Müller, Luna, La Stella, and Roe. The whole terminated by a grand galop, executed by the entire troupe, which is remarkably rich in individual talent.

The new drama of "Jane Eyre; or, Poor Relations," dramatised from the novel by Mr. James Willing, has been favourably received at the Park Theatre. The burden of the drama rests on Miss Fanny Addison, who, in the mad scene, shows herself laudably ambitious of producing a great and marked effect; but unfortunately she far oversteps the mark. The characters in general are adequately filled. The play is carefully placed on the boards, and elaborate attention has been paid to the mise-en-scène.

FASHIONABLE MARRIAGES.

A double wedding was solemnised on Wednesday at St. George's Church, Hanover-square, when the Right Hon. Sir Frederick Peel, second son of the illustrious statesman, was married to Miss Janet Pleydell Bouverie; and the Hon. Alexander Francis Henry Campbell, 12th Lancers, youngest son of the Earl of Cawdor, to Miss Constance Pleydell Bouverie, second and fourth daughters of Mr. Philip Pleydell Bouverie, of Brymore, Somerset. A select party, confined to the near relatives of the several families, attended at the ceremony. At the entrance to the aisle there was quite an array of bridemaids, each of the sisters having six attendant ladies. Miss Janet's bridemaids comprised Miss Pleydell Bouverie, her sister; Miss Ethel Sanford, Miss St. John Mildmay, Miss Goddard, Miss Maud Glyn, and Miss Ella Peel, niece of the bridegroom; and Miss Constance's were Miss Mary P. Bouverie, her sister; Miss Crawfurd, cousin of the bridegroom; Miss Alice P. Bouverie, Miss Sanford, Miss A'Court, and Miss Seymour. Sir Frederick Peel was accompanied by Captain Shelley; and the Hon. Alexander F. H. Campbell was attended by Captain the Hon. Walter J. Stewart, 12th Lancers, as his best man. Both brides arrived at half-past eleven, and at once passed to the communion-table, followed by their bridemaids. Miss Janet's bridal toilette was composed of ivory duchesse satin trimmed with choice lace, a lace veil over a wreath of natural orange blossoms; her jewels were diamonds. Miss Constance Bouverie wore a dress of rich ivory duchesse satin, made à la Pompadour, handsomely trimmed with the finest Valenciennes lace and real orange blossoms, and over a wreath of real orange blossoms fastened to the hair by diamond ornaments was a veil of old Brussels point; her jewels were diamonds. The twelve bridemaids were dressed alike in ivory satin, trimmed and draped with Indian muslin and Bretonne lace, with hats to match. The elder sister's bridemaids wore natural red roses in their hats and dresses, and each wore a gold bangle with lapis lazuli knobs, a present from Sir Frederick Peel. The younger sister's bridemaids wore in their hats bunches of pink heather and bog myrtle, the badge of the Campbells of Cawdor, and brooches with the bride's name, "Constance," in gold, the gift of the gallant bridegroom. The officiating clergyman was the Rev. C. Arundell St. John Mildmay, M.A., Rector of Denton, Norfolk, who was assisted by the Rev. Philip Deedes, M.A., Rector of Nether Broughton, Leicestershire, and the Rev. William Bouverie Trevelyan. After the registration of the marriage the newly-wedded couples left the church, the organist playing Mendelssohn's "Wedding March." Afterwards the wedding party re-assembled at Mr. and Mrs. P. Pleydell Bouverie's residence, in Hill-street, Berkeley-square, to breakfast, between sixty and seventy friends meeting on the occasion.

Early in the afternoon Sir Frederick and Lady Peel took their departure for Norton Hall, near Daventry, whence they shortly proceed to Scotland.

The Hon. Alexander Campbell and bride left at the same time for Burwood, near Cobham, where they spend the honeymoon, and afterwards go to Scotland.

As usual, both couples started amidst a shower of rice.

An impromptu "welcome-home" dinner to Mr. William Simpson and Mr. Melton Prior (who have recently returned from serving the Illustrated London News as Special Artists respectively in Afghanistan and in Zululand) drew a noteworthy assemblage of artists and journalists to the Prince's Room of the Holborn Restaurant on Thursday week. Mr. George Augustus Sala, who presided with habitual bonhomie, was particularly felicitous in expatiating upon the long and distinguished career of Mr. Simpson, whose experience as a Special Artist ranges from the Crimean War to the British entry into Jellalabad. Equally happy was the Chairman in rapidly touching upon the various expeditions of Mr. Prior as Special Artist of this Journal, from his first campaign with Sir Garnet Wolseley in Ashantee to his last with Lord Chelmsford in Zululand. Mr. Simpson and Mr. Prior returned thanks in modest terms. Mr. Archibald Forbes (the heartiness of whose reception was not second to that of "the guests of the evening") replied for the toast of "The Special War Correspondents;" and the famous Special of the Daily News spoke in warm terms of the zeal and activity in the field of Mr. Simpson, Mr. Prior, the late Mr. Robert Landells, and other Special Artists, to whom the public have been indebted for the war sketches which have been reproduced in the Illustrated London News. THE ZULU WAR.

The battle of Ulundi, fought by Lord Chelmsford on July 4, is the subject of our large Engraving, filling a whole sheet of paper, and equal in size to eight pages of this Journal, which forms the Extra Supplement of the present week. This Engraving is furnished by a drawing from the skilful pencil of Mr. Melton Prior, our Special Artist lately with Lord Chelmsford's army in Zululand. It represents, in the foreground, the final rush of the Zulus, viewed from behind their position, near the encampment which had been occupied by our troops shortly before, and at which the spectator is supposed to remain beholding their attack on the troops, now drawn up in a closed square formation, as seen in the background some hundreds of yards distant. The Zulus behaved with amazing courage, repeatedly attempting to charge, though mown down by hundreds under the ceaseless fire of Martini-Henry rifles, with shells from the artillery; so that they were not able to come, in any numbers, within sixty yards of the sides of that terrible square. Their own firearms made a great deal of noise and smoke, and sent a heavy rain of bullets over the heads of our soldiers, but, for want of skill in musketry practice, failed to do much execution. Only a dozen men were killed on our side, while less than a hundred, including natives, were even wounded, but few of them very severely. On the other hand, it is estimated that fifteen hundred of the Zulus were killed in this desperate conflict on their side, which did not last an hour. The force engaged was composed of Major-General Newdigate's division and Brigadier-General Sir Evelyn Wood's column together mustering about 4000 European regulars, 1000 Native troops, twelve guns of the Royal Artillery, and two Gatling guns. After the repulse of the last Zulu attack, the square of British troops opened, and let out the 17th Lancers and Colonel Buller's irregular cavalry, which pursued the retreating enemy, inflicting much additional slaughter upon them.

An incident which took place on the day before, July 3, in the reconnaissance that was made across the River Umvolosi, is delineated by Mr. Prior in his Sketch presented on our front page. It is that of a hand-to-hand single combat between Lord William Beresford and one of the Zulu warriors, who was killed, in the manner shown in the Sketch, being run through with the sword piercing his shield and his naked body. Mr. Prior's other Sketches published this week are those of Lord Chelmsford and his staff, on a spur of the Ibabanango range, looking out for Ulundi; and a scene in camp on the night before the battle, with several officers discussing the chances of a fight next day; also, the Colonial Volunteers with captured cattle; and a view of the fatal crossing-place on the Buffalo River, known as "Fugitives' Drift," with the stone to which Lieutenant Melvill vainly attempted to cling when he had borne off the colours of the 24th Regiment from Isandhlwana.

The military ceremony of General Sir Garnet Wolseley investing Major Chard, R.E., with the Victoria Cross, in the presence of Lord Chelmsford and the Staff, is the subject of another Illustration. This is from a sketch by Lieutenant N. Newnham Davis, of the 3rd Buffs, belonging to the special force of Mounted Infantry. Sir Garnet, who was on horseback, called Major Chard forward, his company of Engineers being a little in front of the line of troops. Major Chard saluted, and then held his sword at the "carry," while the General briefly addressed him with due congratulations, afterwards pinning the cross to his breast and shaking hands with him. Lord Chelmsford, also on horseback, appears to the left hand; to the right is Colonel Colley, Chief of the Staff, who read the official notification of the honour conferred on Major Chard.

The latest news from Sir Garnet Wolseley, who is at Ulundi, appears in a despatch dated the 18th ult. He states that, since the 13th, troops under Colonel Barrow and Lord Gifford had been in pursuit of Cetewayo, who had but a small number of followers. His Prime Minister, Mnyamana, and another important chief, Usingwayo, surrendered on the 14th, with three of the King's brothers. The new military kraal, Amanakanzi, at the confluence of the Black and White Umvolosi, was destroyed on the previous day. Sir Garnet Wolseley was to be at Pretoria on the 10th inst., to settle the affairs of the Transvaal. The Pondos and Basutos seem to be getting into a more pacific condition.

THE MANCE HELIOGRAPH.

The Mance heliograph, of which a description and an Engraving appeared in our Journal of April 26, showing its employment by Lord Chelmsford to flash messages to Colonel Pearson when shut up in Ekowe, continues to do good service in South Africa. Sir Garnet Wolseley, in his rapid advance to the theatre of war, was enabled by its agency, on reaching the capital of Natal, to take over the active control of the forces operating far away in Zululand. His Excellency arrived on June 28 at Pietermaritzburg, whence, a few hours later, he could report, "Have placed Lord Chelmsford in command of the Second Division and of Wood's forces until I can reach them. Have no difficulty in flashing orders to him." In a subsequent despatch, detailing his arrangements after the fall of Ulundi, Sir Garnet Wolseley states that "Heliographs are working perfectly. Stations at Altezeli, Marshall, Evelyn Wood, and Kwamagwasa, and one being established at St. Paul's." Many other startling proofs of the usefulness of Mr. Mance's invention have been afforded during the Afghan and Zulu wars, and have excited much attention at home. A few days ago, Mr. S. Goode had the honour of showing the heliograph to their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, on board the Royal yacht Osborne, and explaining its application to naval purposes. Princes Edward and George were present and showed much interest in the adaptation of sun-signalling to the dot and dash system, with which their Royal Highnesses were familiar. Shortly before the prorogation of Parliament, the members of the House of Commons were afforded an opportunity of witnessing the working of the heliograph, Mr. Goode having attended in one of the ante-rooms of the House on two evenings with that object.

The Royal warrant empowering the Commissioners of the Patriotic Fund to receive and distribute the Zulu War Funds enacts that "the Isandhlwana and Rorke's Drift Fund," and the "Zulu War General Fund," both raised by the Military Committee, and the moneys subsequently raised at the Mansion House, be kept separate and distinct, and that each account shall bear the expense of its own administration by the Commissioners.

An interesting event took place yesterday week in the grounds of the Viceregal Lodge, Dublin—namely, a fête given by the Lord Lieutenant and the Duchess of Marlborough to the boys of the Hibernian Military School and to those of the Artaine and the Meath Industrial Schools. The entertainment was planned in a kindly and thoughtful spirit, and was carried out in a manner which afforded the greatest pleasure to all. Upwards of 1000 boys of the institutions mentioned enjoyed the Viceregal hospitality.

The annual congress of the Association for the Advancement of Science has been held at Montpelier. The President, M. Accompanied by her mother, the Archduchess Maria Christina arrived incognita at Paris last Saturday afternoon, and was visited by Queen Isabella at Meurice's Hotel. The Archduchess and her mother went at noon on Sunday to the Hôtel Basilewski, where they had been invited to luncheon by Queen Isabella. At half-past two they returned to the Hôtel Meurice, where Queen Isabella called on them somewhat later, to take a final adieu. A little after eight the Archduchesses left for the Eastern Station, where they were received by the Marquis and Marquise de Molins and the Marquis d'Alta Villa (Master of Queen Isabella's Household), who presented a magnificent basket of flowers surrounded by the Spanish colours, in the name of his Sovereign. A few minutes later the future Queen of Spain took her departure from Paris.

Maria Christina of Austria was born on July 21, 1858. She is the daughter of the Archduke Charles Ferdinand, who died in 1874, and of his consort Elizabeth, the elder sister of the Queen of the Belgians. She is thus the niece of the latter, and also stands, by her father, in the same relationship to the Archduke Albert. The existing collateral branches of the House of Hapsburg-Lorraine descend from the Emperor Leopold II. and the Empress Maria Louisa, the daughter of Charles II. of Spain, whose death occurred in 1792. The Archduchess, consequently, claims descent through her father and mother from a Spanish Infant.

Mr. Ross moved a resolution requesting the Lieutenant-Governor to dismiss the present Ministers, and proposing that in the event of his Excellency's non-compliance supplies should be refused. Next day the Legislative Council, by 15 votes against 7, threw out the Supply Bill and adopted a resolution calling upon the Lieutenant-Governor to change his advisers. The Lieutenant-Governor has sent a message to the Legislative Council regretting that differences should have arisen between it and the Legislative Assembly and expressing a hope that the Ministers would find some means of re-establishing harmony. The Legislative Council have rejected, by fifteen votes against three, a motion brought forward by the Government for a conference between the Council and the Assembly to discuss the Supply Bill. In Tuesday's sitting of the House of Assembly a further motion, expressing want of confidence in the Government and affirming the necessity of a change of Ministry, was brought forward, but was lost by 24 votes against 21.

On the motion of Mr. Joly, the Premier, the Legislative Assembly adjourned on Tuesday until Oct. 28.

The authorities of Quebec province have petitioned the Marquis of Lorne for an additional regiment of regular troops to preserve order. The Governor-General replied that a properly organised police force should be sufficient for the purpose, and that until proper measures to that effect had been adopted it was unlikely that the Dominion Government would increase the garrison of Quebec.

AUSTRALIA.

A despatch from Melbourne of last Friday's date says that, the Budget having been disapproved by the Legislative Council, the tariff has been submitted to a caucus congress, by which it was accepted. It has consequently been decided to effect a partial remission of the customs duties, and the deficit will be covered by an increase in the stamp duties to the extent of £70,000.

At a monster meeting held at Tirnova last week a vote of want of confidence in the Bulgarian Ministry, for what the speakers described as the anti-Constitutional acts of the Government, was unanimously passed, and the fact was telegraphed directly to Prince Alexander at Sophia. Tuesday night's Gazette announces the following appointments:—Maurice William Ernest de Bunsen, Esq., to be a third secretary in her Majesty's Diplomatic Service; Richard Cayley, Esq., Queen's Advocate of the Island of Ceylon, to be Chief Justice of that colony; Captain Irwin Charles Maling to be Colonial Secretary for the Island of Grenada; Victor Alexander Williamson, Esq., to be a Member of the Executive and Legislative Councils of the Colony of Fiji.

The great Tun of Heidelberg, which was made in 1751 by order of the Elector Carl Theodore, was estimated to contain 99,067 gallons. The next largest vessel, as far as is known, in the world has just been manufactured in the coopering establishment of Werk and Co., in Cincinnati. It will hold 18,000 gallons (therefore about 5½ times smaller than the Heidelberg tun), is 15 ft. high and 15 ft. in diameter. The staves are of oak 5 in. thick, and the total amount of wood employed in making it was 8125 ft. It weighs about six tons.

The great success which attended the recent exhibition of Westphalian antiquities at Münster, and the previous exhibitions of historical art at Cologne and Frankfort, has aroused the Senate and burghers of the old Hanseatic city of Lübeck to make a similar display. Accordingly, an exhibition has been opened there of antiquities connected with art and industrial occupations and of artistic productions of the Middle Ages. Although time and war have laid destroying hands upon much that was valuable in the olden time, still it is believed that a large quantity of art-treasures has been preserved in the churches and in the collections of the city and of private persons which will invest this exhibition with an interest not inferior to that of the Westphalian collection. The Lübeck exhibition, which will remain open for three weeks, is held in the old Burgkloster, which has been lately restored.

The facts with regard to the recall of Colonel Browne from Mandalay are stated in a presumably semi-official telegram from Simla to be as follows:—The Indian Government has given directions for Colonel Browne to return to his post as Commissioner in British Burmah, leaving Mr. Saint-Barbe as Chargé-d'Affaires at Mandalay. Colonel Browne has already left the Burmese capital, reporting all quiet there. No successor will be appointed at present, it being considered that an officer of junior rank suffices for the discharge of the mere routine duties of the British representative in the present state of relations with Burmah. A telegram to the Daily News from Rangoon says that Colonel Browne's departure is considered a triumph at Mandalay, for the King will refuse all communication with minor officials. The despatch adds:—"Twelve guns have been mounted at the Minkla frontier, where there are forty thousand men. There are signs of a conspiracy against King Theebaw among the Ministers. Three boy Princes have been made Hpongyees. The Ministers would form a Regency."

The War Office has issued a statement setting forth the establishment of the British army for 1879-80. These branches of the service, with other arms, give a total of 336,755, adding to which 244,263 volunteers, there is a grand total of 581,018 men.

To be an Ordinary Member of the Third Class, or Companions:—John Kirk, M.D., her Majesty's Political Agent and Consul-General at Zanzibar.

The Sussex Archæological Society held their annual excursion on the 27th ult., selecting Brighton for the first time for very many years as the place of rendezvous. There was a large attendance of members, associates, and friends. They assembled at the Pavilion, museum, and library. The several objects of historic and archæological interest were first inspected and explained, and then trips were taken to Rottingdean and Ovingdean, the ancient churches of which were visited. Returning to Brighton, the parish church of Old St. Nicholas was inspected, and a paper on Sussex churches, by Archdeacon Hannah, read, and the party then adjourned to the Pavilion, where they dined. In the evening a soirée on a large scale was given by the local committee.—The last excursion of the Cambrian Archæological Association was made last Saturday, when Montgomery was the point of attraction, and disdaining the modern railway route, which, in fact, would only in part serve the purpose of the wayfarers, the party went by road and viewed in turn the parish church, the remains of the old castle, and the half-timbered house in Lymore Park.

On Tuesday the gold medal of the South Middlesex Rifles was won by Captain Reid-Todd with 78 points; and the annual regimental prize-meeting of the 36th Middlesex Rifles was held at Wormwood Scrubbs.

THE LATE SIR ROWLAND HILL.

The death, on Wednesday week, of this eminent social and administrative reformer, and most useful member of the Civil Service, has recalled to the public mind his grand national work, the advocacy and establishment of the Penny Postage. Middle-aged Englishmen and English women can well remember its achievement, which came into effect in January, 1840, after an agitation supported by numerous meetings, petitions, deputations, and memorials from all parts of the United Kingdom. He had not previously been officially connected with any Government department. He was born at Kidderminster, Dec. 3, 1795, of an old Nonconformist family resident there for some generations before. His father, Thomas Wright Hill, having removed to Birmingham and there set up a school, the sons, amongst whom were Matthew Davenport Hill, Frederick Hill, and Rowland Hill, all distinguished men in after years, were brought up under the tuition of their careful and consistent parent. Rowland Hill and his brother Arthur established a school at Bruce Castle, Tottenham, which has continued to maintain a high character. But other work of more conspicuous public utility soon engaged the attention of Rowland Hill. He assisted in founding the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge, and became Secretary to the Royal Commission for the systematic colonisation of South Australia upon Mr. Edward Gibbon Wakefield's principles. From the year 1837 onwards, he devoted himself to Post Office reform. He laboured to set forth the advantages of a small uniform rate for the conveyance and delivery of all letters, irrespective of distance, seeing that the actual cost of their carriage, even from London to Edinburgh, was but an insignificant fraction of a penny. The merit, however, of having been the first to propose the penny postage does not belong to Rowland Hill, but to the late Mr. Wallace, of Kelly, M.P. for Greenock, who brought this proposal before Parliament so early as the Session of 1833. The scheme was approved by a Select Committee of the House of Commons, which examined its details in 1838, and Lord Melbourne's Government, after much pressure of the popular will, consented to its execution. Mr. Rowland Hill was appointed to put it in action; but, instead of having a direct engagement at the Post Office, was placed at the Treasury, with a salary of £1500 a year for two years. He had to contend with great official opposition, but succeeded in his task. Sir Robert Peel's Government, though it could not stop the working of the new system, meanly dismissed its author without further reward or employment. There was a general outcry of indignation at this treatment of Mr. Rowland Hill. A national subscription was raised to present him with the sum of £13,000, which he had very well earned. He then became a Director, and subsequently Chairman, of the London and Brighton Railway. In 1846, when the Whigs returned to power with Lord John Russell's Ministry, Mr. Rowland Hill was appointed Secretary to the Postmaster-General, and in 1854, as Chief Secretary to the Post-Office, he obtained fuller powers to complete the new organisation of that department. With the successive Postmasters-General, Lord Canning and Lord Elgin more especially, he worked in perfect harmony till the late Lord Stanley of Alderley came into office there. Sir Rowland Hill, on whom the rank of K.C.B. had been conferred in 1860, retired from the Post-Office four years later with a pension of £2000, equal to his full salary, besides a grant of £20,000 voted him by Parliament. He received honorary distinctions from the University of Oxford, the Royal Society, the Society of Arts, and the Corporation of London, which last-named municipality presented him with the Freedom of the City in a gold casket so recently as Midsummer of this year.

Sir Rowland Hill married, in 1827, the eldest daughter of the late Mr. Joseph Pearson, of Wolverhampton, and that lady survives him, with one son and three daughters.

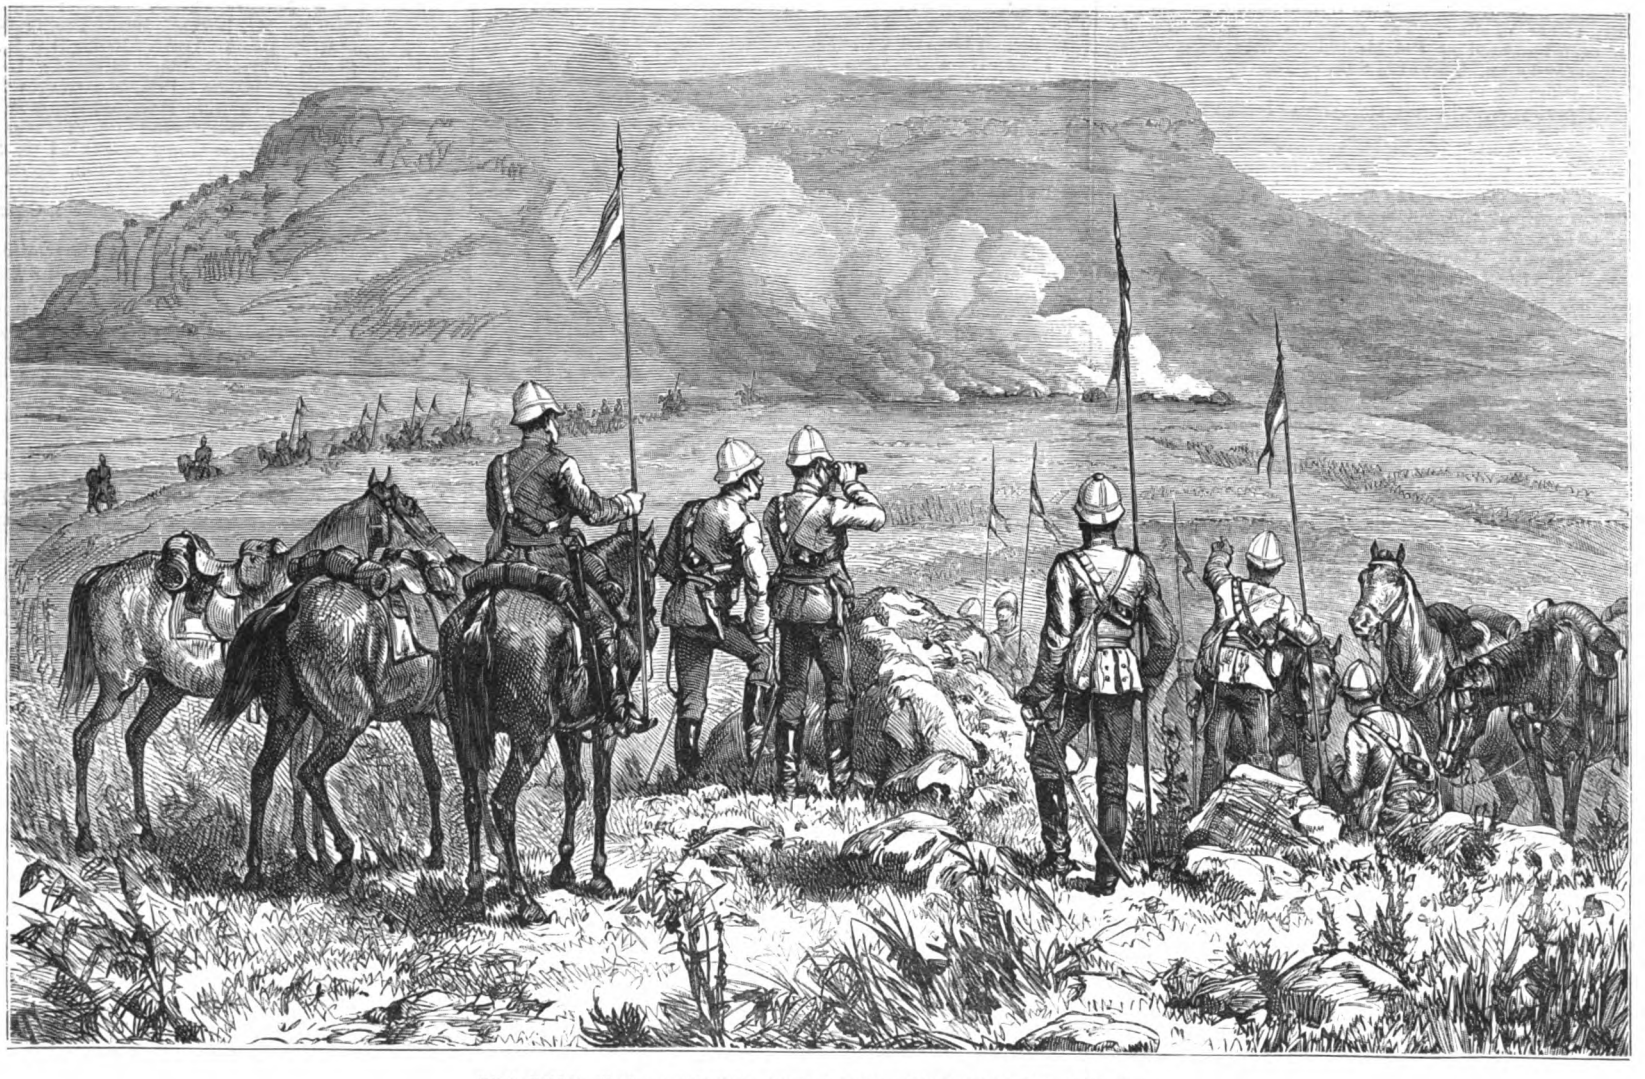
THE FUNERAL IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY.



Due homage was paid to the national services of the late Sir Rowland Hill by the interment of his remains on Thursday in St. Paul's Chapel, Westminster Abbey. The chief mourners assembled at the residence of the deceased at half-past nine, and the procession left the house exactly at ten o'clock. The cortége consisted of a hearse drawn by four horses, with feathers and velvets, preceded by a number of bearers and followed by four mourning-coaches. The mourners occupied the coaches in the following order:—First carriage: Mr. Pearson Hill, son, chief mourner; Mr. Rowland Torrens Hill, Mr. R. Fellows, Mr. A. Fellows. Second coach: Mr. R. H. Barnett, Mr. F. P. Fellows, Mr. Barnett, jun. Third: Mr. Alfred Hill, Mr. Julian Hill, Dr. Birkbeck Hill, D.C.L., Mr. Joseph Walton. Fourth: Mr. Berkeley Hill, Mr. Laundy Waters, and Dr. Herbert N. Evans. Private carriages followed. The bell of St. Stephen's Church, Hampstead-green, tolled, and all the principal shops at Hampstead and on Haverstock-hill were partially closed. A large crowd assembled near the residence to see the departure of the procession, which proceeded by way of Haverstock-hill, Park-street, Albany-street, Portland-place, Oxford-circus, Regent-street, Charing-cross, and Parliament-street, to the Abbey.

The funeral procession arrived at the west cloister door in Dean's-yard about twelve o'clock. There a guard of honour was drawn up, consisting of about a hundred men of the Post-Office detachment of the 21st Middlesex Rifle Volunteers, under the command of Captain Cardin, of which corps Sir Rowland Hill had been a life member from 1859, when he was one of its promoters, and 300 men of the 49th Middlesex (Post Office) Volunteers, under the command of Major Sturgeon. The coffin, covered with a black pall, nearly hidden beneath a mass of wreaths and crosses of white roses, stephanotis, and violets, was taken from the hearse, and a procession was formed, with the choir leading, and singing the opening sentences of the burial service. Then succeeded the minor canons and vergers, and the Rev. Canon Duckworth, supported by the Chapter Clerk and the Receiver of the Abbey. Next followed the body, the pall-bearers on the right side being the Lord Mayor, Sir G. Airy (Astronomer Royal), Mr. James Heywood, F.R.S., and Mr. Torrens, M.P. On the opposite side were the Hon. C. P. Villiers, M.P.; Mr. Page, Assistant-Secretary to the Post Office; Mr. Edwin Chadwick, C.B., and Mr. C. H. Gregory, C.E. Earl Granville, Earl Beauchamp, Lord Truro, Sir H. Cole, Sir John Bennett, the Hon. S. Lyttleton, Dr. Buchanan (Mayor of Kidderminster), Mr. Macdonald, U.S., and Herr Eickhall, of Cologne, were also among the representative men present. The coffin having been placed upon trestles immediately facing the altar, the mourners were conducted to seats on either side, and the long procession of friends filed past it inside the altar rails. The lesson was read by Canon Duckworth in a most impressive manner, and was followed by the anthem, "Blest are the departed," from Spohr's "Last Judgment." The line of procession was again re-formed, and the funeral party proceeded in the same order to St. Paul's Chapel, immediately opposite the better-known chapel of Edward the Confessor, where the service was concluded. The Dead March in "Saul" was magnificently rendered at the close of the ceremony by Mr. Thurle.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

Now, really! Here is a correspondent, signing himself "'Viator,' who writes, "I cannot understand how it is that you have omitted from your Hundred Greatest Men the name of George Stephenson. Surely, if there ever were a benefactor to the human race and a great man it was 'Geordie.'" Granted, most cheerfully. But surely "Viator" must be a very hasty traveller. If he will turn to the paragraph containing the list of the Hundred Greatest Men he will find that the twenty-eighth name in the catalogue is that of George Stephenson. Another correspondent asks why Elizabeth Fry finds no place among the Hundred Greatest Women. I answer that I think that admirable Quakeress to have been, in every respect, so truly great that I classed her as androgynal, and placed her among the Men. Finally, I am impetuously asked, on many post-cards, why I left out Mary Queen of Scots. Well, I likewise left out Clytemnestra; but then I confess to having given admission to Semiramis; and there were certainly circumstances, to say the least, suspicious connected with the death of Ninus. Perhaps he was a troublesome husband; and perhaps, also, Darnley deserved all the "blowing up" he got at the Kirk of Field. Suppose, in the case of the beautiful and unfortunate Queen of Scots, that we arrived at a compromise. Let the Queen Mary of Sir Walter Scott and Mr. Algernon Swinburne—not the Mary Stuart of history—be placed among the Hundred Greatest.

Mem.: The idea of collecting the Hundred Greatest Men and the Hundred Greatest Women in cut-and-dried order was not mine; and my correspondents seem to be unaware that I have been laughing this fortnight past, in a sly subdued manner, at the absurdity of supposing that a hundred, or a thousand, or ten thousand entries could cover the names of those who are commonly accounted the greatest of mankind. I say commonly accounted; for, abstractedly, true greatness can only exist save in connection with goodness. I daresay that in the opinion of Mr. Edwin Arnold, whose eloquent poem "The Light of Asia" I am just now reading, Buddha was one of the greatest of mankind. I have had at least a dozen letters wrathfully telling me that Mahomet was one of the greatest.

"I weep for Adonais—he is dead." Stay! one must not be very sentimental over the recent decease of a youth who, albeit his days were few, had made some noise in the world, and promised to become a very great celebrity indeed. It is only the juvenile gorilla who has been lately so prominent an attraction at the Crystal Palace that is dead. He missed the torrid glow of sunny Africa, and our weeping skies were, perchance, too much for him. Poor little quadrumane! It was rather hard to fade away just as fine weather was beginning to set in. He will be neither buried nor cremated; but his remains will have the honour of being stuffed. But, Le Singe est mort. Vive le Singe! The gorilla's guide, philosopher, and friend, the Kooloo Camba, yet survives; and the arrival from Liverpool is announced of one of the choicest ourang outangs ever seen. There should be no solution of continuity in the dynasty of popular monkeys.

Mr. Archibald Forbes, safely returned from Zululand and (I rejoice to learn) rapidly gaining health and strength, is about to deliver a series of lectures on his personal experiences as a war correspondent in South Africa. He will lecture, I understand, throughout the United Kingdom, and will ultimately visit the United States. Both here and in America he will experience, I have no doubt, a tremendous reception; but he will not forget, I hope, the friendly words of warning which I ventured to address to him when he was projecting that lecturing tour which was postponed in consequence of the Afghan war and his immediate departure for the scene of action. Don't do too much, Mr. Forbes. Don't work double tides. After the ride from Ulundi some rest and recreation, and not the most exhausting of all mental work, public speaking, are requisite.

An animated controversy is enlivening the dulness of the "Silly Season" touching the quality of the food supplied to boys at school, and the manner of cooking that food. I have heard that modern schoolboys are "coddled;" that they are fifty times better off than they were wont to be, in the matter of dietary, and that, on the whole, they have no great cause for complaint. I have had myself but a very small amount of schooling; but my brief experiences of the scholastic cuisine were exceptionally pleasant. Forty years ago I was sent to France to be educated at a college in Paris. I was a day boy, and was put en pension at a boarding-house close to the college. The fare was as follows:—For breakfast at eight a.m. a great bowl full of hot milk, with a little pot of coffee, and bread à discrétion. For the second breakfast at noon, a dish of meat or fish (as the days were fat or lean), vegetables, cheese, and fruit. For dinner at five p.m., soup, bouilli, vegetables, a roast (veal or mutton), salad, cheese, and fruit. After that nothing—unless you made cupboard love to the housekeeper, and cajoled her out of a slice of bread-and-jam. Stay; I should mention that at the second breakfast and at dinner there was a bottle of vin ordinaire to every four boys. The ushers took care that the wine was largely diluted with water.

I went afterwards for a couple of years to a Pestalozzian boarding-school at Turnham-green. We were kindly treated and abundantly fed on roast and boiled meats, vegetables, and pudding; and at breakfast and tea every boy could obtain an addition to his four thick slices of bread-and-butter if he chose to ask for the "supplement" in a loud voice and in the French, German, or Italian language. Yet I can conscientiously say that neither in France nor in England did my schoolfellows or myself ever cease from grumbling at the quantity and quality of our victuals and denouncing the first as insufficient and the second as execrable. Whether modern schoolboys are a more contented race I will not undertake to say.

I announced last week my intention to close the subscription in aid of the distressed Mr. Buckstone, as the work which I have been trying to do in this column will be much better done in the future by Sir William Fraser's fund. I acknowledged donations amounting in all to £259 16s. At the request of the family I have forwarded an additional £20 to Mrs. Buckstone, to meet urgent needs (making £40 in all); and I have handed a cheque for the balance, £219 16s., to Sir William Fraser, in augmentation of the "Buckstone Fund" at the Bank of England, Western Branch, Burlington-gardens, S.W. Since doing this I have received four more donations—Mr. Alderman Ellis, £5; John Lear, £2 2s.; C. A. D., £1 1s.; and E. C., 5s. These sums will be paid over to the Fund. Of course I cannot turn money away; still, charitable correspondents would save me much time and trouble by bearing in mind that I have ceased actively to solicit help for Mr. Buckstone.

I venture to hope that, as regards my "obolus" fund, I may now say Liberavi animam. And I will say something else, viz.: Thank you heartily, Ladies and Gentlemen, all round, for your compassionate kindness in this case; and (to quote Rip Van Winkle) here is your health, and all your families', and may they live long and prosper. G. A. S.

ON THE BOULEVARDS.

Pleasant is lounging and sauntering in Paris on a summer evening free from wind and rain, while the small round tables set on the open pavement, in front of popular cafés and restaurants, are thronged with a multitude of inexpensive guests, all bent on the easy enjoyment of a leisure hour, all equally willing to be pleased with themselves and not to disturb each others' pleasure. This is a lesson which London has yet to learn, so far as concerns the behaviour of our people at large in public places of resort; though, since the Crystal Palace was first opened, we have made some progress in the imitation of Continental savoir vivre, and in the virtue of social tolerance. It is rather edifying to watch the gradual unbending of the insular nationality as our beloved countrymen and the ladies of their domestic train become more accustomed to foreign manners, after the experience of a week's sojourn in the French capital. That most respectable English clergyman, with his two daughters sitting calm and upright beside him, has actually called for a petit verre de cognac to ensure the stomachic settlement of his coffee; and his benevolent Pickwickian face, beneath a shovel-hat and gleaming spectacles, looks the image of innocent tranquillity, as though walking home from his Sunday church pulpit. If this party were inclined to air their modest skill in the language by attempting a little talk with the intelligent young ouvrier, a brisk lad in a blouse, who is reading his newspaper at the same table, they might find him quite as good as the average of boys in their village Sunday-school. The next group, however, might prove to be of more questionable character; that smirking gent with the flagrant necktie, fingering his crutched cane as he prates with the dressy girls who lean their elbows on the table and toy with a spoonful of ice-cream, is not at all good style, even in Paris. Sensible and steady is the look of the solitary newspaper-reader to the right hand, with his half-emptied chope of beer, unheeding the chatter of tongues around him. In the left-hand corner we observe a party of military friends, an elderly Zouave, one of the quietest and mildest of old men, with a younger soldier of another corps, and a pretty woman who knows how to smoke a cigarette. There is considerable diversity, the result of social liberty, in the tastes and habits of personal deportment here to be noticed, but with a general tacit agreement not to give or take offence. It is an important step in the way of civilisation to let other people do as they like, so long as they do not injure or annoy their neighbours or proceed in downright insanity to do themselves a fatal mischief. On the Boulevards of Paris, as elsewhere, people do not appear to be always wise and virtuous. But there is seldom a brawl, or any word or gesture of insult, among the mixed company who spend an evening there.

NEW BOOKS.

A good large needle of biographical information and multifarious amusement is to be picked out of the editorial hay contained in the two big volumes devoted to the Life of Charles Lever, by W. J. Fitzpatrick, LL.D., M.R.I.A. (Chapman and Hall); but picking will assuredly have to be done by every reader who is not content to catch occasional gleams of the desired object through a mass of extraneous matter. Fortunately there is an index, which will be found of great assistance in the search after what is necessary to make up a consecutive narrative; and it is simple justice to remark that the superfluous pages contain that which is uncommonly good reading in itself. What is meant is that the work would have been very much improved by condensation and by a more definite method of arrangement. However, it is possible by joining together several independent threads to make a connected biographical line. Charles James Lever, whose "Harry Lorrequer" and other works must have endeared his memory to all who have had the delight of reading them in youth, for which period of life they are, most of them or the best of them, especially adapted, was born, contrary to his own belief, it would appear, in 1806, he having assigned to his birth the date of 1809. His birthplace was Dublin; his father came of "an old Lancashire stock." The boy went to several schools, where he enjoyed the advantage of several severe floggings and acquired thus early "some fame as a story-teller"—that is, be it understood, lest any should mock, as a teller of stories in a good sense. At about sixteen years of age Lever, it seems, entered Trinity College, Dublin, where he was more remarkable for his fun than for his learning, and where he had for "chum" a certain Boyle, who is said to have been the original of everybody's amusing friend, "Frank Webber" in "Charles O'Malley." In 1829 Lever is represented as having attained sufficient proficiency in the medical art to obtain the "charge of an emigrant-ship bound for Quebec." Other travels he accomplished, pursuing his medical studies both abroad and at home; but he nevertheless, it appears, failed to pass the College of Surgeons, in 1831 or thereabouts, though there are records to show that he, in 1831, obtained from Trinity College, Dublin, the degree of Bachelor of Medicine, "capable of enlargement to that of M.D. for a few pounds." At any rate, in 1833, he was holding a medical appointment in Ulster, having previously, in 1832, won success by his treatment of cholera in Clare; and thenceforth, for some years, he led the life of a country doctor. Somewhere between August, 1832, and August, 1833, he married, if not privately, with an absence of the usual publicity, a Miss Kate Baker, a lady to whose excellent influence witness is borne both by himself and others. In 1833 the Dublin University Magazine was started; and that venture owed much of its popularity to Lever's contributions, especially to his "Lorrequer" and his "Charles O'Malley." About 1837 Dr. Lever went into practice at Brussels; and in 1842 he returned to Ireland, relinquishing the medical for the editorial vocation, and assuming the editorship of the Dublin University Magazine. But he found pins in the editor's chair, and in 1845 he was away again to Brussels, to Bonn, and elsewhither. He went to Baden and gambled, keeping open house at Carlsruhe. In 1847 he was at Florence; and in 1853 he "is found living in a quiet cottage called Marola, on the Gulf of Spezzia," all the while novel-writing with wonderful fecundity and general acceptance. In 1854 he revisited Dublin; in 1855 he was back again in Florence; in 1858 he was appointed Vice-Consul at Spezzia; that post he held until its abolition in 1867, when he was promoted to be her Majesty's Consul at Trieste, and he continued in the office until his death, on June 1, 1872. Charles Lever's two great sorrows were the death of his wife, who preceded him, but not by a long interval, to the grave, and the terrible end of his son, who seemed to have adopted views of life similar to those of "the man for Galway," or of the "Irish Dragoon," better known as "Charles O'Malley." Lever was a man of fine parts, great animal spirits, native humour, audacious invention; he was an excellent writer, especially in description and dialogue; he had an immense capacity for enjoyment, without any notion, apparently, of economy, as regards either the natural forces or expenditure of money; and, as was to be expected in the case of an author who lived such a life as his, he was much poorer at his death than many a less popular writer has been. His biography, though not remarkable, is interesting enough, and it is quite exceptional in one gratifying respect; for, though "a great deal has been written on the alleged unhappiness of literary men in their domestic relations," we are expressly informed that "Lever's married life presented, in its felicity, a contrast to that of not a few great contemporaries." The editor makes, once or twice, statements so opposed to what is generally received concerning certain stale matters that one hardly knows whether to consider that he is not a very trustworthy authority in general, or that, on the contrary, it is his privilege to set all the world right. For instance, he attributes the celebrated saying that "the tenth don't dance" to the 10th Foot, instead of the 10th Hussars, which is surely, and for good reasons, the regiment usually connected with the story. And again he says, "With the exception of the short-lived triumph of 'Eclipse' in 1789, no Irish horse—till Harkaway's début in 1840—could win upon the English turf. There seemed to be a conspiracy to taboo all Hibernian horseflesh, &c." How much of this statement is mere misprinting can only be guessed; but, as a matter of fact, Eclipse was born in 1764, died in 1789, and was bred by the Duke of Cumberland, to whom his sire, Marske, belonged; and how Harkaway, who won the Goodwood Cup in 1838 and 1839, at four and five years of age, can be said to have made his "début in 1840," it is not easy to understand.

The great advantage of an index will be seen by a glance at that which is, the reader will be happy to find, appended to the volume entitled Selection from the Correspondence of the late Macvey Napier, Esq., edited by his son, Macvey Napier (Macmillan and Co.), for the name of each correspondent stands out conspicuously ready to be caught by the eye, and the subjects upon which the bearers of the names correspond with the gentleman who may be called their head-centre are carefully indicated. This part of the work must have been exceedingly laborious, and it should be accepted in a spirit of gratitude commensurate with the labour expended. The origin and nature of the correspondence are to be inferred from the following exposition. The late Mr. Macvey Napier, born on April 11, 1776, educated at the Universities of Glasgow and Edinburgh, became, in 1799, a member of the Society of Writers to the Signet, whose Librarian he was appointed in 1805, in which year he wrote his first article in the "Edinburgh Review." Of that famous periodical and of a Supplement to the "Encyclopædia Britannica," as well as of the Encyclopædia itself, he subsequently became editor, succeeding the celebrated Francis Lord Jeffrey in the direction of the "Edinburgh;" and in his double capacity he was necessarily thrown into written communication with eminent literary men, many in number, various in their scope, universal in their reputation, from whose pens flowed nothing which the world would willingly lose. His correspondents included men so widely separated in some respects, in point of their genius and the quality rather than the magnitude of their fame, as Henry Brougham and Charles Dickens, as Dugald Stewart and William Makepeace Thackeray; and the number of those correspondents is to be calculated by the score. It is easy to imagine, then, what charming variety of style is to be met with, what insight is afforded into character, what striking traits, whether of innate dignity or of innate vanity, are unconsciously revealed. It had been a thousand pities if such a correspondence had been hidden from the public. As to the late Lord Macaulay's very frequent letters, it should be mentioned that Mr. Trevelyan has already published some, and perhaps a majority, of them in his "Life of Lord Macaulay," but in a work which was intended, partly at any rate, to illustrate the history of the "Edinburgh Review" during the late Mr. Napier's editorship, Macaulay's letters, so far as they helped towards the illustration, were absolutely necessary, and therefore the volume contains both those which have already appeared in Mr. Trevelyan's book, "besides others which will not be found in it." Some regret will be experienced by every reader upon finding that the late Mr. Napier's letters do not seem to have been preserved by his correspondents with the care he exercised in the preservation of theirs: it would have been very interesting and, no doubt, amusing to study the manner in which he replied to his redoubtable contributors, when they were sore at his employment of the editorial despotism which custom and convenience, rather than right, have established, and whereby an unfortunate contributor may sometimes have to suffer in his tenderest feelings, merely because the despot happens to be temporarily deranged of liver or, according to the vulgar expression, to have "got out of bed on the wrong side," on some particular morning. "I have just received," writes Thackeray, who would be sure to offer an excellent example of a contributor wincing under an editorial infliction, "and acknowledge with many thanks your bankers' bill. From them or from you I shall always be delighted to receive communications of this nature. From your payment I can't but conclude that you reward me not only for labouring, but for being mutilated in your service. I assure you I suffered cruelly by the amputation which you were obliged to inflict upon my poor dear paper. I mourn still . . . for several lovely jokes and promising facetiæ. . . . O to think of my pet passages gone for ever!" The idea of a wit, like a Thackeray or a Sydney Smith, "edited" by a Scotchman who had not undergone the preliminary "surgical operation!" And fancy a Macaulay having to defend his diction against the strictures of a censor "educated at the Universities of Glasgow and Edinburgh!" Such spectacles should render us all, if not more truly humble, more hypocritically resigned, more outwardly patient, less delicately sensitive, a little thicker of skin. "They all do it," should be the contributor's reflection, when he suffers from editorial pruning: "why, a Napier 'edited' Macaulay's English and Thackeray's wit."

The serviceable and engaging series of small volumes called English Men of Letters, published by Macmillan and Co., is making good progress; each volume containing a separate critical and biographical essay upon one of our standard national authors. Its able editor, Mr. John Morley, has just added to the accounts of the eighteenth-century worthies a capital one of Burke, having already dealt with the same subject in two former essays. The present work is, however, substantially new and original, and is quite deserving of a place beside the studies of Johnson, by Mr. Leslie Stephen, Gibbon, by Mr. Cotter Morison, and those of Defoe and Goldsmith. Mr. Morley had shown, in other books of his, a thorough acquaintance with the ideas of Rousseau, Diderot, and other French Revolutionary writers, to whose influence the controversial efforts of Burke were directly opposed. The relation of their social and political doctrines to the position of English affairs in the reign of George III. is the main topic of speculative interest that is here brought in view. That Burke, in common with many other Whigs and Tories of his day, sadly misapprehended the character of the French Revolution will now be generally admitted. He regarded it too superficially, as a movement aiming to produce mere outward changes in the political constitution, and did not appreciate the terrible social evils and the economic disorders, which were the real cause of that violent eruption in the body of the commonwealth. The suppressed virulence of such an inveterate disease could not fail, sooner or later, to break out in a tremendous explosion, and the immediate effect of this was a destructive rage for levelling and effacing the ancient landmarks. Mr. Morley's view of the crisis will meet the approval of a majority of thoughtful readers of modern history, who may have no abstract partiality for a Republican form of government. The personal incidents of Burke's career; his literary and parliamentary labours, triumphs, and defeats; his earnest advocacy of justice to Ireland, justice to America, and justice to India, which deserve the highest praise, are related with skill and judgment, pointing out, on the other hand, serious errors committed by him as well as by Fox in their undiscriminating hostility to Pitt's measures before the French Revolution. It is evident that Burke wanted temper and self-control; and the best part of his public activity was that in which its exercise was subordinated to the counsels of the Whig party under Lord Rockingham's and the Duke of Richmond's guidance. His example, with all the brilliancy of his genius and the nobleness of his spirit, is a signal proof, like others in English political history, that no individual merit, unsupported by the social power attached to wealth and patrician rank, can long secure a commanding position amongst us for a man of originality and mental independence. This is not Mr. Morley's remark, but it will naturally occur to the reader of his interesting sketch of Burke's public life. We observe, among the announced forthcoming volumes of "English Men of Letters," that Mr. Morley is to produce one upon Swift, which may be expected to be as good as any of the series.

A lively and pleasant writer, Mr. H. Baden Pritchard, whose story of "Dangerfield" and descriptions of Continental rambles have been found acceptable reading, contributes Old Charlton, in three volumes, to the novels of the present season. That is the name of a pleasant Kentish village within seven or eight miles of London, and the author dates from "Old Charlton, Kent," as his private abode. But the "Old Charlton" who stands for the hero of this tale, published by Messrs. Sampson Low and Co., is a very worthy fellow, a retired soldier and riding-master, or teacher of gymnastics, whose character is truly original, and an agreeable addition to our acquaintance in the world of fiction. His brave little daughter Bessie is still more agreeable; and their vicissitudes of fortune, related by their friend Graham Geith, in whose person the narrative is conducted from beginning to end, make a story of growing interest. It begins with schoolboy friendships and frank girlish innocence, with rivalries and fights, with harmless scrapes and easy forgiveness, at the little town of Greystones, where Graham is one of the boys of the local public school. All this is shown with startling realism of description, and forms a truthful picture of the manners and behaviour of our schoolboys. The action is thence transferred to a small town in Germany, where Old Charlton, having been deprived of his situation at Greystones, is engaged in managing an equestrian circus, while Bessie has achieved success as a public performer, without losing her feminine modesty and sweetness. A young German of rank, Otto von Rosenheim, and his sister Ida, coming into friendly relations with Mr. Geith and with the Charltons, supply a different source of personal interest. The progress of events is sustained with considerable force of dramatic combination, and the plot is vigorously developed to the pitch of a strong, though simple and unpretentious, social romance. "Old Charlton," in short, is fully equal to "Dangerfield" in the essential qualities of this kind of fiction.

The Brighton annual Exhibition of Modern Pictures in Oil, at the Royal Pavilion Gallery, opened on Friday.

Mr. Alfred Chichele Plowden has been appointed Recorder of Much Wenlock, Salop, in the place of Mr. Thomas Sirrell Pritchard, deceased.

The Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland has appointed Dr. Grimshaw to the office of Registrar-General, rendered vacant by the death of Dr. Burke.

A violent gale was experienced in the north-east of Scotland on Tuesday, and many of the herring-fishing boats were driven from their nets and considerably damaged.

General Sir John Adye, K.C.B., R.A., Governor of the Royal Military Academy, has accepted the presidency of the Woolwich and Plumstead High Schools, designed to promote a public middle-class education in the district.

A Fine-Art Exhibition at Kirkaldy was opened last Monday under the presidency of Sir Coutts-Lindsay, of the Grosvenor Gallery. Several London artists of eminence are represented, and the exhibition, which is much in advance of its predecessors, embraces nearly 700 works of art.

The annual show in connection with the Derbyshire Agricultural and Horticultural Society was opened on Tuesday at Derby. There is a larger number of entries than on any previous year, and the show promises to be the best ever held under the auspices of the society. Prizes to the value of over £900 were given.

Another riot occurred at Lurgan on Monday. The funeral procession of a Roman Catholic was stoned, and for some time the town was in a state of uproar and disorder. Tuesday's Dublin Gazette contained proclamations placing a number of townlands in the county of Down and a large portion of the county of Armagh under the Peace Preservation Act.

The Paris correspondent of the Daily Telegraph reports the marriage of Mdlle. Carlotta Patti with M. Ernest de Munck, which was celebrated on Wednesday at the Eglise de la Trinité, at the end of the Chaussé d'Antin. The families only were present. The bride's witnesses were the Marquis de Caux and M. Gardoni; the bridegroom's, M. Bourdillon and M. Schizzosa, the manager of the great Australian tournée.

To-morrow and on the two following Sundays a list of persons liable to serve as jurymen will be exhibited on the doors of churches, and the ratepayers of sixty years of age and upwards can be relieved from attendance on application to the overseers to remove their names from the list. Unless the removal takes place they will be liable to serve, although beyond the specified age.

The new Convalescent Home recently erected at Meanwood, near Leeds, was opened last Saturday by the Bishop of Ripon, and Miss Beckett, of Somerby Park. The building will accommodate about eighteen children, and is pleasantly situated on the high road between Meanwood and Moortown, having a frontage to the south, east, and west. The building was erected by the late Mr. Moxon, of Headingly, from plans prepared by Mr. John Birch, of John-street, Adelphi.

Colonel Buller received an enthusiastic reception last Tuesday at Crediton, on his way to his ancestral home at Downes. He has received her Majesty's commands to proceed to Balmoral. At a county meeting held at Exeter on Wednesday it was decided to entertain Colonel Buller at a banquet on Oct. 2, when the Duke of Somerset, Lord-Lieutenant of the county, will preside. The proposal to present Colonel Buller with a sword has been abandoned, and a piece of plate will be given instead.—A sword of honour, bought by subscription, will be presented to Brigadier-General Sir Evelyn Wood at a banquet to be given at Chelmsford, on Tuesday, Oct. 14.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications relating to this department of the Paper should be addressed to the Editor, and have the word "Chess" written on the envelope.

W L (Swanmore).—Both letters, with inclosures, received, and we note the amendment of No. 3. In No. 2, 1. Q to B 6th (ch) seems to be a good attack. No. 1 shall appear next week, and the game, if found interesting, shall have due honour.

D A (Dublin).—Thanks for the problem.

J R (Leeds).—"La Stratégie" can be procured from Barthes and Lowell, Great Marlborough-street, London. We do not know the subscription price.

F E P (Dundalk).—Your suggestion for an amendment of No. 1849 has been anticipated.

E N F (Abbey-road).—We perceived an easy way to reconstruction, but, of course, preferred leaving the undertaking in your hands.

J B (Montreal).—There does not appear to be much matter for controversy in the case. The regulations for playing chess, to which the A party appeals, should be interpreted in accordance with the fundamental laws of the game, one of which expressly defines a move to be "the transfer of a man from one square to another" (Praxis, p. 5). The word move, where it occurs in the "regulations," must therefore be held to have that signification, and A assumes the whole argument in attaching a different meaning to it. The act of lifting a Rook and replacing it on the same square is not a move within the meaning of either law or regulation, but B, having touched the piece, can be required to move it. Thanks for the programme of the meeting. We shall be glad to receive an account of the proceedings and some of the games.

Toz (Manchester).—A very good idea; we have pleasure in directing attention to it.

A DE R (Paris).—Your letter has been overlooked, but we have replied through the post. Only one copy of La Revue has come to hand for many weeks past.

D W K (Birmingham).—Stamma played a match with Philidor, but not on even terms. He received the odds of scoring the drawn games, and the result was:—Philidor, 10; Stamma, 2. His "Essay on the Game of Chess" is scarce, but worthless, save for the hundred end games, and these have all been reprinted. You will find them in Alexandre's "Beauties of Chess."

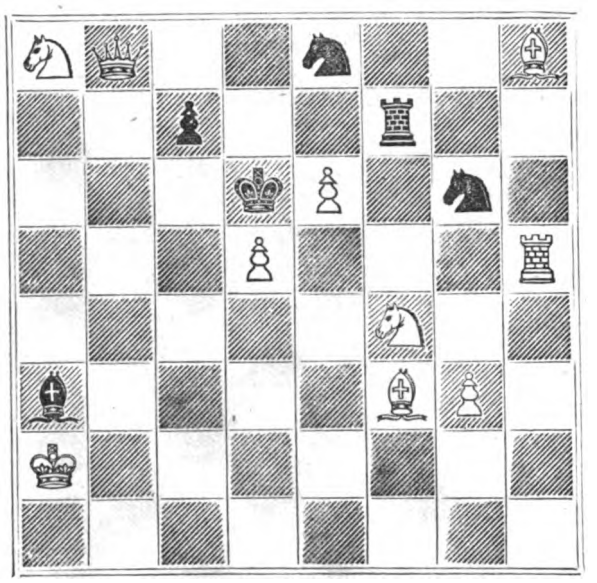
SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 1852.



WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Q to B 8th	B takes R*
2. Q takes P (ch)	K takes Q (dis. ch)
3. Kt to Q 5th (double ch and mate).

* If Black play 1. B to Q 7th, White continues with 2. R takes Q (ch), and mates next move.

PROBLEM No. 1855.

By J. A. TAYLOR, Jamaica.

BLACK.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

A Game played in the Match between Miss RUDGE and Mr. THOROLD, the latter yielding the odds of the Knight. Remove White's Q Kt.

(Giuoco Piano.)

WHITE (Mr. T.)	BLACK (Miss R.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th
2. Kt to K B 3rd	Kt to Q B 3rd
3. B to B 4th	Kt to B 3rd
4. P to Q 3rd	B to B 4th
5. P to Q B 3rd	Q to K 2nd

There is nothing to be gained by departing from the recognised lines of this well-worn opening, and, therefore, Black would have done better by playing 5. P to Q 3rd. The Queen now occupies a square that prevents the Q Kt being brought over to the King's side of the board.

6. Kt to Kt 5th	Castles
7. P to Q R 3rd	P to Q 3rd
8. P to K B 3rd	P to K R 3rd
9. P to K R 4th	P takes Kt

Too hazardous. Black might have simplified the game here by playing 9. B to K 3rd.

10. P takes P	Kt to K R 2nd
11. P to K B 4th	P to K Kt 3rd
12. P to B 5th	B to K 3rd

If 12. B takes K B P, then follows 13. P takes B; and if 13. P to K 5th, then 14. P to Q 4th.

13. Q to Kt 4th	B takes B
14. R takes Kt

Well played!

14.	P to K B 3rd

The Queen is lost anyhow; for, should Black now play 14. K takes R, White's answer is 15. P to B 6th, and wins in a few moves.

15. R takes Q	Kt takes R
16. P takes B	K to Kt 2nd
17. P takes P (ch)	K takes P
18. B to Kt 5th (ch)	K to B 2nd
19. B takes Kt	K takes B
20. Q takes P	R to B 3rd
21. Q to K Kt 5th	K to B 2nd
22. P to Q Kt 4th	B to Kt 3rd
23. P to B 5th

White has a winning game, and this manœuvre, forcing a road for the operation of the Q R, settles the matter.

23.	P takes P
24. Castles	R to K sq
25. R to Q 7th (ch)	R to K 2nd
26. R takes R (ch)	K takes R
27. Q to Kt 7th (ch)	R to B 2nd
28. Q takes P (ch), and wins.

Played at the Artists' Club, Moscow.

(Allgaier Gambit.)

WHITE (Mr. Maude).	BLACK (Mr. A.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th
2. P to K B 4th	P takes P
3. Kt to K B 3rd	P to K Kt 4th
4. P to K R 4th	P to Kt 5th
5. Kt to Kt 5th	P to K R 3rd
6. Kt takes P	K takes Kt
7. B to B 4th (ch)	P to Q 4th
8. B takes P (ch)	K to K sq
9. P to Q 4th	P to B 6th
10. Castles	B to K 2nd
11. P takes P	P to Kt 6th
12. P to K B 4th

So far the game is all "bookish theoric," but Black's next move is inferior to 12. P to R 4th.

12.	Kt to K B 3rd
13. B to Kt 3rd

Better than 13. P to B 5th, although that move, if Black took the Bishop, would have given the defence much trouble.

13.	B to K Kt 5th
14. Q to Q 3rd	Kt to K R 4th

14. Q to Q 2nd, preparing to post the Bishop at K B 4th on the advance of the K P is his only chance at this juncture.

15. P to K 5th	K to B sq
16. Q to Kt 6th	Q takes P (ch)
17. K to Kt 2nd	B to R 6th (ch)
18. K takes B	Q to Q 2nd (ch)
19. P to B 5th	Q to K sq
20. B takes P (ch)	R takes B
21. Q to Kt 8th. Mate.

The Chessplayers' Chronicle for September opens with a continuation of the review of Mr. Gossip's "Theory of the Openings," the concluding part of which is promised for next month. There follows a game selected from the Vienna tournament, with notes by Professor Wayte, and several others from various sources, annotated by the editor. These, supplemented by the usual monthly record of chess news and ten problems upon diagrams, make up an interesting number, to which the review is decidedly the cleverest contribution.

The Huddersfield College Magazine has a review of Herr Klett's book of problems; an article on the late Paris problem tourney, illustrated by Mr. Finlinson's prize set in that competition; besides the news of the month, and a clever anagrammatic rhapsody, called "The Caliph's Dream," by Mr. Miles. A problem tourney is announced, in which the pieces to be employed in composition are fixed by the donor of the prizes.

A chess problem and game recorder, published by T. H. Hopwood, 134, Deansgate, Manchester, is a novelty of its kind, and, save for the harmless (and unnecessary) eccentricity of designating a Knight a "Springer," will be universally recognised as of valuable assistance to match-players and problem-makers.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated Feb. 11, 1874) of the Right Hon. Frances Elizabeth Anne, Dowager Countess Waldegrave, who died on July 5 last at No. 7, Carlton-gardens, Pall-mall, was proved on the 25th ult. by her husband, the Right Hon. Chichester Samuel, Baron Carlingford, the sole executor therein named, limited to all such personal estate as she had a right to appoint or dispose of, the personalty being sworn under £70,000. The testatrix gives all her interest in the Rectory or parsonage of Keyingham, Yorkshire, to trustees to raise thereout £1000, which is to be paid to her general estate, and subject thereto upon trust to go with the Nuneham Courtenay estate, Oxfordshire. Numerous annuities are charged upon her several estates in favour of relatives, friends, and servants, and among others £500 per annum for life to Frederick George Paget Seymour; £300 per annum for life to her brother Augustus Braham; £600 per annum each for their respective lives to her brothers Charles Bampfield Braham, and Ward Soane Braham; and £500 per annum for life to Miss Constance Esther Rosa Cippoletti Braham, and an additional £500 per annum on the death of either of her (testatrix's) brothers Charles or Ward—All the manors, messuages, advowsons, mines, minerals, and other real or personal estate which she has power to appoint under the settlement executed on her marriage with George Edward, seventh Earl Waldegrave, or under his will, including her estate at Strawberry Hill, Twickenham; Navestock Manor, Essex; and in Somersetshire; and also her property known as The Priory, Chewton Mendip, in the latter county, the testatrix devises to the use of her husband, Lord Carlingford, for life, with remainder to William Frederick, Earl Waldegrave, for life, with remainder to his first and other sons severally and successively, according to seniority of age and priority of birth in tail male. The family pictures, works of art, the snuffbox presented to an ancestor of Earl Waldegrave by Frederick the Great, King of Prussia, and generally all the furniture and effects at Strawberry Hill, Dudbrook House, and The Priory are to go with the estates. The property at Twickenham belonging to her other than the Strawberry Hill estate is to go as her husband shall appoint; and she also leaves him her interest in the lease of the house in Carlton-gardens, with the furniture, pictures, plate, and effects, horses and carriages, and all her jewellery. To Lord Norreys she gives certain furniture and effects which formerly belonged to his grandfather, George Granville Harcourt, and all her books in the library at Carlton-gardens she has power to dispose of. In accordance with the wish of her late husband, George Granville Harcourt, the testatrix bequeaths £1000 to the Rector or Vicar and Churchwardens of Wytham, Oxford, upon trust to pay the dividends towards the salary of the governess or schoolmistress of the school founded by the late Countess of Abingdon so long as the children are taught in the tenets of the Church of England. The portrait of Maria, Duchess of Gloucester, by Sir Joshua Reynolds, she gives to the Duc d'Aumale. There are many other bequests, and the residue of her personal estate she leaves upon trust to pay off any incumbrances on her estates, and then to be held upon trusts corresponding as nearly as possible with the uses declared of the settled estates.

The will (dated July 8, 1869) with two codicils (dated Dec. 11, 1873, and July 5, 1875) of Miss Emma Tylney Long, late of Madehurst Lodge, near Arundel, Sussex, who died on July 16 last, was proved on the 21st ult. by Lionel Skipwith and Frederick George Davidson, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £180,000. Besides numerous legacies and annuities to executors, friends, and servants, we may note the bequest of £100 each to the Friend of the Clergy Corporation, 4, St. Martin's-place, Trafalgar-square, the Royal General Annuity Society, 11, Poultry, the City of London General Pension Society, 68, Fleet-street, the British Systematic Beneficence Society, 8, Old Jewry, the Royal Asylum of St. Ann's Society, Streatham-hill, the Pastoral Aid Society, the Society for Promoting the Employment of Additional Curates in Populous Places, and the Sussex County Hospital. The testatrix gives the residue of her real and personal estate upon trust for her sister, Miss Dorothy Tylney Long for life, and then for her niece, Lady Victoria Long Wellesley.

MUSIC.

THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL.

Our last week's record of this great celebration necessarily included detailed notices of the first two performances only — those of Tuesday morning and evening. On the following Wednesday morning, Rossini's "Moses in Egypt" was given, as revived by the Sacred Harmonic Society—and performed a second time last year—with English text adapted by Mr. Arthur Matthison, and with some of the principal vocalists the same as on those occasions. These were:—Madame Sherrington, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. Cummings, Mr. Santley, Herr Henschel, and Mr. Bridson; the other principal soloists at Birmingham having been Madame Trebelli and Miss A. Williams. The rich and florid music of Rossini—solo and choral—was rendered with great effect, and had almost the interest of novelty to a Birmingham audience. The concert of Wednesday evening included fine orchestral performances of Beethoven's symphony in A (No. 7), and a concert-overture by Dr. C. S. Heap; the latter being a clever piece of instrumental writing, but not possessing any originality or individuality. Another specialty at this concert was the admirable singing of the chorus in Mr. A. R. Gaul's pleasing part-song, "The Silent Land," conducted by Mr. Stockley. The remainder of the programme consisted of familiar pieces rendered by the principal vocalists.

On Thursday week "The Messiah" was performed, and again the exceptionally fine chorus-singing was a special feature, the soprano, contralto, and bass solos having been well rendered by Miss A. Williams, Madame Trebelli, and Herr Henschel in the first part, and Madame Sherrington, Madame Patey, and Mr. Santley in the second and third parts—Mr. Joseph Maas having sung all the tenor solo music of the oratorio with excellent qualities of voice and style.

Thursday evening's concert brought forward M. Saint-Saëns's new cantata "The Lyre and Harp." This (which was composed expressly for the festival) is a setting of Victor Hugo's ode; the English text having been adapted by Messrs. Sydney M. Samuel and James Donzel. The cantata is divided into two parts, each of moderate length, and both containing several pieces that proved effective in performance—notwithstanding the absence of any distinctive originality or individuality of character. Frequent reflections of the style of Richard Wagner would indicate in this—as in other works by M. Saint-Saëns—that the composer has been strongly influenced by the music of that innovative master. This is evidenced in several instances, especially in the repeated use of the violins in tremolando chords, and the recurrence of special phrases as identifying and associating characteristic passages of the poem. Although two or three of the pieces for solo voices pleased much, it is rather in the music of combination—for chorus and orchestra—that the composer's best powers are manifested. The numbers of the former that produced the most impression were the graceful duet (with chorus) "Love's God from Olympus to Hades is reigning," for soprano and contralto; that which follows, "Hate seethes below," for contralto and tenor; and the spirited baritone air, "Be glad." The solo music had every justice done to it by Mesdames Sherrington and Patey, Mr. Cummings, and Mr. Santley. The full concerted pieces that produced the best impression were the choruses, "Sleep, Apollo's fair son," "Sing on, Jupiter reigns" (this including solos for the principal vocalists), the quartet and chorus, "Sustain thy brother," and the concluding choral movement, "Silent thy youthful bard." The work was favourably received, and the composer, who conducted it, was much applauded. The cantata was preceded and followed by a miscellaneous selection.

The Friday morning's performances opened with Cherubini's sublime Requiem in C minor—one of the grandest of his many church compositions. This work, which is entirely choral and orchestral, was first produced, on the anniversary of the death of Louis XVI., at the Abbey Church of St. Denis, in 1817. With the exception of its performance by the Sacred Harmonic Society—many years ago—it has been almost ignored in this country; and its revival formed an interesting feature of the Birmingham Festival. It was, on the whole, finely rendered, the choristers having shown but slight signs of fatigue in very few instances. Schubert's graceful and melodious "Salve Regina" (op. 47) followed, the soprano solo, of which it consists entirely (with orchestral accompaniment), having been charmingly sung by Madame Gerster. After this came a very effective offertorium, "Date Sonitum," composed by Sir Michael Costa, for baritone solo, chorus, and orchestra. It is in the florid Italian style—pleasingly melodious in the solo part, and effectively written in the choral and orchestral portions. With Mr. Santley as soloist, associated with the fine chorus and band assembled here, the piece had every due advantage. The morning's performance closed with Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," one of his grandest sacred works, and—although in a less degree than his "Elijah"—especially associated with Birmingham, where its first performance in England took place, at the Festival of 1840. It was admirably rendered on the occasion now referred to; when the three grand symphonic movements—preceding the vocal portion—were finely played by the orchestra, the chorus-singing having been as fresh as on the earlier days of the Festival, and the solos worthily rendered by Mesdames Sherrington and Trebelli and Mr. E. Lloyd. The duet for the two former (with chorus), "I waited for the Lord," was encored.

The festival came to a close, on the Friday evening, with a grand performance of Handel's finest choral work, "Israel in Egypt," in which the chorus-singing was again remarkable for excellence. The soloists were Madame Sherrington, Miss A. Williams, Madame Patey, Mr. Vernon Rigby, Herr Henschel, and Mr. Bridson. As usual, the two most effective pieces for solo voices were the arduous tenor air, "The enemy said," and the duet for two basses, "The Lord is a Man of War." In the former Mr. Rigby produced a great impression by his good declamatory singing. In the duet Mr. Bridson was a highly efficient second to Herr Henschel. As at previous performances of the week, Mr. Stimpson presided at the organ. With the National Anthem, finely sung by the chorus, and an enthusiastic ovation to Sir Michael Costa, the conductor, the Birmingham Festival of 1879 came to a close.

As at many past festivals, the zealous and disinterested activity of Mr. R. Peyton as orchestral steward has exercised a valuable influence on the musical arrangements, the business details having also again been distinguished by admirable management, combined with extreme courtesy on the part of all concerned therein.

THE HEREFORD FESTIVAL.

The triennial meeting of the choirs of Gloucester, Worcester, and Hereford—held in yearly alternation at each place—will begin on Tuesday next, this being the 156th celebration of the kind. There is no absolute novelty to be produced, but the works to be performed are varied in character and mostly of high interest.

The solo vocalists engaged are Madame Albani, Misses E. Thursby and A. Williams, Mesdames Patey and Enriquez, Miss de Fonblanque, Mr. Cummings, Mr. B. M'Guckin, Mr. Santley, and Mr. Thurley Beale.

The orchestra—headed by Mr. H. Weist Hill and Mr. H. C. Cooper, as principal first violins—is complete in every department. The chorus will be on a proportionate scale, comprising the choirs of the three cathedrals, and reinforcements from Bradford, Durham, Windsor, and elsewhere.

According to long previous custom at these festivals, the organist of the cathedral in which the celebration is held acts as conductor of the performances. In this case it is Mr. Langdon Colbourne, who succeeded the late Mr. Townshend Smith about two years ago. Mr. Done, of Worcester Cathedral, will officiate as organist, and Mr. C. H. Lloyd, organist of Gloucester Cathedral, will act as pianoforte accompanyist at the evening concert, held in the Shirehall, and as organist at the Wednesday evening performances in the cathedral.

The Festival will be opened on Tuesday morning by a special service in the cathedral, with a sermon appropriate to the occasion to be preached by the Rev. Canon Sidney Lidderdale Smith, the united choirs combining in the rendering of the service music. At this and the other morning services Mr. C. H. Lloyd will preside at the organ. At one in the afternoon the first of the performances will take place, "Elijah" being the work selected.

Wednesday morning's performances, in the cathedral, will consist of Purcell's "Te Deum" in D, portions of Bach's "Christmas Oratorio," Handel's overture to "Esther," Spohr's 84th Psalm, Mozart's chorus "Pignus futuræ," and Handel's Coronation anthem, "Zadoc the Priest." On Wednesday evening Mendelssohn's 95th Psalm and his hymn, "Hear my prayer," and Rossini's "Stabat Mater," will be given, also in the cathedral, where a selection from Mr. Arthur Sullivan's oratorio, "The Light of the World," and the whole of Haydn's "Imperial Mass" will be performed on Thursday morning—the final sacred performance consisting of "The Messiah," on Friday morning. Miscellaneous evening concerts, vocal and orchestral, will take place on Tuesday and Thursday in the Shirehall, where a supplemental chamber concert will be given on Friday evening.

Fresh interest has been given to the Covent Garden Promenade Concerts by the appearance of Madame Annette Essipoff, the eminent Russian pianist. This lady played Beethoven's concerto in E flat on Saturday evening, with fine effect. On the same occasion Mdlle. Beumer sang, with much success, the scena from the first act of "La Traviata;" other vocal performances having been contributed by Madame Antoinette Sterling, Mr. M'Guckin, and Mr. Maybrick. The programme of Monday's concert included the fourth of Beethoven's symphonies (in B flat), and Chopin's pianoforte concerto in F minor, with Madame Essipoff as pianist.

The English version of Ambroise Thomas's opera, "Mignon," performed by the Carl Rosa Opera Company, has been most favourably noticed by the press of Dublin, Liverpool, and Edinburgh. The libretto has been adapted by Mr. Arthur Matthison, and the leading characters have been impersonated by Miss Julia Gaylord, Miss Georgina Burns, Miss Yorke, Mr. Maas, Mr. Crotty, and Mr. Lyall.

The circumstances arising out of the "Goffin case" have induced the Lords of the Committee of Council on Education to issue a circular calling the attention of local committees of science and art schools to the fact that the duties undertaken by them are a serious reality, and involve grave responsibility, public money being paid on the faith of their certificate that it has been properly earned.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Though the weather on the last day at York was pleasant enough overhead, the course was in a fearful condition, and it is not surprising that the fielders had all the best of the betting. Lanjaron and Marc Antony were the pick of the public performers in the Gimcrack Stakes; but backers seemed to fancy nothing but Duke of Cumberland, a "dark" youngster by George Frederick—Couleur de Rose. Though a fine, well-grown colt, he inherits the heavy shoulders which detracted so much from the appearance of his sire; still he evidently possesses the gift of going, and landed Lord Rosebery's colours very easily. Teviotdale, who was trying to give him 9 lb., was second, so we must see him out again in better company before we can form much opinion of his class. After his gallant performance of the previous day, Mr. Gretton thought that Isonomy deserved a rest, and withdrew him from the York Cup, which brought out a very smart quartette—Jannette, Roehampton, Touchet, and Reconciliation. It was known that the last mentioned, being a roarer, could not possibly stay a mile and a half through such deep ground; but all the others were heavily supported, Jannette, who was said to have returned to her best form, being backed against the field. She ran very indifferently, however, and, when it came to racing, Touchet had no chance with Roehampton, who has improved out of all knowledge since the beginning of the season, and undoubtedly ought to have won the Northumberland Plate. We were a little surprised that it was decided to run Wheel of Fortune a second time during the week and, partly owing to the poor figure cut by Jannette and partly to the disquieting rumours afloat concerning the little mare herself, the fielding against her for the Great Yorkshire Stakes was very strong. This was the more ominous from the fact that she was opposed by nothing that appeared capable of extending her, for Visconti is still a maiden, Ruperra had not won a race for upwards of twelve months, Maccaronea, who was at one time much thought of, had notoriously been tried and found wanting, and Rycerske is very moderate indeed. Maccaronea was beaten before they had gone half a mile, Visconti was in hopeless trouble at the last turn, and the favourite appeared about to win just as she liked. Ruperra, however, stuck closely to her, and when Archer asked her for an extra effort, she would not answer, and sustained her first defeat amidst the most intense excitement. Famous as this race is for surprises, the one of last week is perhaps the most remarkable of all. We will not attempt to explain it, but should Wheel of Fortune do a few good gallops before Wednesday next, precedents are all in favour of her entering a successful appeal against the York verdict on Doncaster town moor. In the Queen's Plate, Mycenæ upset a hot favourite in Melton, and this performance redounded greatly to the credit of Robbie Burns. The last race of the day went to Napsbury, who effected such a surprise on the Wednesday, and we fancy that this half brother to Mandrake, Agility, and Apology will prove to be worthy of his illustrious relatives.

The Scarborough Meeting, which wound up the week, proved very successful, but we may pass it over with the remark that the executive would do well to exercise more care in excluding welshers and thieves of every description from the ring. Warwick and Richmond are the chief meetings of the present week, and at the time of writing nothing has occurred worthy of comment.

We are indebted to the Sportsman for the following list of probable starters and jockeys for the St. Leger on Wednesday next:—

Sir Bevis	T. Cannon.
Wheel of Fortune	F. Archer.
Ruperra	C. Wood.
Robbie Burns	J. Snowden.
Rayon d'Or	J. Goater.
Zut	J. Morris.
Salteador	Glover or Hunter.
Exeter	Custance.
Alchemist	Rossiter.
Visconti	Constable.
Muley Edris	Morgan.
Palmbearer	Osborne.
Gilderoy or Lansdown ...	Fordham.

Of course, the defeat of Wheel of Fortune at York has completely altered the complexion of the race, and half a dozen animals are now backed in the most spirited fashion. With Lord Falmouth's wonderful filly fit and well at the post, it would be useless to consider the chances of anything else in the race; but, putting her on one side, the race would be very open, as strong arguments can be adduced in favour of Sir Bevys, Ruperra, Rayon d'Or, Zut, Robbie Burns, or Salteador, and the success of any one of them could not be altogether regarded as a surprise.

Last week witnessed the wind-up of the cricket season proper, and a very melancholy wind up it was, as nearly every match of importance ended in a draw, owing to the frightful weather. Daft and his team of professional cricketers sailed for America on the Thursday. A team of Irish amateurs are also on their way out; and it seems probable that the visiting teams will play one or more matches during their trip.

Another six-days' bicycle match is in course of decision at the Agricultural Hall. Waller of Newcastle, the long-distance champion, has held the lead almost from the start, and appears certain to place all previous records far in the shade. We shall give the result next week.

Monday being Sept. 1, partridge shooting commenced throughout the country. The weather was very fair, but owing to the backward season the operations of sportsmen were much delayed.

A match was rowed over the Tyne championship course on Monday afternoon between J. M. Feeley, of Barrow-in-Furness, and Joseph Kempster, of Sunderland, for £100 a side, and was decided in favour of Kempster.

TESTIMONIALS.

THOMAS FAIRBANK, M.D., of Windsor, referring to Anti-Fat in the "British Medical Journal" of June 7, 1879, says:—
"I gave some of this extract (Fucus Vesiculosus) to a very corpulent lady, who in three months lost three stones in weight without any change of diet. Since then I have frequently given it for reducing weight, depending on the accumulation of adipose tissue, and have never found it fail. I may state that a patient who has been lately taking it as an anti-fat, and who always suffered very much from rheumatic pains about the body, has been entirely free from such trouble while she has been taking the extract, a fact which she quite independently noted."

EDWARD PARRETT, Esq., Chemist, of Market-square, Winslow, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 12, 1879:—
"One lady to whom I have sold Allan's Anti-Fat has decreased 9lb. in four weeks."

THOMAS NEWBOULD, Esq., Chemist, of Bradford, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 11, 1879:—
"The gentleman for whom I obtained four bottles of Allan's Anti-Fat has derived great benefit from the same, and has recommended it to a friend. Please send me one dozen at once."

C. J. ABELASTER, Esq., Chemist, of Birmingham, writes, under date of June 4, 1879:—
"Have just received a capital account of the effects of Anti-Fat in reducing corpulency."

"22, Redcliffe-street, South Kensington, S.W., June 2, 1879.
"To the Proprietors of Allan's Anti-Fat.
"Gentlemen,—I have tried your wonderful medicine Anti-Fat both in America and this country. Through its use I can thin down at command, closing on an average five pounds per week.—Yours respectfully, "HARRY BRAHAM."

T. L. REEVE, Esq., of Birmingham, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of July 1, 1879:—
"A gentleman having used one dozen bottles of Allan's Anti-Fat, reports a satisfactory reduction."

J. A. STEWARD, Esq., of Worcester, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 18, 1879:—
"Three bottles of Anti-Fat have produced a wonderful effect."

HERT F. ARNOTT, of the Elbe, Prussia, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of July 15, 1879:—
"I have much pleasure to inform you that by taking six bottles of your Allan's Anti-Fat I am ten pounds lighter."

THE PHYSICAL BASIS OF LIFE. GOOD FOOD.
HOW to assimilate or enjoy good food, that would otherwise cause constipation, bilious headache, disordered stomach, and other disasters, use ENO'S FRUIT SALT; being a genuine product of nature, it is a true or natural way of preserving and restoring health. It removes effete matter or poison from the blood, thus preventing and throwing off fevers, boils, and other morbid conditions of the blood. On that account you cannot overstate its great value in keeping the blood pure and free from disease; without such a simple precaution the jeopardy of life is immensely increased. 4s. 6d.

"ROUND THE WORLD IN SIX MONTHS."
By Lieutenant-Colonel E. S. BRIDGES, Grenadier Guards. In a list of what to take with you is given ENO'S FRUIT SALT. See page 298.

DON'T go to Sea without a Bottle of ENO'S FRUIT SALT.

ENO'S FRUIT SALT.
"From a Town in British Guiana, South America, Dec. 5, 1878.
"J. C. Eno, Esq., London.
"Sir,—After two years' trial of your excellent FRUIT SALT, I can safely say that it has saved me much misery from colonial fevers, indigestion, and impaired appetite, to which I have been subject during eleven years' residence in the tropics.
"It is invaluable to travellers as a preventive of seasickness, and a relief from the other ailments of life aboard ship; and, for myself, I would as soon think of going a voyage without my tooth-brush as my bottle of FRUIT SALT. With ordinary care, it does not get hard and caked, as other effervescent preparations do in warm and humid climates, and this is greatly in its favour.
"I am, Sir, yours respectfully, "W. J. B."

"SUCCESS IN LIFE."—A new invention is brought before the public, and commands success. A score of ABOMINABLE IMITATIONS are immediately introduced by the unscrupulous, who, in copying the original closely enough to deceive the public, and yet not so exactly as to infringe upon legal rights, exercise an ingenuity that employed in an original channel could not fail to secure reputation and profit.—ADAMS. CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see the capsule is marked "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without it you have been imposed on by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists. Price 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. Prepared only at ENO'S FRUIT SALT WORKS, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. Eno's Patent.

HENRY GLAVE'S VELVETEENS.
For many years we have sold very large quantities of Velveteens, both Black and Colours, and with rarely ever hearing of a complaint from our numerous Customers. For the coming Autumn and Winter trade, our Velveteens will be found superior to any we have hitherto shown, both in richness of dye and perfection of finish, and they are certainly more moderate in price. We wish to call especial attention to the following choice Goods:—
THE JET OR RAVEN-BLACK VELVETEEN.
A very handsome and popular fabric, which is evinced by the fact that it has maintained an unchallenged superiority for the last fourteen years. It is a true black, and has the merit of matching well with blacks of all other fabrics.
THE ROYAL BLUE-BLACK VELVETEEN
Is an exact imitation of the shade now commonly dyed in the best Silk Velvet; and in good qualities, while new and not pressed, it is almost impossible for the eye to distinguish the one from the other. Another important feature of this Velveteen is the long time it keeps its original colour, never turning brown.
THE LOUIS VELVETEEN,
in texture, appearance, and durability, bears the closest resemblance to the best Lyons Silk Velvet. It is a very close and admirably-wearing material, with a lustrous silky surface, draping richly and softly, and the brilliant blue light on the folds cannot be surpassed by the best Silk Velvet.
A Dress of any of the above materials would be a most elegant and useful addition to any Lady's Wardrobe, successfully representing a Silk Velvet of more than four times the cost.
We have COLOURED VELVETEENS in the Newest French Tints, and very pretty Velveteens, both Brocaded and Striped, in Black and Colours.
Orders by post receive strict attention; and Ladies writing for Patterns are requested to state which Black they prefer.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER.

Happy Days! There is something of regret and gloom in the first appearance of grey hairs; our prospects are often blighted by their premature appearance. Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER happily affords a safe and sure means for restoring hem again to the freshness and beauty of youth. Mrs. S. A ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER is no new low-priced article..

It is the old-established standard and reliable article known and spoken most highly of in every civilised country. Every good thing for the hair that the most scientific men of the Old and New World can suggest are combined in Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER. It requires only a few applications to restore grey hair to its youthful colour and lustrous beauty, and induce luxuriant growth, and its occasional use is all that is needed to preserve it in its highest perfection and beauty. Dandriff is quickly and permanently removed. Sold by all Chemists and Perfumers.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER.

There are two special qualities which determine and fix the superiority and excellence of Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER:—First—Its prompt, quick action, and the new growth, life, and vigour that it is sure to give to the hair never failing by a few applications TO RESTORE GREY OR WHITE HAIR TO ITS YOUTHFUL COLOUR, imparting to the hair a delightful aroma, fresh, delicate, and unchangeable in any climate. Second—Its easy application without any previous preparation of the hair; without that sticky and disagreeable sulphur odour found and complained of in other preparations. It never stains the skin or linen. It retains the hair in any desired position, and is cooling and cleansing to the scalp.

FLORAL BELL,
FRAGRANT ELIXIR OR
LIQUID DENTIFRICE.

The admiration of the world, "THE FLORAL BELL FRAGRANT ELIXIR or LIQUID DENTIFRICE." Language fails to give expression to the beauty or the utility of a beautiful set of white teeth. With no other charm the possessor may well feel proud. Dentists, chemists, and physicians all recommend and use the FLORAL BELL FRAGRANT ELIXIR or LIQUID DENTIFRICE. It is truly unequalled for cleansing, preserving, and beautifying the teeth, giving them a pearl-like whiteness and hardening the gums. It removes all tartar hardens the enamel, arrests decay, and imparts to the breath at all times a most delightful fragrance.

A few drops on the brush night and morning is all sufficient. Tooth pastes and powders are discarded after a trial of FLORAL BELL FRAGRANT ELIXIR or LIQUID DENTIFRICE. It is purely vegetable, which may account for the absence of froth in your mouth during its use. A chemical that produces froth may be necessary in soap to cleanse the skin, but all chemicals are certain destruction to the teeth. The enormous and constantly increasing sale for this article enables the proprietor to offer it at the very low price of Two Shillings and Sixpence in large Bottles. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers. Wholesale Depôt, 114 and 116, Southampton-row, London.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 1879.

Distressing news from Cabul! The Indian Mission to that city, with Major Sir Louis Cavagnari at its head, has been brought to a tragical close. The information of the main fact which has reached this country is beyond all doubt. The details are somewhat meagre, and are never likely to present a complete account of the affair. So far as can be ascertained, two Afghan regiments, from Herat, stationed at Cabul, by order of Yakoob Khan, became mutinous for want of pay. The populace of the city, stimulated probably by the Mohammedan Fast, which they were then observing, yielded to that fanatical hatred to foreigners which they are well known to entertain, and, fraternising with the rebellious troops, clamoured for an immediate attack upon the Residency. The Building was too conveniently at hand. It was built chiefly of wood, which the summer sun had converted into a most easily combustible material. A few hours' struggle sufficed to accomplish the will of the incontrollable mob. The door of the Residency was set fire to in order to gain an entrance. The place itself was speedily ablaze. The members of the Mission, with the small Escort, rather of honour than of safety, associated with them, perished to a man, not, however, before they had inflicted serious loss upon their assailants. Nine Sowars, absent for the day on a grass-cutting expedition, seeing on their return the Residency in flames, managed to elude the raging populace and ultimately to find their way to the new Indian Frontier. The misdeed of blood and fire was otherwise awfully complete, and for a second time within living memory the intolerant passions of the Afghan population at Cabul have been fatally illustrated. History has in this case repeated itself.

What is the political significance of this terrible event? What does it teach us? It seems but yesterday when the Treaty of Gundamuk was signed, when peace was established with the Ameer of Afghanistan, the policy of the Indian Government was triumphant, and when officers and men received, in exchange for the labours and perils they had undergone, the thanks of the Imperial Parliament. The British people took to themselves such comfort as they could from the consideration that the Afghan War, at least, had come to an end, and that the main objects at which it aimed had been realised. The "Scientific Frontier," giving us command of the three Passes through Afghanistan to India, had been gained at a comparatively trifling cost, and a British Resident, authorised to control the foreign relations of the Ameer, had been imposed upon the Sovereign of the country. Has Yakoob Khan played us false? His race, we know, is treacherous; but there is nothing to prove that the massacre which we all bewail was a premeditated act in any sense, much less that he was privy to and connived at it. There are no traces visible as yet of his hand in the sudden and dreadful conflict. He sent the Commander-in-Chief of his army to bring the excited mutineers to reason, who, in discharge of that trust, was unhorsed, stoned, and wounded, probably to death. He then sent his own son on the same errand of interposition, but the errand was bootless. He dispatched tidings of the affair immediately through one of the Frontier Officers to Lord Lytton, and represented himself, in forcible terms, as exposed to almost as imminent a danger as his adopted friends. Yakoob Khan appears to have been weak rather than treacherous. The émeute could do him no service. It took place at the wrong time of the year for dealing a heavy blow upon British Power in Afghanistan. But its meaning is not far to seek. It indicates the latent but unquenchable determination of the Cabulees not tamely to endure Foreign dominion in what guise soever it may be fashioned.

What now is to be done? Of course, the outrage will be quickly avenged. Indeed, the avenger may be said to be already on his way to the scene of its perpetration. But when Cabul has been occupied, and punishment has been meted out, as far as possible, to the guilty, what is to come next? Are we to overrun and ultimately annex to our Indian Empire the whole country of Afghanistan? Are we to take up a permanent position in its capital? Are we, in fact, to take into our own hands the internal administration of its affairs, and virtually, if not ostensibly, to adopt the policy of annexation. It is calculated that this would require a permanent addition of 30,000 men to the Army of India, and entail an annual cost to her Exchequer of three and a half millions sterling. It is not to be thought of. We should imagine it would hardly even be proposed by any responsible adviser of the Crown. No Indian Government which had not bidden an eternal adieu to forethought and prudence could be found to carry out so reckless and dangerous a scheme. That we shall keep our "Scientific Frontier" is likely enough, though, whether it will prove to be an advantage or an embarrassment to our rule in India, will probably admit of endless discussion. But in what international relation India is henceforth to stand to the Government of Afghanistan is a problem which we must now solve afresh. It is clear that the plan of maintaining an Embassy at Cabul will have to undergo a searching review. We cannot repeatedly expose valuable lives to swift and almost certain destruction. It is questionable whether, if we did, the political information or influence we might thereby gain would be worth the cost at which it would be purchased. The people of the British Empire, we fancy, will not appreciate the value of any such experiment, nor have we reason to believe that it would win the suffrage of any party of weight in the land. Probably, we shall do as we have done before; and, after having displayed our power at Cabul, shall retire from the country and leave it as a prey to the fierce passions which keep their carnival there. There is yet time, however, to mature a scheme of policy adapted to the circumstances of the case; but it will need to be wisely conceived, cautiously planned, and with delicate tact put into execution. Over confidence is almost sure to bring with it a penalty of unexpected loss, and the loss, in this case, may hereafter involve irreparable damage to our Indian Empire.

THE COURT.

The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, drove to Ballater yesterday week and met the Duke and Duchess of Connaught upon their first arrival in the Highlands after their marriage. Princes Christian Victor and Albert of Schleswig-Holstein were also present with her Majesty. The 1st Royal Scots furnished the guard of honour at the entrance to Balmoral, where a triumphal arch, decorated with flags and bearing the inscriptions "Welcome to Balmoral" and "Cead mille failthe" had been erected, and where the Royal household and tenants of the Balmoral, Abergeldie, and Birkhall estates were assembled. Dr. Profitt, the Queen's Commissioner, having welcomed the Duke and Duchess to Balmoral, the carriage conveying their Royal Highnesses with the Queen and Princess Beatrice, proceeded to the Castle, accompanied by the pipers, and escorted by the tenantry. At Aberdeen, on their journey northward, the Duke and Duchess were greeted with enthusiasm by some 3000 persons, and the Earl of Kintore, Lord Lieutenant of the County, presented a bouquet to the Duchess. Lord Chelmsford and the Right Hon. R. A. Cross dined with her Majesty and the Royal family. Lord Chelmsford left, and the Rev. Donald Macleod arrived at the Castle on Saturday.

The Queen, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, and Princess Beatrice attended Divine service on Sunday, performed at Balmoral by the Rev. Donald Macleod. The Right Hon. R. A. Cross and the Rev. Dr. Macleod dined with her Majesty.

The cairn erected on Craig Gowan upon the occasion of the Duke of Connaught's marriage was inaugurated on Monday in the presence of the Queen, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, and Princess Beatrice. On the face of the cairn, on a slab of polished granite, is the inscription, "Arthur Duke of Connaught and Strathearn married to Princess Louise Margaret of Prussia 13th March, 1879." The Marchioness Dowager of Ely, the Hon. Mary Lascelles, the Hon. Harriet Phipps, Miss Bauer, the Right Hon. R. A. Cross, Lieutenant-General Sir Henry Ponsonby, Major-General Gardiner, Lieutenant-Colonel Pickard, Captain Fitzgerald, and Dr. Fox, with a large number of the Royal household and tenantry, awaited her Majesty at the cairn. On the arrival of the Queen and Royal family, Dr. Profitt, the Queen's Commissioner, addressed the Duke and Duchess of Connaught on behalf of the assembled tenantry and retainers of Balmoral, conveying their good wishes and bidding the Duke and Duchess a hearty welcome. The health of their Royal Highnesses having been drunk, and the Duke of Connaught having responded, those of the Queen and Princess Beatrice were given. Stones were then added to the cairn by the Royal family and other spectators, and the Royal party returned to the castle.

Colonel H. Evelyn Wood, V.C., K.C.B., had, on Tuesday, the honour of knighthood conferred upon him by her Majesty, and was invested with the insignia of Knight Commander of the Bath. Colonel Buller, C.B., at the same time, received from the Queen the Victoria Cross.

The Queen, accompanied by the Duke and Duchess of Connaught and Princess Beatrice, has made numerous excursions to the picturesque localities on Dee side, and has visited the Glassalt Shiel.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince of Wales concluded his yachting cruise around the Devon coast by visiting Tor Bay, Babbicombe, and Teignmouth. His Royal Highness landed from his yacht Hildegarde at Cowes on Sunday morning, and proceeded to the Royal Yacht Squadron Castle. On Monday the Prince lunched with Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar and Countess Dornberg at Government House, Portsmouth, upon the occasion of the birthday of Princess Olga of Saxe-Weimar. Princess Olga, with Prince Ernest of Saxe-Weimar and Prince Louis of Battenberg, were present. The Prince subsequently left for London. His Royal Highness went to the Criterion Theatre on Tuesday evening. The Prince will set out on Monday next in the Royal yacht Osborne, commander Lord Charles Beresford, for Copenhagen.

The Princess of Wales, with Princes Albert Victor and George and Princesses Louise Victoria and Maud of Wales, were entertained at luncheon yesterday week by the Czarewitch and the Grand Duchess Dagmar of Russia on board the yacht Czarevna, which, with the Russian frigate Slovianka, had anchored in front of the marine establishment of Clampenborg, about two miles from the Royal château of Bernsdorff.

The Duke of Connaught's wedding-gift from Ireland is now completed by the addition of a silver dinner service, fitted into three oak chests. Each piece of plate is engraved with his Royal Highness's crest and coronet. The plates and dishes are of the gadroon pattern; the candlesticks being of the Corinthian style. One of the dinner plates bears this inscription:—"The following presentation of plate was made to his Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught and Strathearne, K.G., K.T., K.P., G.C.S.I., G.C.M.G., by his friends in Ireland on his marriage, 1879—one silver-gilt candelabrum, 16 silver table candlesticks, 16 flat dishes, four entrée dishes, 36 soup plates, 150 dinner plates."

Prince Leopold, during his Western cruise in the Lively, visited Tenby and inspected the Welsh Memorial to the Prince Consort on the Castle Hill. Yesterday week his Royal Highness landed at Douglas, Isle of Man. The Prince, after making a general inspection of the places of interest, entertained the Governor of the island and various officials at dinner on board the Lively, the bay and terraces of Douglas being illuminated. His Royal Highness sailed for Portrush at three o'clock on Sunday morning. The Prince visited Derry, and on Monday paid a short visit to Sir Harvey Bruce at Dunhill, Coleraine. He also inspected the principal seats of industry in the district, and afterwards returned to Portrush, where the Lively was lying in the Skerries Roads. His Royal Highness has since continued his cruise northwards.

The Grand Duchess of Baden, accompanied by Princess Victoria and Prince Ludovic of Baden, before leaving the Cavendish Hotel, Eastbourne, visited the Brighton Aquarium. The Grand Duchess, with the Prince and Princess, arrived at the Lord Warden Hotel, Dover, on Sunday, en route for Germany.

The Crown Prince of Sweden and Norway, having paid a series of visits in England, Scotland, and Wales, has left on a tour of visits upon the Continent. The King of the Belgians gave a State dinner yesterday week at the Palace of Laeken in honour of the Prince's arrival.

Princess Louise Jablonowska has left the Royal Victoria Hotel, St. Leonards-on-Sea, for Paris.

The Duchess of Norfolk gave birth to a son and heir at Norfolk House, St. James's-square, on Sunday morning. The infant heir was baptised in the private chapel of Norfolk House, St. James's, on Monday afternoon. His Eminence Cardinal Manning came from Liverpool expressly to officiate, and was assisted by the Rev. Father Keogh, Superior of the Oratory, and the Rev. Father Gordon Best, of the Oratory. The sponsors were Lord Edmund Talbot and Lady Mary Howard, the uncle and aunt of the infant. There were present—the Duchess Dowager of Norfolk, the Ladies Mary, Phillippa, and Margaret Howard, Lady Victoria Kirwan, Lord and Lady Edmund Talbot, Mr. Abney Hastings, and the Misses Hope. The names of the infant Earl of Arundel and Surrey are Phillip Joseph Mary.

The Duke of Argyll, accompanied by Lord Colin Campbell, M.P., and Ladies Elizabeth, Evelyn, Mary, and Constance Campbell, arrived at Inverary Castle on Monday, having travelled in his Grace's steam-yacht from Roseneath.

The Attorney-General opened a bazaar at Preston on Tuesday in aid of a new church for Ribbleton in the presence of a large and fashionable audience.

Dr. Lowe, Canon of Ely, has written to the Times from Denstone contradicting the rumour that he is about to be appointed a Suffragan to the Bishop of Lichfield on the retirement of Bishop Hobhouse.

The Rev. J. Warner Barton, Vicar of Stramshall, Staffordshire, has been presented by landowners and a large number of parishioners with a handsome testimonial, consisting of a solid silver teapot and sugar-basin, a drawing-room clock, and silver card-basket, after being Vicar for twenty years.

At the last meeting of the Haworth Local Board the building committee reported that they had inspected the plans of the proposed new church at Haworth, to be built on the site of the old Church of St. Michael and All Angels, by Messrs. Healey, of Bradford, and they recommended that they should be passed. This was agreed to. The last service in the old church is to be held next Sunday.

On the 3rd inst. the foundation-stone of a new church at Llanaelhaiarn was laid by Mrs. Farren, whose husband, the managing director of the granite quarries, supplied the designs and was a liberal subscriber. The site is given by Mrs. Jones, Treanna, Anglesey. The Bishop of Bangor, Archdeacon Evans, and a number of diocesan clergy were present; and his Lordship subsequently consecrated an addition to the churchyard.

A tower and spire, together with a clock and new bell, have lately been added to St. Philip's, Maidstone. There has also lately been completed a very beautiful memorial chancel at the sole cost of Mr. T. J. Hollingworth. The east window is filled in with Munich glass. A magnificent set of silver-gilt communion plate was presented by Mrs. Palmer, of Portland-place, and a rich altar cloth by Lady A. Gordon Lennox. This work has cost nearly £5000.

The Earl of Shaftesbury, as Chairman of the Tyndale Memorial Fund, has issued an appeal on behalf of the scheme. The committee also includes the Archbishops of Canterbury and Dublin, the Bishops of Durham, Gloucester and Bristol, Moray and Ross, the Deans of St. Paul's, Chester, Salisbury, Ripon, Peterborough, and Llandaff, Canon Fleming, Prebendary Plumptre, the Head Masters of Harrow and Marlborough, Mr. Justice Denman, Mr. Justice Fry, the Rev. Drs. Cumming, Cunningham, Geikie, Rigg, and Morley Punshon, the Revs. W. Cuthbertson and A. Hannay, chairman and secretary of the Congregational Union, &c. The memorial is to be a statue on the Thames Embankment. It will cost about £2000, and the pedestal £500. If some bas-reliefs descriptive of scenes in Tyndale's life, and other illustrative figures, are added, the costs will be increased; and a considerable sum must be allowed for the necessary expenses. The committee, therefore, say they cannot estimate the total cost at under £4000, and that they could with advantage spend a still larger sum if it were committed to them.

The new church of Upton-on-Severn was consecrated by the Bishop of Worcester on the 3rd inst., the Bishop of Exeter preaching in the afternoon. It has been built from designs of Mr. Blomfield, at a cost of £12,000, towards which Mr. G. E. Martin has contributed £2750 and the site; Miss Martin, £750; the Rev. R. Martin, £600; Miss R. Martin, £500; the Rev. H. A. Martin, £400; the Misses Martin, of the Hill, £365; the late Misses Martin, of Torquay, £200; the Bishop of Worcester, £500; and the Rector (the Rev. R. Lawson), £600. The remainder of the necessary funds came from the grants of the London and Diocesan Church Building Societies and from private donations. There were a great number of special gifts, including a handsome pulpit from Mr. H. Martin, and a font from Mr. Lawson. The church is in the Geometrical Decorative style, of Stanway rubble, with Bath stone facings; the proportions are remarkably grand and imposing, and there is a lofty tower with spire 183 feet to the top of the finial cross, which forms a fine landmark through a wide tract of country. The church will accommodate more than 700 persons. After the morning service there was a public luncheon for the benefit of the church fund, at which the Bishop of Worcester dwelt upon two interesting circumstances—one, that this was the third church which Mr. Lawson had been instrumental in building, those at Offenham and the Good Shepherd Chapel-of-ease being the others; the other was the large sum of money given by the members of one family.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

At a public meeting held at Bangor on the 4th inst., the Hon. W. E. Sackville West being in the chair, the Dean of Bangor delivered a long address on Welsh endowments at Oxford, and higher education in the Principality. The speaker dwelt upon the peculiar educational difficulties of Wales, arising from the distinct language and the comparative poverty of its endowments, which he described as barely equal to a third of those enjoyed by English districts of the same extent and population. He strongly deprecated the alienation from the national Jesus College at Oxford of any Welsh endowments, and advocated the creation of bursaries for the promotion of higher grade education.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has consented to present the prizes and certificates gained at the Oxford Local Examination the first week in November, in the theatre of the London University.

Mr. John F. Richards, B.A., Exhibitioner of Balliol College, Oxford, has been appointed to the vacant classical mastership at the Reading School. Mr. Richards obtained a First Class in Classical Mods., and also in Literis Humanioribus.

The Rev. R. M. Luckock, M.A., has been appointed Head Master of the Saffron Walden Grammar School.

Mr. T. R. Lee, B.A., (Twenty-eighth Wrangler), late Scholar of Pembroke College, Cambridge, has been appointed mathematical master at Beaumaris School.

The prizes at the Lancaster Grammar School were distributed this year by the High Sheriff of the county, Mr. W. Garnett. The occasion was celebrated by the assemblage of a goodly number of friends of the school to hear the reports of the examiners, Mr. F. C. Wace, M.A., and the Rev. C. E. Graves, M.A. Their reports spoke in the highest terms of the "thoroughness" which characterised the work of the school. The head master, the Rev. W. E. Pryke, said he was extremely pleased to hear the use of the word "thorough," as it indicated very clearly what his aim with respect to education was. He also alluded to the still greater results that he hoped to achieve when the school was two or three times as large, as he anticipated it at some time would be.

POLITICAL.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer was the first member of the Ministry to comment in public with commensurate gravity on the deplorable news of the massacre of the British Envoy and suite by disaffected Afghan troops in Cabul. Sir Hardinge Giffard, it is true, referred to the lamentable occurrence in addressing his constituents at Launceston in a somewhat nisi prius manner on Saturday; but, as the Solicitor-General briefly dismissed the affair as of no more import than "a squabble, perhaps, amongst the natives about their pay," his allusion may be regarded as of little more weight than a bit of Old Bailey special pleading. Sir Stafford Northcote spoke very differently. The right hon. baronet had the agreeable duty on Monday to attend a large meeting of Conservative electors of the City of Exeter, held in the grounds of The Retreat at Topsham, for the primary object of introducing his son, Mr. Henry S. Northcote, as candidate for the seat to be vacated by Mr. Johnson at the next election. In passing, it may be remarked that Mr. Northcote exhibited a liveliness, not to say flippancy, in attacking Mr. Gladstone, which budding Conservatives are prone to indulge in out of doors, but which they rarely care to display in the House of Commons since the right hon. gentleman administered the memorable castigation to Mr. Chaplin. The keynote of Sir Stafford Northcote's defence of the general policy of the Government was, that it had made the voice of England more respected throughout the world than it had been theretofore. Not quite in harmony with this jubilant strain may it have seemed when the speaker came to admit that he was "far from saying that there are not reasons for anxiety and regret at the present moment." But the Chancellor of the Exchequer's reference to the troublous event uppermost in every mind was so worthy the occasion that it may be quoted in full:—

> No one can help feeling the deepest sympathy and the deepest grief for the fate of the gallant men of whose loss in Afghanistan I fear we have received tidings which cannot be doubted (Hear, hear). It is a matter which must fill everyone's heart with the greatest sorrow (Hear, hear). They were men who have been sacrificed, we do not precisely know under what circumstances, to an outbreak of fanatical fury, against which, as far as the accounts enable us to judge, they contended with a courage and determination worthy of Englishmen and worthy of those gallant men themselves, who have rendered such service to the Empire (Cheers). They contended, as I understand, to the last in defence of the building which they occupied. The mutineers, though far exceeding them in numbers, were unable to storm the Residency, until at last they succeeded in setting fire to the door; and even then, when they broke in, our gallant countrymen sold their lives dearly—for I fear we must admit that their lives have been sacrificed. It is impossible that England can fully appreciate the very serious loss which we have sustained by the death of one so eminent, so worthy of our gratitude, as that distinguished man, Sir Louis Cavignari (Cheers). We cannot but deeply feel that loss, but it is premature to at present say anything more about it. We know not what the circumstances were. So far as we can judge, it appears to have been an unpremeditated outbreak on the part of a certain number of mutinous regiments. So far as we can judge, the Ameer has been entirely true to us, and the last message represents him as imploring our assistance. Of one thing we may be quite sure—that assistance will not be withheld (Cheers). We may be sure that Englishmen will be prompt to go to avenge those who have fallen on their behalf, and to succour those who are holding out in consequence of attacks directed against them, and we do not doubt that our gallant troops are far on the way to the city of Cabul, and that we shall soon hear of their having restored peace to that place (Cheers). But we cannot, as I said, undertake to speak as to the circumstances which have occurred, and I am sure that you will all feel, and England will feel that it is but right that for the moment we should abstain from conjecture or hasty judgment of any one (Hear, hear).

The Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons had to make his speech to his constituents of the Radnorshire Agricultural Society the day before the gloomy intelligence from Cabul arrived. The Marquis of Hartington was the chairman of the Show luncheon at the Severn Arms Hotel, Penybout. His address was of a farewell and bucolic nature. His Lordship bade adieu to his Radnor friends with due fervour, and then proceeded to chew the cud of "agricultural depression." Valuable statistics would, no doubt, be gathered by the Royal Commission; but farmers must not allow themselves to be deluded by the hope that any tax would be reimposed on foreign corn. The noble Lord's outspoken allusion in Parliament to the need of reforming the land laws was next qualified considerably. The Prime Minister was told that he misunderstood the Marquis when he represented him at the Mansion House to have advocated an alteration in the laws with the view of encouraging the growth of small or peasant properties. What the Marquis of Hartington did mean to recommend was inquiry as to whether any existing laws "tend artificially to aggregate vast properties in the hands of a few persons, who, perhaps, have not capital enough to manage them." It would be some time, however, before the Royal Commission could publish their report upon the matter. Meantime, the noble Lord strenuously urged landlords and tenants to seek together "the best means we can for helping each other, and for pulling through the emergency in which we find ourselves."

The Marquis of Hartington is announced to address a public meeting at Manchester, in company with Mr. John Bright, on Oct. 24—exactly a week after the Conservative banquet in the Free Trade Hall in honour of the Marquis of Salisbury's visit, with other members of the Cabinet, including Mr. Cross, Colonel Stanley, and probably Lord Sandon, to Manchester. This Conservative feast of reason and flow of soul is to take place on Friday, the 17th proximo; and on the morrow they will sober be at an elaborately organised County demonstration in the Pomona Gardens. Later in the month there is to be another Liberal counterblast in Lancashire, in the shape of a County demonstration at Heywood.

No great Ministerial luminary sparkled at the Sheffield Cutlers' Feast this year; but two of the most able of the junior members of the Ministry, Lord George Hamilton and the Hon. Edward Stanhope, spoke with characteristic confidence in defence of the Government at the dinner on the 4th inst., the watchword being that the present Ministry had raised the prestige of this country high in Europe.

The cricketers were not allowed to have it all their own way at Scarborough last week. Rain played sad havoc with the game. A political picnic was a powerful counter-attraction on Saturday, as many as 2000 persons availing themselves of Sir Harcourt Johnstone's invitation to tea—dashed with Liberal politics—at his seat at Hackness. Sir Harcourt attacked the Government, shook hands with himself, and had no doubt that at the next election he should secure Mr. W. S. Caine in lieu of Sir Charles Legard as his colleague in the House of Commons.

In Scotland, the election-contest for the representation of Morayshire and Nairnshire has not diminished in keenness between Brodie of Brodie, the Conservative candidate, and Sir George M'Pherson Grant, who is fighting the battle for the Liberals. The shrill clarion of Mr. Grant Duff was also raised on Monday at Banff and Macduff. His voice, so to speak, sank to the bovine end of the gamut at the former place, where he had cut-and-dried his recipes for the settlement of the land grievance and agricultural matters generally; but at Macduff the sharp accents rang out shrewishly against the foreign policy of the Government, and Mr. Grant Duff, with not the best of taste, quoted what he was pleased to call an epigram, levelled against the Ministers who visited Cyprus.

Cheery hopefulness is not generally occasioned in the House of Commons by the rising of Mr. Newdegate, who, on Tuesday, however, quite earnestly deprecated despondency on the part of agriculturists in the speech he made at the Atherstone dinner of the Warwickshire Agricultural Society.

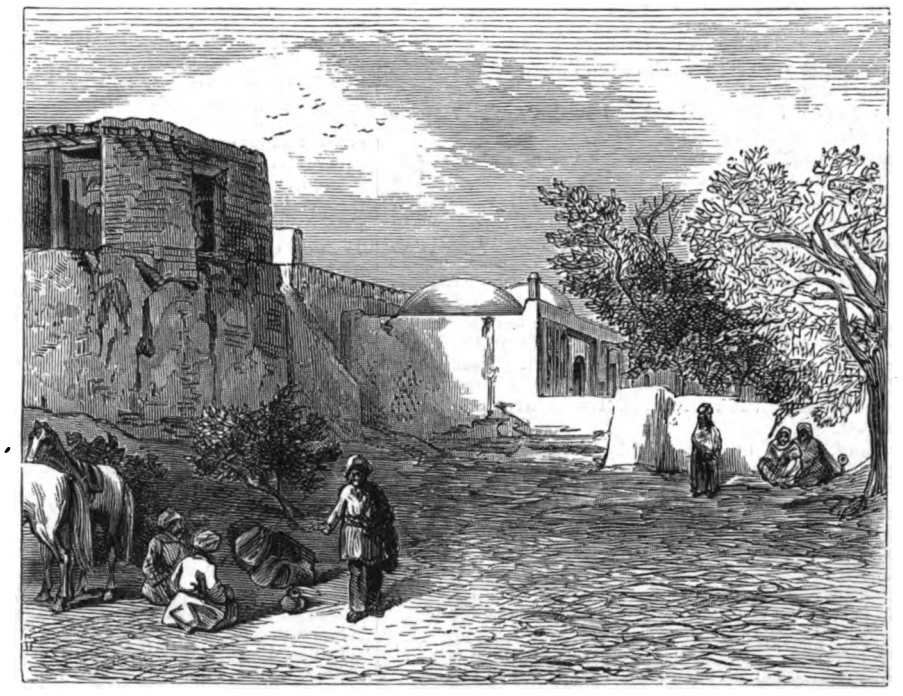
THE LATE SIR LOUIS CAVAGNARI, K.C.B., C.S.I.

Major Sir Pierre Louis Napoleon Cavagnari, who was, only in July last, nominated a Knight Commander of the Bath, Civil Division, was the son of an Italian, named Adolphe Cavagnari, who belonged to an ancient and noble Parmesan family, and was in the French service under the First Empire. The elder Cavagnari resided in England after the fall of the first Napoleon, and married Caroline, the third daughter of Mr. Hugh Lynes, Montgomery. His son was named after a member of the Bonaparte family. He was educated at Christ's Hospital, and entered the service of the East India Company as "direct cadet," and served with the 1st Bengal European Fusiliers in the Oude campaign of 1858-9. He also served with the 3rd Goorkhas throughout the Umbeyla campaign of 1863, and also with the same regiment throughout the Hazara Campaign of 1868. Major Cavagnari received the Victoria Cross for the daring capture of a band of murderers in connection with what was known as the Swat Canal Outrage in December, 1876. This occurred near the English Fort of Abazaie, where many native workmen were killed; but the culprits escaped. In January, 1878, Major Cavagnari, who was then in command of the Punjaub Frontier Forces, heard that the principal in this outrage had taken refuge at Chapri. He got together fifty men, procured guides, made a night march, and surprised this man in a house in Chapri, capturing him and his son. This event, which took place fifteen months after the perpetration of the crime, was considered the most dashing feat on the frontier. Major Cavagnari was long Deputy Commissioner of Kohat, acted in the same capacity at Peshawur, and was made a C.S.I. for his services in 1877. He was selected to accompany Sir Neville Chamberlain when that officer was ordered on a mission to the Ameer Shere Ali. He was in advance with a small body of the escort, when he was stopped by the Afghans at Ali Musjid and compelled to turn back, an incident which was the immediate cause of the late war. He accompanied General Sir Samuel Browne as political officer, and at the termination of the campaign was appointed our Plenipotentiary, and in that capacity negotiated the peace with Yakoob Khan at Gundamuk.

Her Majesty the Queen has sent a message of condolence to Lady Cavagnari, who is now at Edinburgh. The Viceroy of India was the first to send her a telegram, "with unspeakable sorrow," as he said, informing her of the death of "my beloved friend, your noble husband," which he regarded as an irreparable calamity; and Lord Lytton added, "Every British heart in India feels for you."

Our Portrait of Sir Louis Cavagnari is from a photograph taken by Mr. Burke, at Gundamuk, in May last.

SKETCHES IN AFGHANISTAN.



Several of the Sketches made by our Special Artist, Mr. William Simpson, who was lately in Afghanistan with the Khyber and Cabul Valley Field Force, under General Sir Samuel Browne, are published in this number of our Journal. One of them is a view of the burying-ground at Jellalabad, where soldiers of the British and Indian army were interred at the time of the former Afghan war. Another represents a curious exhibition of Mussulman religious fanaticism, or superstition, of which the lamented Major Cavagnari, with one or two companions, our Special Artist being of the party, were personal witnesses, at a place called Ishpan, near Gundamuk. Here is the tomb and venerated shrine of Shaik Raheem Dad, a holy prophet or saint of ancient times, having miraculous healing virtues for cases of chronic rheumatism, upon condition of the applicants walking round it, repeating certain prayers and beating their thighs with consecrated wisps of straw. The chuprassie or body-servant of Major Cavagnari was one of the performers in this ceremonial, upon which his master remarked, that it was only for the chance of a cure of his rheumatism, he would be so attentive to a religious duty. Our Special Artist contributes also the portrait of the Duffadar Zeroolah, a non-commissioned officer of the Punjaub Guides Cavalry, which corps furnished a detachment to the escort of the Residency at Cabul.

AFGHAN REVOLT, AND MURDER OF THE BRITISH ENVOY AT CABUL.

The terrible news of a fierce and sudden insurrection of Afghan soldiery and populace at Cabul, with the slaughter of the newly-appointed British Resident Envoy and his companions there, reached us on Saturday last. It has been received without much surprise, though with the deepest sorrow, by that portion of the English public which has consistently disapproved of the late war, commenced towards the end of last year by the British Indian Government for the purpose of forcing the Ameer of Cabul, in spite of a distinct understanding with preceding Viceroys of India, to admit such an official agency of foreign political control at his capital city. The late Shere Ali had invariably pleaded, in answer to every proposal of this nature, that he would not be able to guarantee the personal safety of an English Resident against the fixed aversion of the Afghan chiefs and nation to seeing one introduced at Cabul. The disastrous experiment of Lord Auckland's policy, which nearly forty years ago led to the massacre of Burnes and Macnaughten, and to the destruction of a retreating British army, might have been supposed to show the force of this objection. It was reasonably and prudently considered by several eminent Viceroys of India, Lord Lawrence, Lord Mayo, and Lord Northbrook, who consented to waive this demand of keeping a Resident at Cabul, since the Afghans, being intensely jealous of their ancient national independence, and observing that the Residents at the courts of native Indian Princes are really their foreign masters, were quite resolved never to put up with so obnoxious an institution. Notwithstanding, the present Viceroy, Lord Lytton, acting in concurrence with Lord Beaconsfield and Lord Salisbury, and the Ministerial councils here, thought fit last year to undertake a war, provoked by no positive injury whatever, on the sole pretext of Shere Ali's refusal to admit the appointed officer, though with a view also to the conquest of certain frontier districts. The result of that invasion by a large military force was the speedy flight of Shere Ali, who was soon removed by death, and whose son, Yakoob Khan, claiming to be the new Ameer of Cabul, was readily induced at Gundamuk to accept the terms dictated by Major Cavagnari in the Viceroy's name. It has never yet been shown that the authority of Yakoob Khan was generally recognised throughout the whole of Afghanistan by the most powerful chiefs and leaders of factions in that extensive country, or by the actual commanders of its native army, but a small portion of which had appeared in the field during the late war. There is, on the contrary, every reason to believe that a large section of the Afghan nation has obstinately refused to own the new Ameer and the Treaty of Gundamuk, and this condition of affairs seems to account for the shocking events of last week at Cabul, which may involve most serious consequences to our Indian Empire.

Major Sir Louis Cavagnari, the able and zealous officer whose death, with those of several others of our countrymen, is now sincerely deplored, was the political agent of the Viceroy of India in all the recent transactions. He was rewarded for their apparent success with a Knighthood and the appointment as Envoy and Minister to the Residency at Cabul, where he arrived on July 24, accompanied by Mr. William Jenkyns, of the Bengal Civil Service, as Secretary and First Assistant; Lieutenant W. R. P. Hamilton, as commandant of the escort; and Dr. A. H. Kelly, as medical officer; with an escort consisting of twenty-six cavalry and fifty infantry of the corps of Punjaub Guides.

The British Embassy entered Cabul on the morning of July 24. About four miles from the city Sirdar Abdoolah Khan, son of the famous Sultan Jan, of Herat, accompanied by the Minister for Foreign Affairs and an escort of cavalry, met the Envoy. Two elephants, with gilt and silver howdahs, had been sent for the use of the Envoy and his Staff. Close to the city the whole of the Cabul garrison, consisting of two cavalry regiments, two batteries of artillery, and nine infantry regiments, were drawn up in close column, and presented arms as the cortége passed. The bands played "God save the Queen," but the tune and time were somewhat faulty. The honour intended for the British guests by giving them their National Anthem was none the less appreciated. As the Envoy's elephant entered the gate of the Bala Hissar, or citadel of Cabul, a salute of seventeen guns was fired by a heavy battery (the siege-train of 18-pounders which the British Government in former days gave the Ameer Shere Ali) posted on some rising ground in front of the city. The housetops and shop windows of that part of the city through which the procession passed were crowded with sightseers, but the conduct of the crowd was orderly and respectful in the extreme. A guard of honour was drawn up a short distance from the gateway of the quarters appointed by the Ameer for the residence of the British Embassy, and as the Envoy alighted from his elephant the Commander-in-Chief and the Finance Minister waited on him, and conveyed friendly inquiries from the Ameer. In the afternoon Major Sir Louis Cavagnari and Staff paid a formal visit to the Ameer. The building in which the members of the Embassy were lodged was considered one of the best dwelling-houses in Cabul. There were two houses, one four-storied, the other two-storied, connected by side walls, so that there was a spacious quadrangle in the centre. The superstructure of these houses was principally of wood, with small kiln-baked bricks built in between frameworks of wood. This is said to be the best style of building to withstand earthquakes, which are very frequent in Cabul. The houses had been thoroughly cleaned and whitewashed, and were by no means uncomfortable. During the whole of the journey the officers and escort of the Embassy were the guests of the Ameer.

It appears that the first symptoms of danger were on Aug. 13, when there was a street riot, in which some of Yakoob Khan's soldiers, quarrelling with some men of the British Minister's escort, gave the latter a severe beating, the populace taking part against the foreigners. The Ameer, it is said, had shown some coldness to Major Cavagnari during the preceding week, sometimes declining to receive him under the pretext of indisposition, and only admitting him to formal interviews of a few minutes. On the 16th ult. he advised Major Cavagnari to discontinue his custom of riding freely about the city, as an attempt on his life might possibly be made. The British Envoy replied, that if he were killed, there were many more in India who were ready to come as his successors. Two days afterwards, on the 18th, the Afghan garrison was augmented by two regiments from Herat. These regiments clamoured for their arrears of pay, and also abused the Ameer as an infidel for his friendship with the English. They demanded the expulsion of the English, threatening as an alternative to exterminate them. The Ameer was much terrified; he paid them three months of the arrears, wept and embraced the officers, and assured them that the English alliance was indispensable. This state of things went on till the morning of last Wednesday week. There was a force of about five thousand Afghan troops collected by the Ameer as Cabul, which comprised nine regiments of infantry, two of cavalry, and two batteries of artillery, quartered in the Bala Hissar under the command of Daoud Shah, the Sipah Salar or Commander-in-Chief of the Ameer's army. This includes the two regiments from Herat, which had recently been brought to the capital. On Wednesday week, early in the morning, they were called out to receive some portion of their pay, with which they were not satisfied. They suddenly broke out in a mutiny, three regiments at first, but soon joined by six others. They threw stones at their officers, driving them away, and then surrounded the British Residency, which they assailed with stones on every side, uttering violent threats against its inmates. The lower class of people in the city, and many from the surrounding country, were presently attracted by this scene of confusion. They joined the soldiery and helped to destroy the undefended buildings, the artillery park and magazine, while the mutineers continued their attack on the British Residency. This was defended by the Punjaub Guides, under Sir Louis Cavagnari and Lieutenant Hamilton, during the whole day, firing volleys on the assailants whenever they approached, and with considerable effect, as about four hundred of the Afghans were killed. But there must have been several thousand of them actively engaged in the attack upon a frail wooden house and outbuildings, desperately held by seventy or eighty men, who could only resolve to sell their lives dear, with little hope of timely rescue.

The Ameer Yakoob Khan was in his Palace, which was in the Bala Hissar, close by; he sent out Daoud Shah to put a stop to the revolt, and especially to protect the British Residency. Daoud Shah, when he approached the mutineers and the mob, was pelted with stones, knocked off his horse, wounded with a spear, and forced to return to the Palace, where he is said to have died of his wounds. The Ameer next sent Yahya Khan, who was equally unable to restrain the insurgents. A son of the Ameer was also sent, but received almost as bad treatment as Daoud Shah. The Mollahs, or Mohammedan clergy of high rank, with the Koran in their hands, went out amidst the raging mob, but their exhortations were not listened to. The soldiers had cast off all subordination, and mingled with the loose populace, who had procured arms from the plunder of the arsenal. In fact, the whole city, as well as the military quarter, was in a state of downright insurrection. The Ameer's palace itself was by-and-by surrounded by the insurgents, who threatened the lives of himself and his few remaining attendants. He was, nevertheless, enabled to send off two short letters, which were conveyed by a Ghilzai to Major Conolly, the British officer at Ali Kheyl, informing the Viceroy of India that this perilous outbreak had taken place. The first news of it reached Ali Kheyl late on Thursday evening, and was instantly telegraphed to Lord Lytton at Simla, and by him to London.

Meantime, the unfortunate defenders of the Residency had succumbed to the persistent onslaught of an overwhelming number of foes. Towards nightfall on the Wednesday evening the Afghans contrived to set fire to the doors of the building, and swarmed in, forcing their way up stairs. It is not quite certain how Sir Louis Cavagnari and the other Englishmen individually came by their death. They are said to have fought hard for their lives to the end, along with the men of their escort, good Punjabee soldiers, whose fidelity and bravery cannot be doubted. Some of the party seem to have got out of the house, and died fighting outside. The dead bodies of the slain officers were seen lying in the streets. This news was brought to Ali Kheyl by nine of the mounted Punjaub Guides, the only men of the Residency escort who escaped, being out foraging at the time of the attack. They must be deducted from the number above given as the strength of the guard or escort with Sir Louis Cavagnari. They are, it is believed, the sole survivors of the massacre.

The latest news received in London at the hour of making up this account was dated from Ali Kheyl on Tuesday last, being a despatch from Major Conolly to the Viceroy of India. It describes the attack on the Residency, and the resolute defence made by its occupants, who killed not less than 410 of their assailants. When the house was set on fire they charged out, sword in hand, and were all slain. Twelve Afghan regiments took part in the attack. The Ameer is stated to be in privacy with a few faithful Sirdars; he is terribly perplexed and confused at the reproach to his name, and is sure to come personally and apologise to the British Indian Government. The Nawab Gholam Hussein Khan, who was reported to have been killed, was expected on the 7th at Cabul.

The news has created an intense excitement through India. When the first intelligence came it was hoped that Brigadier Massy would make a rush forward from Ali Kheyl with the brigade under his command, without waiting for orders, and that he would arrive in time to save the Residency at Cabul. The news of the fatal issue of the struggle, however, arrived so soon after that of the attack that he would have known before he reached the Shaturgardan Pass that it was too late.

At Ali Kheyl there were, quite recently, under Brigadier Massy, three English regiments—the 67th, 72nd, and 92nd—the 5th Goorkhas, two batteries, one a mountain battery, and one native cavalry regiment, the 12th Bengal Lancers. There were therefore, at the most moderate computation, two thousand five hundred men at Ali Kheyl, and two-thirds of these, or sixteen hundred men, should be ready for an immediate advance.

The Khoorum Valley Field Force, with which Sir Frederick Roberts has been ordered to make an immediate advance on Cabul, consists of four British regiments, three regiments of Indian cavalry, four native infantry regiments, two mountain batteries, one battery of Royal Horse Artillery, and two batteries of field artillery.

The Queen's regiments in the Peiwar Pass are the second battalion 8th, commanded by Colonel Drew, C.B.; 67th South Hampshire, Lieut.-Col. Knowles; 72nd Duke of Albany's Own Highlanders, commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Clarke during the absence on furlough of Colonel Brownlow; and 92nd Gordon Highlanders, Lieutenant-Colonel Parker. Two of these regiment, the second battalion 8th and 72nd, have been with the Khoorum Field Force throughout the last operations. The 67th went up from the Madras Presidency and the 92nd from its cantonments at Seetapore to join General Roberts's force before the conclusion of the first phase of the Afghan war. The native infantry regiments in the Peiwar are the 11th N.I., commanded by Colonel Lamb; 23rd Pioneers, Lieutenant-Colonel Currie; 28th Punjaubees, Lieutenant-Colonel Hudson; and 5th Punjaub Infantry, Major M'Queen. The cavalry force, under the command of Colonel Hugh Gough, C.B., V.C., consists of the brigadier's own regiment, the 12th Bengal Cavalry, with the 14th Bengal Lancers and the 5th Punjaub Cavalry. The two mountain batteries are commanded respectively by Captains H. Morgan and G. Swinley, of the Royal Artillery.

It is hardly expected that General Sir Frederick Roberts will be enabled to advance in force before the month of October, while neither the Khyber nor the Candahar force is likely to be ready sooner; but the former will at once occupy Jellalabad again. The greatest difficulty will be that of collecting beasts of burden, camels, bullocks, and mules, for the transport service. General Sir Michael Kennedy has been appointed Controller-General of this department, and Colonel Macgregor is to be Chief of the Staff. The Viceroy, Lord Lytton, has left Simla for Lahore.

Candahar, which fell into our hands on Jan. 7 last, when it was surrendered to us without a blow being struck in defence of the second capital of Afganistan, is held by Lieut.-General Sir Donald Stewart, with a force which has been considerably reduced in the past month. It is fortunate for us that we have established telegraphic communication with Candahar, or else we should be unable to stop the homeward march of General Stewart's force, the head-quarters of which would, in accordance with the terms of the Afghan Treaty, have commenced to evacuate Candahar on Sept. 1. General Stewart has only two Queen's regiments with him, viz.—the 59th, and the 2nd battalion 60th Rifles, the latter commanded by Lieut.-Colonel J. J. Collins. The native regiments with him are the 15th and 25th N.I., the 3rd Goorkhas, and the 2nd Belooch Regiment. His cavalry force, which has Brigadier-General Palliser, C.B., as its chief, consists, or consisted at the end of last month, of the 2nd Punjaub Cavalry, 3rd Sind Horse, and 19th Bengal Lancers. If an advance from Candahar takes place it will doubtless be viâ Khelat-i-Ghilzi and Ghuzni.

We subjoin the grave news sent by the Bombay correspondent of the Standard on Thursday:—

"The greatest excitement has been caused here by a report that the Ameer is dead—having, according to one account, been slain by his rebellious subjects: and, according to another, committed suicide. Cabul, it is further stated, was sacked by the Heratees before leaving. Troops are being hurried up to the frontier with the greatest rapidity, and hard fighting is expected."

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

The Emperor Francis Joseph arrived at Linz on Sunday, and was received by the authorities of the town, the clergy, and deputations from all parts of Upper Austria. His Majesty, who was most enthusiastically cheered by the crowd, proceeded to the principal square, where the President of the Festival Committee, speaking from a platform erected specially for the occasion, delivered an address in honour of the Emperor. His Majesty afterwards visited the Exhibition.

Safvet Pasha has declared to the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador that he considers the Porte has the greatest interest in evidencing as distinctly as possible the existence of its complete understanding with the Austro-Hungarian monarchy. With this view, Husni Pasha was expressly instructed to accompany the Austrian troops upon their entry into Novi-Bazar.

GERMANY.

The German Emperor and Empress, accompanied by the Crown Prince and his eldest son, Prince William, Prince Charles, and Prince Frederick Charles, arrived on Thursday evening, the 4th inst., at Königsberg. The entry of the illustrious party into the old Prussian coronation town was greeted by ringing of church bells and salvoes of artillery. From the railway station, from which the electric light shone with brilliance, the Imperial guests drove in open carriages through streets tastefully decorated and illuminated from garret to basement, and thronged with a loyal and enthusiastic multitude. As they advanced to the castle there was continued cheering, and the waving of hats and handkerchiefs continued without intermission. The entire progress resembled a triumphal march. This is the first visit made by their Majesties to Königsberg since the assumption of the Imperial crowns. Next morning a deputation of twenty-seven maidens of Königsberg, introduced by the Chief Burgomaster, presented an address of welcome to the Emperor and Empress, and handed to the Empress a magnificent bouquet, together with some verses appropriate to the occasion. The Emperor accepted the homage offered with great marks of satisfaction, and replied in feeling terms of gratitude. He referred to the times of heavy afflictions which he had spent in Königsberg with his Royal parents, but at the same time reminded those present of the wise dispositions of Providence, by whose aid all had been so gloriously accomplished. His Majesty concluded with the words, "God's blessing gained, all is obtained."

The military manœuvres have been on a vast scale. A telegram states that they closed on Tuesday with a long and most desperate engagement, in which, the attack of the previous day being resumed, the defending army was finally defeated and driven within the fortifications of Königsberg. The correspondent particularly commends a brilliant cavalry charge by three regiments of Uhlans, Hussars, and Cuirassiers, which proved the culminating movement of the engagement.

The Emperor William and the Crown Prince of Germany have approved a project for the holding of an international exhibition at Berlin in the year 1885.

RUSSIA.

The meeting of the Russian and German Emperors came off on Wednesday week at Alexandrowo, as reported in a great portion of our last issue. The Czar, with a numerous suite, arrived at half-past one o'clock by a special train composed of eight saloon carriages. The Emperor William arrived shortly after three o'clock. As his Majesty entered the station, which was profusely decorated with flags and garlands of flowers, a guard of honour was drawn up on the platform, and a military band played the Prussian National Anthem. The meeting between the two Sovereigns is described as having been exceedingly cordial, and they were greeted with enthusiastic cheers by large crowds who had congregated in the immediate vicinity of the station. After inspecting the guard of honour, their Majesties withdrew to the reception-room, and subsequently dined together. The Emperor William took up his quarters at the station. At five o'clock the Emperor William paid a visit of half an hour's duration to the Emperor Alexander, who immediately returned the visit. It is semi-officially announced at St Petersburg that Field-Marshal Manteuffel's mission to Warsaw furnishes a contradiction to the statements respecting the visit of courtesy paid by the Czarewitch to Stockholm as indicating an alliance between Russia and Sweden against Germany. On Thursday the Emperors had another interview.

The Emperor Alexander arrived at Odessa on Saturday afternoon, and paid a visit to the cathedral. After inspecting the troops, he left at seven in the evening on board the Imperial yacht for Yalta, Crimea.

The Ministers of War and Communications have now (a despatch from St. Petersburg says) finally completed the arrangements for the dispatch of an expedition to investigate the practicability of diverting the Amu Darya into its old bed, and thus causing it to flow into the Caspian. The expedition will be divided into three detachments, of which two will be sent to Krasnovodsk and Khiva respectively, to perform the necessary work on the steppe, while the third will be employed in examining the river and delta. The latter party have already started, but the departure of the other sections of the expedition has been postponed until January, in consequence of the disturbed state of the Turkoman steppe.

TURKEY AND GREECE.

At the meeting last Saturday of the Commissioners for the Rectification of the Turco-Greek Frontier the Greek Commissioners drew up a note to the Ambassadors insisting that the fulfilment of that portion of the Berlin Treaty was obligatory on the Porte, while the Turkish representatives expressed the view that it was only a recommendation. It is believed in Constantinople that if the negotiations should fail a European Conference will assemble to settle this and other pending questions.

Pell, M.P., who have gone to the United States to conduct inquiries on behalf of the British Agricultural Commission, visited the Produce Exchange, New York, on Tuesday, and put questions to the leading produce dealers. Having witnessed the process of loading vessels with grain, as also of preparing fresh meat for export, they left for the dairy districts in the State.

On account of the yellow fever prevailing at Memphis, the churches in that city were closed on Sunday last. There were 20 cases and 10 deaths on Tuesday. Only one case of yellow fever was reported in New Orleans on the 5th inst. Since the outbreak of the epidemic there have been 22 cases, of which five proved fatal.

Heavy damage has been done to the sugar and cotton plantations in Texas and Louisiana by a violent storm which passed over those States.

CANADA.

Amid great popular enthusiasm, the Exhibition at Toronto was opened yesterday week by the Marquis of Lorne and Princess Louise. There was a general illumination at night.

The Marquis of Lorne, accompanied by Princess Louise, on Tuesday reviewed the troops of the garrison. The manœuvres lasted two hours, and on their termination his Excellency heartily congratulated the officers on the manner in which they were carried out. The city was illuminated at night, and there were general rejoicings in celebration of the Governor-General's visit.

The Governor-General, accompanied by Princess Louise, after making a progress through the province of New Brunswick during the early part of last month, visited various parts of Nova Scotia, and then embarked at Pictou for the Province of Prince Edward Island, throughout which they received an enthusiastic reception. On the 21st ult. the vice-regal party arrived at Quebec in H.M.S. Bellerophon, which was accompanied by H.M.S. Tourmaline and Griffin. The French war-vessels then in that port joined in the salute of twenty-one guns given on the occasion. The progress of his Excellency and her Royal Highness through the province of Ontario will doubtless produce the crowning reception accorded to them in Canada. Last winter the Marquis and his consort passed through a portion of this province incognito, on the occasion of their visit to the Niagara Falls; and, in response to the expressed desire of many in Ontario, the official visit was deferred till after the harvest, a period of the year when the agricultural population have some leisure and when Nature there is looking its best. During the Viceroy's stay in Toronto, a citizens' ball and a banquet will be given, and a review of the Militia, a regatta under the auspices of the Royal Canadian Yacht Club, and innumerable other demonstrations have been arranged. It is stated that Princess Louise has invited a number of English friends to visit Rideau Hall during the coming winter.

The period of the operation of the Order in Council prohibiting the importation of cattle into the Dominion from the United States has been extended to Oct. 6.

A proclamation of the Marquis of Lorne, applying the Act for the Better Prevention of Crimes and Violence in the city and county of Quebec, was issued on the 3rd inst.

Preceding the adjournment of the Quebec Legislative Assembly on the 2nd inst., one of the speakers, in the course of the debate, denounced the Ministry as unfit to conduct the Government of the province. In reply the Prime Minister pointed out the fact that this was the twenty-second time the same member had moved a vote of want of confidence in the Government. Finally a motion for the adjournment of the House until Oct. 28 was carried by 25 against 23 votes.

During the deadlock created by the conflict between the Legislative Council and the Assembly no salaries or school or charitable grants can be paid.

Intense frost prevailed in Brazil on the 9th of last month, causing immense injury to the growing coffee crops on the high lands.

Major-General Biddulph, the High Commissioner of Cyprus, left Larnaca on the 6th inst. for England, on board Her Majesty's gun-boat Falcon. Colonel Edridge acts as High Commissioner during his Excellency's absence.

THE NORTH-EAST PASSAGE.

The North-East Passage has been safely accomplished. A telegram from New York informs us that the Vega, which left Sweden in July, 1878, with Professor Nordenskiöld on board as the leader of the expedition, has reached Yokohama, all well. On July 20 the gallant little steamer passed East Cape, midway through the Behring's Straits, and under a salute from the tiny gun on board announced to a frozen world that the memorable feat had been achieved.

A narrative in the Telegraph, says:—

Leaving Gothenburg on July 4, 1878, the Vega, a teak steam whaler, built at Bremen, and specially adapted by refitting and strengthening to the work before her, sighted Nova Zembla on the 28th and anchored on that day off a village on the Samoyed peninsula, at the entrance to the Kara Sea. Professor Nordenskiöld had profited by his studies of the experience of those who had preceded him "towards the rising sun," and the once dreaded Kara Sea was surprised when it was almost entirely free of ice. The savants on board the Vega landed, and each in his particular branch of science found the days all too short for the magnificent harvests he gathered in. On Aug. 1 the Vega proceeded very slowly eastward, dredging and sounding continually. No ice barred the way, for the loose rotten floes that abounded hardly deserved the name, and in five days the steamer was safe in Dickson's Haven, destined, so says Professor Nordenskiöld, to be in future years one of the chief exporting ports of Siberia. On the 10th the Vega resumed her course, and, threading her way through unknown islands, usually bound together by strong bands of ice, but now separated by straits of floating "sludge," reached a fine harbour situated in the strait between Taimyr Island and the mainland—Actinia Haven, as it has been christened, from the numbers of actinia that have been dredged up. One discovery made at this point is worth special remark. Examining the ice in a small floe, Professor Nordenskiöld found some yellow specks, "which proved to be coarse-grained sand, consisting of very beautifully formed crystals." As a practical mineralogist, the Professor decided that they were "no ordinary terrestrial mineral, but possibly a matter crystallised from the sea water during the severe cold of winter."

Leaving Actinia Haven on the 18th, the explorers coasted north-east, and next evening came to anchor in a bay off Cape Chelyuskin or Severo, the most northerly point of Asia.

This was the first time the formidable headland had been turned, and, if the expedition had had no finer goal before it, would have sufficed to make the Vega's journey one of the most memorable on record. For three centuries man has tried in vain to round Cape Chelyuskin. On the 21st the voyage was resumed, and, though delayed by fogs and banks of rotten ice, the Vega made good way south-east, still keeping the land in sight. The mountains increased in height, and animal and vegetable life became more varied and abundant, and on the 23rd a fine breeze carried the brave little vessel swiftly along, without the aid of steam, over a perfectly smooth sea—one, moreover, marked upon the charts as dry land. They reached the mouth of the Chatanga River, and on the 27th turned northwards for the Siberian Islands. Reaching with great difficulty Cook's farthest point, Cape Vankarema, the Vega crossed over to Kolnitchin, and there, on the 28th, her engine-fires were put out and the sails stowed away, and winter life in the pack ice fairly entered upon. The cold was intense, and one day, the shortest recorded, was of three hours' duration only, "the upper limb of the sun visible," and no more. But day and night there was more than enough to do, and almost every science known to man will be enriched by the labours of the distinguished few who searched the seas and land and sky for all they could give and tell of while they wintered off the Tchkik-tchi villages. For 264 days they remained ice-bound, but at last the floes began to thin and scatter, and on July 18 the Vega once more floated, and on the 20th, steaming through Behring's Straits, fired the mimic salute that told of the great end achieved.

Professor Nordenskiöld writes that the voyage from Europe to Asia by the North-East Passage may be considered now certain of regular accomplishment, and, with a little more knowledge of the northern seas, quite safe. From Japan to Lena, no difficulty presents itself to skilled seamen, and as that river taps Central Siberia, the horizon of trade has been most grandly extended by the Vega's success.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The sale of the Guildford coach horses took place at Tattersall's on Monday, when twenty-one horses realised £1367.

The London and Provincial Coffee Palace Company opened the fifth of their establishments yesterday week in High-street, Notting-hill, Admiral Sir Cooper Key, K.C.B., presiding.

The result of a poll last Saturday for the election of a Common Councilman to represent Lime-street Ward, was the choice of Mr. Archibald Macdonald, of Leadenhall-street.

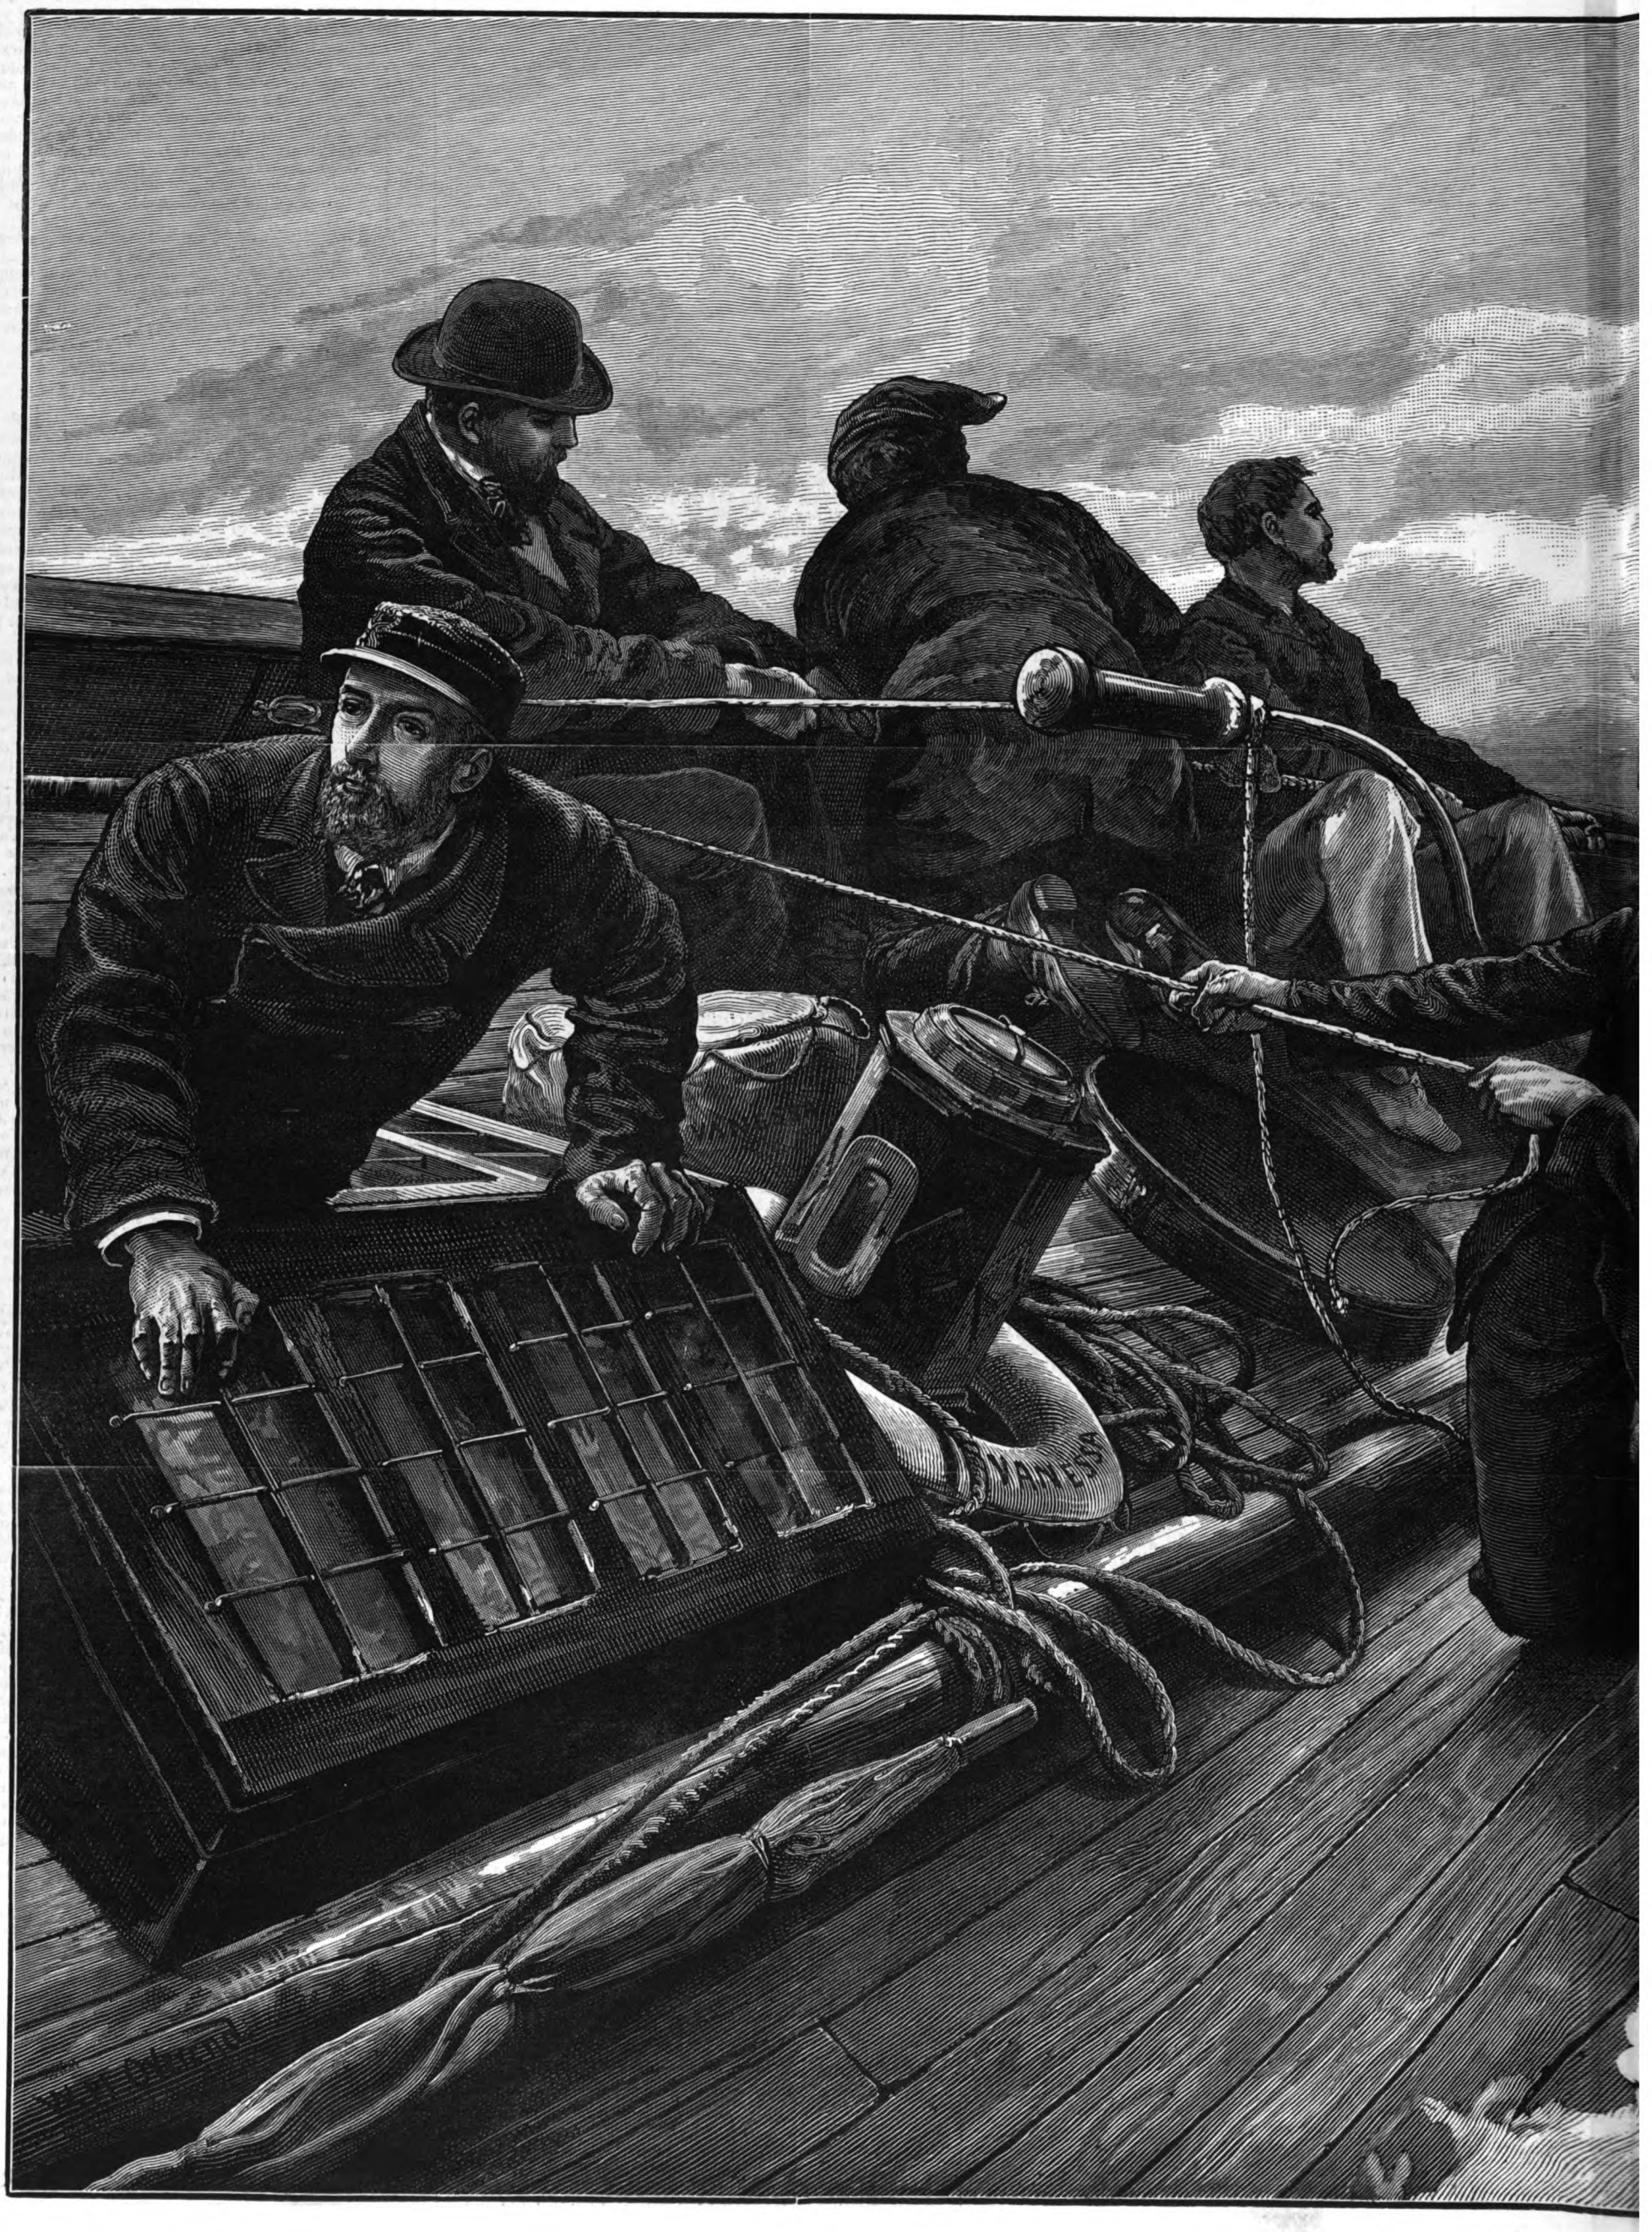
The drinking-fountain which it is proposed to erect in St. Paul's-church-yard is being prepared in granite from the Lamonia Quarries of Messrs. John Freeman and Sons, at their works, Penryn, Cornwall, instead of being cast in bronze, as originally stated.

The street collections made last Saturday for the benefit of the London hospitals resulted in £1028 being obtained an advance of £110 on the collection of last year, and is exclusive of the boxes placed by local committees in West Ham, Hammersmith, and Greenwich.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that on the last day of the fourth week in August the total number of paupers was 78,726, of whom 42,240 were in workhouses and 36,486 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks of 1878, 1877 and 1876, these figures show an increase of 2042, 1697, and 1556 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 797, of whom 564 were men, 196 women, and 37 children.

Considerable alterations are being made on the western side of Chancery-lane by the Benchers of Lincoln's Inn. The buildings on the east side of Old-square as far as a point opposite the chapel of the inn are being unroofed and demolished. These consist of three staircases, or, in other words, about thirty-three sets of chambers. They will be rebuilt according to the plan of the adjoining wing on the northern side of the square facing Stone-buildings. Eventually it is intended to rebuild all the buildings from the above point southwards as far as the gateway of Lincoln's Inn, which will be carefully preserved.

As reported in the chief part of our issue last week, the remains of the late Sir Rowland Hill were interred on the 4th inst. in Westminster Abbey, in the presence of a large congregation. The service was fully choral, and was conducted by Canon Duckworth. Mr. Pearson Hill, the son of the deceased, was chief mourner, being supported by Mr. Arthur Hill, eldest surviving brother of Sir Rowland, and an immense gathering of relations and friends. The pall-bearers were the Lord Mayor, Sir George Airy, Mr. Heywood, F.R.S., Mr. Edwin Chadwick, Mr. Torrens, M.P., the Hon. C. P. Villiers, M.P., Mr. C. H. Gregory, and Mr. Page. Amongst those gathered to pay the last tribute of respect to the deceased were several representatives of foreign postal services and many officials of the English Postal Department.



Last week 2646 births and 1393 deaths were registered in London. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 275, whereas the deaths were 24 below, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths included 7 from small-pox, 37 from measles, 50 from scarlet fever, 4 from diphtheria, 36 from whooping-cough, 25 from different forms of fever, and 146 from diarrhœa. At the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, the mean reading of the barometer last week was 29·97 in.; the highest reading was 30·32 in. on Monday evening, and the lowest 29·54 in. at the end of the week. The mean temperature of the air was 56·8 deg., being 3·0 deg. below the average in the corresponding week of the twenty years ending 1868. The lowest night temperature was 39·5 deg. on Monday, and the highest day temperature in the shade 73·4 deg. on Wednesday. The highest temperature in the sun was 141·4 deg. on Wednesday.

Mr. Henry Varley, of the Tabernacle, St. James's-place, Notting-hill, who has recently returned from a visit of nearly two years' duration to Australia and New Zealand, lectured upon those colonies before an open-air meeting in Hyde Park on Sunday afternoon. A large number of persons assembled hear his address. The lecturer set forth the characteristics and prospects of each of the colonies. He discouraged the idea of emigrating to Victoria or Queensland, a great trade depression existing in the former colony, and the latter being unsuitable by reason of its hot climate. He recommended Western Australia, New South Wales, Tasmania, and New Zealand, and explained their characteristics and the requirements needed for the success of intending emigrants to them. At the general request of his hearers, Mr. Varley consented to lecture once more in the same place next Sunday upon religious matters.

Sir Charles Whetham, the Lord Mayor, writes as follows respecting a proposed national memorial to the late Sir Rowland Hill:—"I have received many suggestions that the public are awaiting an opportunity of showing their regard for the memory of the late Sir Rowland Hill, and their appreciation of the immense advantages he conferred on the world at large, by contributing to a fund which should in some suitable way be the means of perpetuating his name and work. It is thought that such a movement should be inaugurated in the city of London, as the centre of the nation which has profited so extensively by the penny postage system, and that all classes would be willing to join in it. In order to test how far this feeling, in which personally I heartily concur, is general, I shall be happy, as Lord Mayor, to receive at the Mansion House donations towards a Sir Rowland Hill Memorial Fund, and should the response be favourable, as I have no doubt it will, I shall call together a representative committee of the subscribers to decide what form the memorial should assume."

The foundation-stone of the new Shropshire Eye and Ear Hospital at Shrewsbury was laid on Tuesday by the Earl of Powis, in the presence of a large gathering.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

In one of the works of Mr. George Borrow—I forget whether it is the Gipsies or the Bible in Spain—the admirable writer describes how one day, in the course of remote Peninsular wanderings, he found himself close to the wall of some ancient building, and how, a door therein suddenly opening, there issued forth two gentlemen, one of whom proved to be Mr. George Borrow's esteemed and revered friend, M. le Baron Taylor. The Baron was, it seems, as glad to see the author of Lavengro as that eminent friend of the Romany Chals was to see the Baron; and the Quarterly Review, in subsequently criticising Mr. Borrow's book, good-naturedly quizzed him on the naïveté of his account of his interview with the distinguished savant.

Baron Taylor died on Saturday last, at the age of ninety. I suppose that he was one of the most versatile, the most accomplished, and the most cosmopolitan men that modern times have produced. Heinrich Heine used to say of him that he must have been fashioned from the clay "left over" after the moulding of Humboldt, Brougham, and Rossini. He came, by the father's side, of an English family naturalised in France; and on the mother's from the ancient Flemish stock of the Walweins. He was preparing to enter the Polytechnic School, under the First Empire, when it occurred to him to enlist in the French army, in which he remained twelve years, and which he left with the rank of Major. Under the Restoration he was appointed Royal Commissary or official director of the Comédie Française, in which capacity he had the common-sense to carry out many useful reforms in the direction of stage costume and scene-painting; and he had furthermore the courage to revive Beaumarchais' "Mariage de Figaro" and to produce Victor Hugo's "Hernani," thereby earning for himself the fierce hatred of the Classicals.

King Louis Philippe was very fond of Baron Taylor, and employed him in numerous artistic and archæological missions. As a travelling inspector of fine arts, he purchased many precious pictures and statues on account of the French Government; and it must have been in one of these virtuoso tours that he suddenly came out of the door in the antique wall, and was confronted by Mr. George Borrow. It was Baron Taylor who was commissioned to superintend the conveyance from Alexandria in Egypt to France of the Obelisk of the Luxor, now in the Place de la Concorde. An indefatigable man. He was a true philanthropist, besides; and founded the Society of Men of Letters, the Dramatic Authors' Society, and many other self-helping associations. He wrote several books; and finally he was an assiduous attendant at funerals, and acquired a distinct and special renown from the vast number of eloquent funeral orations which, in the course of his long public career, he was called upon to deliver over the graves of departed celebrities.

Many years have passed since I read the book which was recalled to my mind by the news of Baron Taylor's death; but, unless my memory plays me false, Mr. George Borrow was one of the first English writers of eminence to direct public attention to the arduous labours, the devotion to duty, and the self-sacrifice of that very hard-working and generally ill-requited individual the Special War Correspondent. I think that he rendered a noble tribute of appreciation to the correspondents of the London daily papers with whom he came in contact during his wanderings in Spain, then (about three-and-forty years ago, I apprehend) convulsed by the Carlist and Christino war. The correspondents whom he had "in his eye" were, I should say, the late Mr. Fred. Hardman and the late Mr. O'Meagher, both of the Times, and the still happily extant Mr. Charles Lewis Gruneisen, at that time of the Morning Post, and at present the doyen of our craft.

I just mention what the Italians laughingly term "la bella famiglia" when they talk about themselves, for the reason that I perceive that the Indian Government has resolved that no "non-combatant gentlemen"—that is to say, no civilian special correspondents—are to be permitted to accompany the force which is marching on Cabul. Is it thought, then, in high quarters that Mr. Archibald Forbes, Mr. Phil. Robinson, and the rest of the "non-combatant" Specials did more harm than good in Afghanistan? On the other hand, regimental (not staff) officers are to be allowed to correspond with the press. Will the British public be satisfied with the accounts furnished by smart subalterns and clever captains? Is a regimental officer usually in a position to take a general survey of what is going on at the front? And, finally, are not officers on active service prohibited by the Queen's Regulations from writing letters to the newspapers at all?

The Times has been dwelling in a forcible leading article on the discomforts frequently experienced by ladies and gentlemen who, at this time of year, travel to continental "health resorts," to "drink the waters." They have, according to the Times, to tolerate abroad "the rampant and aggressive existence of nuisances the very description of which would almost suffice to make them ill if they were at home." "Fatiguing journeys, crowded inns, stuffy and ill-ventilated rooms, bad food, abominable cookery (?), loathsome stenches, and exorbitant charges are all among the common-place incidents of the autumnal tour in search of health." This indignant diatribe winds up with an inquiry whether some enterprising London doctor cannot contrive to make an English mineral spring fashionable, and sacrifice one autumnal holiday in order personally to supervise the proceedings of his patients.

I confess that I do not like the invitation to the "enterprising London doctor." It is a direct invitation to quackery; and, moreover, at all our popular mineral springs there are numbers of experienced local physicians who are much better qualified than any "enterprising London doctor" can be to supervise the curative treatment of water-drinking patients. We do not stand in need of any new and "fashionable" English springs. We should patronise to a much greater extent than we at present do the old ones. Go to Cheltenham; go to Leamington; go to Epsom; go to Ashby-de-la-Zouch; go to Bath. And especially go to the most delightful of all English inland watering-places, Tunbridge Wells.

I cannot afford to take an autumnal holiday. No Engadine, no Ponteresina, no Lake of Como, no Bernese Oberland, no Tyrol, no (happily) Righi Kulm for me. The lakes of Killarney and the Trosachs are even beyond my means. I can only hope, when mid-November and bronchitis (sweetened by spasmodic asthma) come, to flee to the balmy shores of the Maritime Alps. Château des Palmiers, I come. Meanwhile, while everybody is away, and London is deserted, I remain for six days a week on the metropolitan treadmill. On Saturday, however, comes a holiday; since there are no newspapers (the Observer excepted) published on Sunday. At the end of the week, then, I rush to the seaside. On Saturday week last I sped to Hayling Island; stayed there three hours; hastened to Southsea; saw a regatta; and went on to Portsmouth, returning by the last train to London and Sunday labour. (I would not break the Sabbath if people would consent to dispense with newspapers on Monday morning.)

Last Saturday I went to Tunbridge Wells. I took the London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway as far as the pretty little town of East Grinstead, in Sussex (it was a Parliamentary borough until 1832, and Mat. Prior sat for E. G. in the reign of Queen Anne). There I abandoned the train; and we drove with a pair of very cheerful horses about fifteen miles, through a ravishingly beautiful country, to the Wells. Our route lay through Old Tye (does anybody read "Brambletye House" nowadays?) and across Rusthall-common. Such ferns! Such rocks! Such hares and rabbits popping out of the dark plantations! Such undisturbed pheasants! Such exquisite prospects of hill and dale! The Righi Kulm, Interlachen, Lucerne, Mount Pilatus! Psha!

The lady who makes inquiry touching Dame Mary Shipley, the wife of Sir Charles Shipley, Knight, is informed that the heroine in question was the daughter of James Teale, Esq., of Maidstone, Kent, and Mary, daughter and co-heiress of Ralph Blomer, D.D., one of the Prebendaries of Canterbury Cathedral and Chaplain to King Charles II. Mary Shipley, née Teale, was also related, either by blood or marriage, to the illustrious families of the Bullens and the Raleighs. For further particulars of Lady Shipley see the "Cyclopædia of Female Biography," Forester, Glasgow, 1866.

So I reached Tunbridge Wells, and spent a golden afternoon there. You know how pretty, how picturesque, how fashionable, and, at the same time, how quiet and simple the dear old villeggiatura is. There is a new and handsome Pump-Room in addition to the old historic Wells; there is a new and first-class hydropathic establishment and Spa at Bishops Down Grove; the Calverley, the Royal Mount Ephraim, the Sussex, the Wellington, and the Kentish, are all excellent hotels; the band plays twice a day on the Pantiles; the drives are numerous; the surrounding scenery is simply enchanting, and the supply of clergymen and doctors is admirable, both as regards quantity and quality. Don't talk to me of your Hombourgs and Badens and Carlsbads. Be a Briton; and go to Tunbridge Wells. Next Saturday I hope to revisit St. Leonards, the Capri of England.

My "Buckstone Fund" is virtually closed; but since last Wednesday I have received, and beg thankfully to acknowledge, the following donations:—B. S. Marks, £1 1s.; G. B. F. (stamps), 4s.; Samuel Chatwood, £5; and G. W. Lloyd, £3. I scarcely think that any more money will be sent me; but I shall wait another week, and then finally close the account.

MUNICH ART-EXHIBITION.

In our last notice we glanced cursorily at the contents of the left wing of the Munich Exhibition; but German pictures are not exclusively confined to this part of the building, and will be frequently found adorning rooms belonging, strictly speaking, to the right wing. Nothwithstanding the inscriptions over the various entrances, there is no one room in the right wing which is exclusively devoted to any one nationality, and it may with truth be added that the catalogue remains yet to be compiled. The French section, for example, which many regard as the most important in the exhibition, has yet to be bodily incorporated in the catalogue; and as to the British school, not only is it absent from the printed page, but as a school it can scarcely be said to exist on the walls of the exhibition at all. A few words will suffice for the enumeration of its contents.

Sir Frederick Leighton, P.R.A., is represented by the sweet spiritual figure of "Mignon" leaning disconsolately against a wall, and by his vigorous portrait of "Captain Burton," which for character and force fairly holds its own against the "Robert Browning" of G. F. Watts, R.A., which forms a pendant to it. Mr. Watts has also a portrait of Philip Calderon, R.A.; and J. E. Millais, R.A., has the magnificent three-quarter length of Mrs. H. L. Bischoffsheim, in a richly flowered dress—a picture our readers will remember adorning the walls of the Royal Academy three seasons ago. P. Calderon, R.A., is present in his fine picture of "The Burial of Hampden," and F. Goodall, R.A., in a small finished replica of Moses being hidden by his mother among the bulrushes. The "Return of the French Soldier to his Wife and Family" has raised considerably, in the eyes of German artists, the reputation of Marcus Stone, A.R.A. "The Sculptor's Model" by Alma-Tadema, R.A., about which opinions were so conflicting when it hung in the Royal Academy, hangs here in a place of honour between "Captain Burton" and "Robert Browning;" but such artists as we have spoken with much prefer his small picture of the two lovers on the stone bench of some Italian sea-wall. H. Herkomer, A.R.A., figures in the water-colour section with two or three of his powerful portraits. This completes the list of the British section; and although each of these men is at the head of his own peculiar walk, their number is by far too limited to do anything like adequate justice to the variety and excellence of the art which elicited last year at Paris such general admiration from French painters and connoisseurs.

The Gallic authorities were rather late in giving in their adhesion to the scheme of a Munich Exhibition; but such examples of French art as we have here were well worth waiting for. There is, for example, Leon Bonnat's powerful portrait of Victor Hugo which adorned the Paris Salon of the current year. It hangs in the place of honour, having on one side the large picture of "Ploughing" by Rosa Bonheur. Above it is a very characteristic picture of an old man on his knees mending the bow of his boat. The artist is Emile Renouf, and the work has been bought by the French Government. On the other side of Victor Hugo hangs a fine autumn subject, with reapers in the foreground, by A. L. Demont, which carried off a third-class medal at the Salon, and was also the subject of the patronage of the French authorities. Another work which does credit to the discrimination of the official mind in France is Henry Mosler's "Return of the Prodigal." The father lies dead in a richly-carved box bed, with a lighted candle on each side of him, as is the custom of the Roman Church; and the son, in an agony of remorse, has thrown himself on his knees on a bench by his side; and a benign priest looks on in respectful silence. The whole interior is remarkably quaint, and the chiaroscuro is treated with much knowledge and felicity.

We need not enter into any consideration of the strong black manner of T. Ribot, who has three pictures here, nor of J. J. Henner's rather ragged way of losing his outlines. Each is a master in his own way, and their individuality must be respected. We noticed them, moreover, when treating last year of the French International Exhibition, and a similar fact has to be urged in relation to the remarkable works of W. A. Bouguereau, Jules Breton, Corot, Jules Dupré, Daubigny, and Isabey. Their respective merits, from the smooth, exquisite handling of the first to the rich colour and impetuous brush-work of the last, have been so frequently set forth that we are justified in assuming a certain familiarity with them on the part of our readers.

It may be further stated, to show how cordially the French have answered the German invitation, that Meissonier's fine picture of two horsemen galloping along a southern coast-road is here, and Cabanel's "Death of Francesca di Rimini and Paolo Malatesta"—not to mention Dubufe, Hébert, Vollon, Lefebvre, Lévy, and Robert-Fleury. Among the younger French artists, J. P. Laurens takes a prominent place. His large canvas showing the populace of Carcassonne, in 1303, under Jean de Picquigny, the reformer of Languedoc, tearing down with iron crowbars the bricked-up doors, that the prisoners of the Inquisition might be liberated, is a work of great historic merit. The monk rising on tiptoe with outstretched hands to calm the passions of the infuriated crowd is admirably introduced, and the lofty red-brick buildings of the background work in quite agreeably with the general scheme of colour adopted by the artist. With this must be classed another picture in which human passion is depicted with even greater intensity, and the laws of composition and colour illustrated with a force worthy of any master. The artist is A. N. Morot, and his picture represents the women of a Gaulish tribe defending the camp against the attack of the Roman cavalry and forcing them to retreat. The female figure on the right rushing on the foe is as fine an embodiment of a fury as we ever saw projected on canvas. The pyramidal form, moreover, into which the composition is thrown, adds much to the impressiveness of the scene. The painter is still young, and this splendid composition is the property of the French Government.

There are other works of lofty aim by young artists in the French section, such as "The Death of the Emperor Commodus," by Fernand Pelez; "Jacob at the House of Laban," by Henry Lerolle; a mural triptych of "Saint Cuthbert," by E. A. Duez; and the "Genius of Paris, under the auspices of the Republic, inviting the Nations to a Pacific Strife in Arts and Industry," a very brilliant mural work by F. Ehrmann. But we have said enough to show the character and quality of the pictorial contributions made by France. They number in all 260.

Belgian and Dutch art is so familiar to the English public that we have only to name Verhas, Mesdag, Maris, Taanman, Henckes, and De Haas to recall to the mental eye of our readers pictures of homely life, juicy meadows, and well-fed cattle, level beaches with sturdy fisher-folk, to whom the sea, whether in calm or in storm, has an ever-abiding interest.

Russia may well be satisfied with such art-representation as the powerful pencil of H. H. Siemiradski can give her. It is true, his great work of "The Living Torches of Nero" is not here; but two almost as good are on the walls—viz., the Roman Emperor hesitating between "The Rich Goblet and the Lady," and the "Shipwrecked Mendicant" asking alms of a richly-robed lady about to step into a sumptuously appointed barge. The dual empire of Austria may in like manner rest well assured that her art-interests will not suffer so long as she can point to the Hungarian Munkacsy's fine picture of "Milton Dictating 'Paradise Lost' to his Daughter," even if the great German colourist Makart be for the time absent. His grand picture, by-the-way, representing "Charles the Fifth entering Antwerp," will presently be exhibited in Munich by the Fleischmanns, and in London next season.

Since writing the above, we are happy to say that the French have issued a catalogue of their own section, which may well serve as a model to the Germans. In the catalogue of the latter, which has also now been completed, all the information vouchsafed to the reader consists in the name of the picture, of the artist, and of the city he resides in; whereas, a French catalogue invariably gives not only the name of the artist but of the place of his birth, and of the master or masters under whom he studied, and is careful to record whatever academic or other distinction he may have won. Our own Academy might well follow the admirable practice of the Salon.

As to the other nationalities, they are scarcely in sufficient force to warrant further space; and we need scarcely go into the merits of the various engravings, book-illustrations, etchings, and architectural drawings which are to be found on the tables and in the numberless recesses which run along the whole length of the building. Suffice it to say that the German people are justified in looking upon their exhibition as an undoubted success: the first edition of their very imperfect catalogue, consisting of twelve thousand copies, was exhausted in three weeks, and they confidently assert that when the season is over a handsome balance will remain in the hands of the authorities.

CUTTER YACHT RACING.

The Engraving which fills the two middle pages of this paper shows a scene that might often be witnessed on the deck of a cutter-rigged yacht, engaged in any of the popular racing contests at the Nore or in the Solent, so frequently noticed in our Journal during the months of July and August. Persons acquainted with the details of nautical equipment and management will perceive at a glance all that is here represented, and will understand what portions of the vessel, with her mast, spars, and sails, do not appear within the scope of this delineation. The reader, as spectator of the scene, is supposed to be on deck, considerably aft of the mast, and looking towards the stern, while the main boom is run far out over the port side of the vessel, so that only its extreme end, with the block to which the mainsheet is extended, can be seen at the right-hand edge of our Engraving. The "mainsheet" is not, as some landsmen would suppose, identical with the mainsail, nor is it a sheet of canvas at all; but it consists of the ropes and tackle, by which the boom that holds the bottom of the mainsail is shifted from the port side to the starboard side, or vice versâ, and the use of this tackle is the manœuvre in which the seamen are here employed. As the Vanessa—which is the name of this yacht—closely followed by one of her competitors, passes round the floating buoy that marks the limit of the racing course, having to proceed thenceforth in an opposite direction, it becomes needful instantly to make a different adjustment of the sail, her position with reference to the wind being completely altered. Hence we see all hands at once called into action; while the steersman puts the tiller hard up, to bring the vessel's head well round the buoy, the other men at the stern are vigorously "hauling in the main sheet," to bring back the boom to the vessel's side. There is a pretty light breeze on the sea, and the yachts seem just here to be lively enough, but we cannot tell how they will fare in the remainder of their course.

An official statement of the trade of British India to the close of last year has been issued. It says that tea now occupies a very prominent place in the exports from India, and there is every reason to believe that the quantity exported will increase year by year. China has for some years been sending to Australia increasing quantities of tea.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The recent improvement in the weather—we have found it, of late, as difficult to keep the weather out of our copy, as Mr. Dick did to exclude any reference to the head of King Charles I. from his—has had a most beneficial effect upon the course at Doncaster, and, in spite of some heavy rain on Monday night, it has seldom been in better condition for racing. The old town was decidedly fuller than usual, and as an immense number of horses had arrived to fulfil their engagements, there was every prospect of a grand meeting. There were one or two startling movements in connection with the great race of the week, and backers will long remember the St. Leger of 1879 with mournful feelings. The breakdown and subsequent withdrawal of Wheel of Fortune was, of course, a fearful blow, and the "plungers" had not recovered from this when Robbie Burns, one of the firmest and most genuine candidates in the race, suddenly retired to almost hopeless odds. It transpired that, before leaving his training-quarters, the colt had suddenly reared and given his near hock a bad wrench, and though he appeared at exercise late on Tuesday morning, and galloped the St. Leger course at a slow pace, his supporters appeared to have abandoned all hope of his success. It is singularly unfortunate that the only really dangerous north-country candidate should have met with an accident, for the southern stables have had matters all their own way in the St. Leger for many years past. The Fitzwilliam Stakes was, as usual, set first on the card on Tuesday, but, though there were four competitors, class was but poorly represented, and Experiment, a rather smart two-year-old in Osborne's stable, had little difficulty in upsetting the odds that were laid on Dunmow. Prudhomme (7 st. 5 lb.) cut up very badly in the Glasgow Plate, a handicap for juveniles, which fell to MacGeorge, a very neatly-named son of Macgregor and Side View. The addition of £500 to the Champagne Stakes proved most effective, as a field of twelve—the largest that has run since Napoleon III. beat eleven opponents in 1873—assembled at the starting-post. Mask was undoubtedly the best of the public performers, but it was notorious that he had been amiss since his brilliant victory in the July Stakes. Of the remainder, Glen Ronald, Evasion, Napsbury, Geraldine, Triermain, and Henry George, had all earned winning brackets, while there were great reports of the "dark" Beaudesert, a son of Sterling, who cost Lord Anglesey 1600 guineas as a yearling. Mask appeared to be winning as he liked at the distance, when we conclude that want of condition told upon him, for he suddenly stopped to nothing. This left Glen Ronald with the lead, which he held until half-a-dozen strides from the judge's box, where he was caught by Evasion, who had fairly forced her way through on the rails, and beaten rather cleverly by a neck. An objection to the winner, on the ground of bumping, was at once overruled by the stewards. Beaudesert only figured moderately; and, as Glen Ronald is a notorious roarer, we fancy that the class of the whole field, excepting Mask, whose sudden collapse is excusable, was rather "below par." Scarcely had this event been decided when eleven weighed out for the Great Yorkshire Stakes. Dresden China (6 st.) was purchased for a long price just before the race by Mr. Perkins, and she ran in his colours, starting a a very hot favourite at only 5 to 2 against her. Parole (8 st. 13 lb.) was backed freely at twice those odds, but nothing else received much support. The story of the race is soon told, for Dresden China went to the front before two hundred yards had been covered, and made the running at such a cracking pace that she had her whole field hopelessly beaten fully a quarter of a mile from home. Then she overpowered little Coates and ran away, passing the post thirty lengths in advance of Carillon (6 st. 9 lb.) and Attalus (7 st. 7 lb.), who probably gained place honours merely on sufferance, as everything began to pull up before reaching the distance. Including her 10 lb. penalty, Dresden China has now 7 st. 1 lb. to carry in the Cesarewitch, and she was at once placed at the head of the quotations for that event. The victory of Mr. Perkins was most popular, and that gentleman's colours were again to the fore in the Filly Stakes, in which his filly by The Palmer—Jenny Diver created quite a small sensation by beating Douranee, on whom odds of 4 to 1 were laid, by a head.

Had Wheel of Fortune remained sound and well there is no doubt that the field for the Leger would have been a small one, but, in the absence of the best filly that has been seen on the turf for years, everything that could raise a gallop was pulled out on the off chance, and the field of eighteen has not been equalled in number since Hawthornden scored his sensational victory in 1870. Shortly before the race Rayon d'Or went very suspiciously in the betting, but before the fall of the flag he recovered his position, and started at 3 to 1 in equal demand with Sir Bevys. After one break away the flag was lowered to a capital start. Visconti and Jessie Agnes were the first to show in front, and they were closely followed by Muley Edris, Rayon d'Or, Ruperra, and Palmbearer, at the head of the others being Sir Bevys, Alchemist, and Lansdown, while the last three away were Salteador, Protectionist, and Robbie Burns. Almost immediately they had settled down Rayon d'Or went to the front, and was quickly in possession of a clear lead, going up the hill in advance of Ruperra, Muley Edris, and Alchemist, the most prominent of the others being Palmbearer and Exeter, at the heels of the last-named pair being Visconti, Sir Bevys, and Lansdown, while Zut, Robbie Burns, and Salteador were now acting as the whippers-in. Just before disappearing from view, Alchemist drew into third place, and on reappearing in sight Rayon d'Or was still showing the way, and was in possession of a three lengths' lead of Alchemist and Ruperra, who were running side by side, behind these being Exeter, Muley Edris, Palmbearer, Lansdown, while Sir Bevys headed the remainder. Very little alteration took place in the above order as they went behind the Rifle Butts, and Rayon d'Or came into the straight with a clear lead of Ruperra and Alchemist, Exeter, Sir Bevys, and Robbie Burns and Palmbearer being next. As they passed the Half-mile Post Alchemist was beaten, as was also Sir Bevys, and Ruperra and Exeter now took second and third places. At the final bend Robbie Burns and Palmbearer were done with, and although Ruperra and Exeter were ridden out to the end, they failed to get near Rayon d'Or, who made nearly the whole of the running, and won in a canter by five lengths; a length divided the second and third; Palmbearer, Salteador, Robbie Burns, Visconti, White Poppy, Sir Bevys, and Lansdown, followed in the order named, and Marshall Scott, who broke down, was the absolute last. Thus, after a lapse of fourteen years, another French horse has won the Leger, and won it in a style well worthy of Gladiateur himself. No doubt Rayon d'Or's conformation is far better adapted to the flats of Doncaster than to the Epsom hills, and, moreover, his great frame, which was sadly unfurnished early in the spring, has now become far more thick and muscular. The Derby horses ran very moderately indeed, but Robbie Burns, in spite of his unlucky accident, showed a bold front until close home.

The yearling sales on Tuesday proved a complete "frost," as only seventeen out of the sixty youngsters that were catalogued found purchasers. Even those that were sold went at wretched prices, excepting four bred by Mr. R. Wright, which made the capital average of 395 guineas. Still it must not be forgotten that five of his team were sent out of the ring unsold. Glen Ruby (600 guineas), an own brother to Falmouth, fetched the top price of the day, though he was closely pressed by Mahomet (580 guineas), a very fine son of Speculum and Irene.

At eleven o'clock on Saturday night the six-days' bicycle-race at the Agricultural Hall was brought to a close, and G. Waller, of Newcastle, became the absolute possessor of the belt, with a splendid score of upwards of 1400 miles. For the whole week, Terront, the pluckly little French champion, had contested every yard of ground with him, and, though beaten by a few miles, deserves almost equal honour with the winner. The performances of the men all round were a great improvement upon those shown on the occasion of the last long ride, and we are convinced that the full powers of the bicycle are not even yet fully developed. We append the full score:—

	Miles.	Laps.		Miles.	Laps

Though the cricket season is virtually over, we may give an extraordinary score compiled by an eleven of Devonshire Park playing against Chiswick on Friday and Saturday last:—

It is almost needless to say that Devonshire Park won very easily.

MUSIC.

THE HEREFORD MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

The one hundred and fifty-sixth meeting of the three choirs of Hereford, Gloucester, and Worcester was inaugurated on Tuesday morning by a special service in Hereford Cathedral. The service-music included a "Te Deum" and "Benedictus" in E flat, composed by Sir Herbert Oakeley, and Wesley's fine anthem "O Lord, Thou art my God." These were rendered by the associated choirs; Mr. Lloyd, of Gloucester, having presided at the organ. The sermon special to the occasion was preached by the Rev. Canon Sidney Lidderdale Smith.

Soon after one o'clock in the afternoon of the same day, the Festival performances begun with "Elijah"; a work that has on many occasions been chosen for a similar purpose. We gave last week a summary of the arrangements and engagements for the Hereford music-meeting, and may now, therefore, confine ourselves to a record of those performances which come within the scope of this week's publication. A special feature in the rendering of "Elijah" was the co-operation of Madame Albani, this having been her first public appearance for several months. To the eminent artist just named was assigned the principal soprano solo music of the second part of the oratorio, including the air "Hear ye Israel"—and the leading part in the trio, "Lift thine eyes;" in association with Miss Anna Williams and Madame Patey. The important air just named was given with exquisite purity of voice and intonation, and with that refined taste and artistic feeling which are also well-known attributes of the excellent prima donna. The other principal solo music of the oratorio was efficiently rendered by Miss A. Williams, Mesdames Patey and Enriquez, Mr. Barton McGuckin, Mr. Cummings, and Mr. Santley. The chorus-singing was very good throughout—both in quality of tone and execution. Mr. Langdon Colborne conducted, and Mr. Done presided at the organ.

The first of the miscellaneous concerts took place in the Shirehall on Tuesday evening, and included effective orchestral performances of Weber's overture to "Der Freischütz" and Mendelssohn's "Scotch" symphony—the first movement of Beethoven's violin concerto having been executed by Mr. H. C. Cooper, who was applauded at the close of his performance. A varied selection of vocal music was contributed by most of the principal singers and the Bradford Choral Society. Mr. Langdon Colborne conducted, with the exception of the violin solo, the orchestral accompaniments of which were directed by Mr. H. Weist Hill.

We must defer until next week specific notice of the remaining performances. These consisted of Purcell's "Te Deum" in D, portions of Bach's "Christmas Oratorio," Handel's overture to "Esther," Spohr's setting of the 84th Psalm, Mozart's chorus "Pignus Futuræ," and Handel's Coronation anthem ("Zadok, the Priest"), on Wednesday morning; Mendelssohn's 95th Psalm and his Hymn "Hear my Prayer," and Rossini's "Stabat Mater" in the evening (also in the cathedral); a selection from Mr. Arthur Sullivan's oratorio, "The Light of the World," and Haydn's "Imperial Mass" on Thursday morning; the second miscellaneous concert in the evening (in the Shirehall); and the usual festival climax on Friday (yesterday) morning—Handel's "Messiah"—the chamber concert given in the Shirehall in the evening, being a supplemental performance in lieu of the ball with which the festival proceedings formerly concluded.

The official returns of the recent Birmingham Festival are not yet definitively closed. According to the latest report, the gross receipts are £11,704—a large falling off from the results of many preceding festivals.

Last year an organisation was formed, with the Prince of Wales at its head, for the establishment of a representative musical institution, "embracing in one body the most eminent practical musicians and the most influential patrons of music." It is now officially announced that the executive committee, presided over by Prince Christian, has been engaged during the year in negotiating a union between the Royal Academy of Music and the National Training School for Music, the terms being a charter of amalgamation conditional upon an annual income of at least £3000, with other advantages, being secured through the agency of the executive committee, for the purpose of carrying into effect the objects of the new institution. The Training School, through the Duke of Edinburgh, has accepted these terms; but, owing to the illness of Lord Dudley, President of the Royal Academy, the directors of that body have not yet had an opportunity of coming to a decision on the subject.

The Dutch papers state that Mr. Hullah, having finished his tour of inspection through Germany, Switzerland, Belgium, and Holland, has pronounced the latter country to be in possession of the best method for teaching singing.

The shipments of wheat from America during the past week amounted to 510,000 quarters, of which 260,000 quarters were for the United Kingdom and 250,000 for the Continent. Of maize the shipments were 158,000 quarters, nearly all for the United Kingdom.

THEATRES.

The Globe was reopened on Saturday with Planquette's melodramatic comic opera, "Les Cloches de Corneville." This wonderful work retains its attractions, notwithstanding five hundred representations, and was witnessed by a large and enthusiastic audience. New scenery and decorations have been provided, and some changes have taken place in the distribution of characters. Miss Laura Clement, as Germaine, not only acts with grace but sings with expression. Miss Clara Thompson, as Serpolette, is good; and Mr. Wilford Morgan, as the Marquis de Corneville, sings with effect. Jean Grenicheux was nicely represented by Mr. Frederic Darrell, a tenor of remarkable merit. The old miser fell to the lot of Mr. Shiel Barry. This actor also flourishes in the introductory piece, no less than Samuel Lover's farce, "The Happy Man," which is now illustrated with new music by Mr. E. Solomon. Mr. Barry's impersonation of Paddy Murphy is acceptable, notwithstanding our recollections of poor Tyrone Power.

On Monday we were invited to the Olympic to witness the introduction there of "H.M.S. Pinafore," in consequence of the Imperial Theatre being required for Miss Litton's dramatic season. The representation was in every respect satisfactory. Mr. J. G. Taylor's acting in Sir Joseph Porter was, above all, characteristically amusing; nevertheless, Miss Kate Sullivan and others did good service. The ballet of "The Fairies' Fancy Ball," recently performed at the Aquarium, was given as the after-piece, and introduced to the audience Mdlle. Cavalazzi, and Her Majesty's Opera ballet troupe; the performance was liberally appreciated.

Mr. Augustus Harris has taken Drury Lane Theatre for a term of five years, and will open at Christmas with a grand pantomime, produced under his own direction.

AGRICULTURAL.

The Earl of Carnarvon has, in consideration of the prevailing depression in agriculture, returned to the tenants of his Somersetshire and Hampshire estates 10 per cent on the amount of their rentals; and, for the same reason, Lord Ducie has intimated to his tenants on the Garsden estate, Chipping Norton, that he will at the next (the Christmas) audit return 25 per cent on the farm rentals for the half year then due, and that at the subsequent audit (Midsummer, 1880) 12 per cent will be similarly remitted. In addition to the above, Lord Ducie has returned 10 per cent on the last three half-year's rents, and in the majority of tenancies has made permanent reductions in the rentals to an appreciable amount.

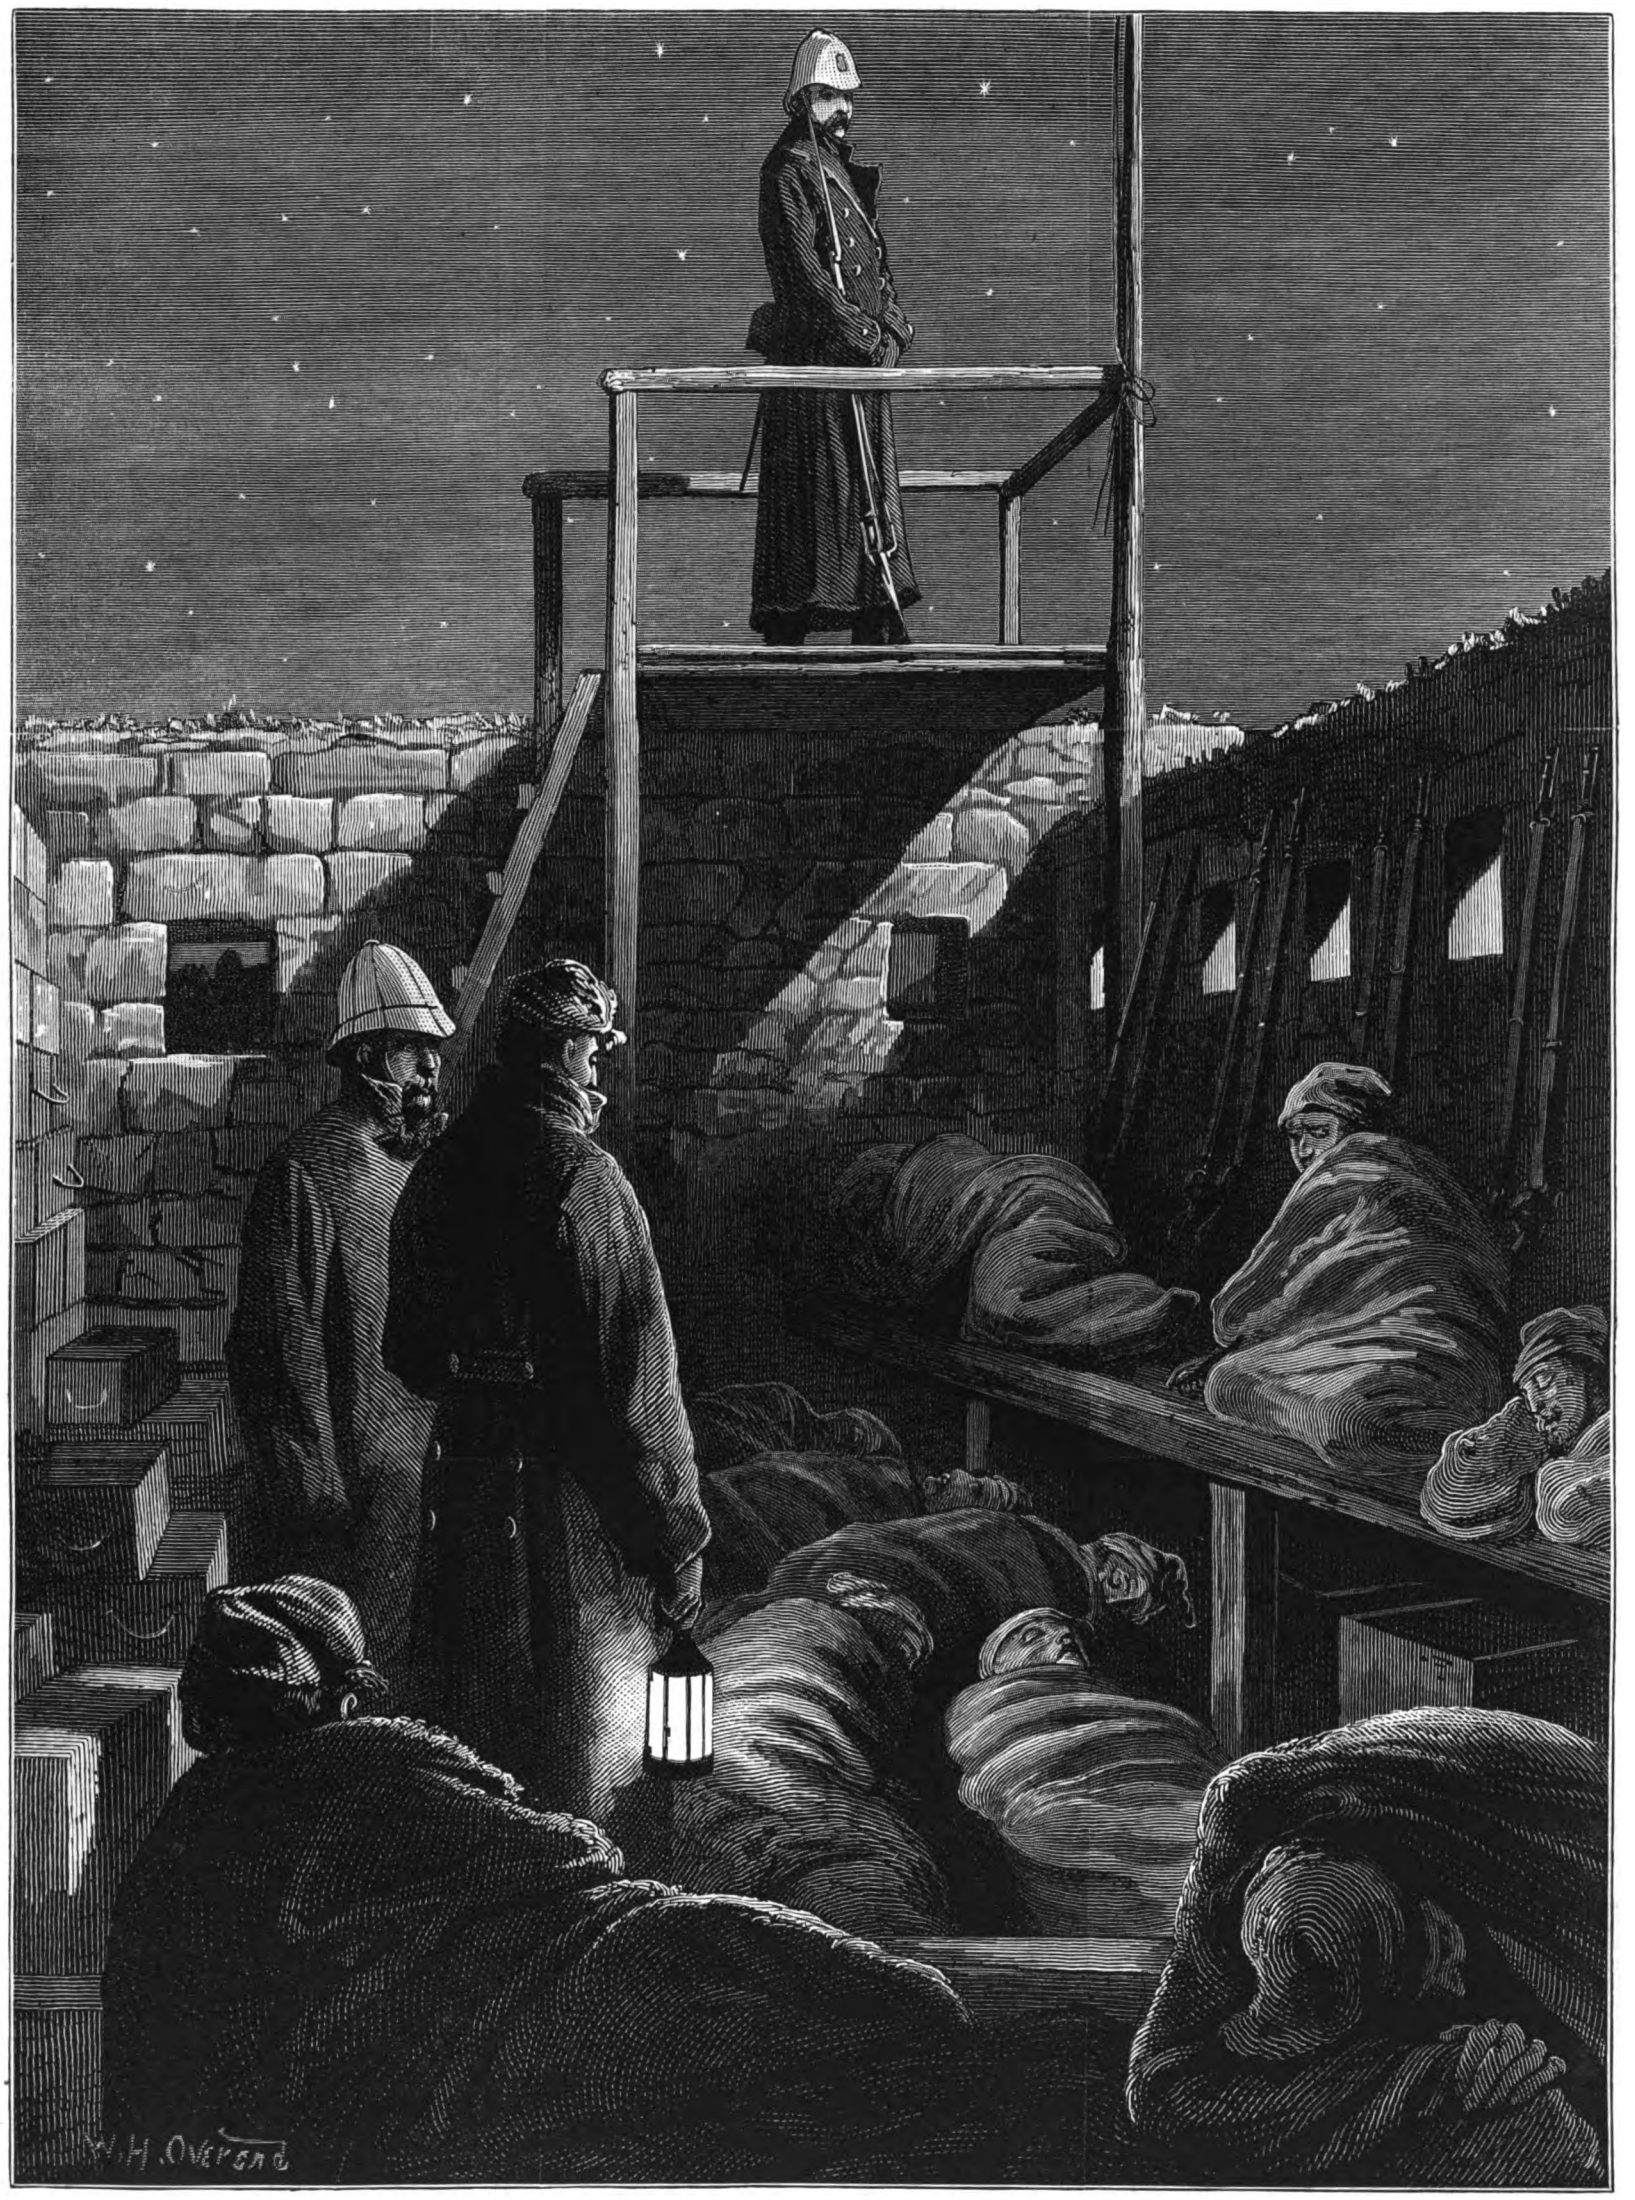
Lord Kilmorey has issued a circular to his tenants in Cheshire and Shropshire announcing that the letting of his farms will be thrown into the market to see what they will fetch, as the only means of ascertaining if their letting value has been affected by the difficulties pressing upon the agricultural interest. He trusts that the greater part of the old tenancies will be renewed, but where that is not the case care will be taken that reasonable compensation is given for unexhausted improvements. Since the issue of the circular notices to quit have been served, and it is stated that none of the tenants have applied for a renewal of their tenancies.

The annual exhibition of the Manchester, Liverpool, and North Lancashire Agricultural Society opened on the 4th inst. at Manchester, in the show-yard adjoining Belle Vue Gardens. The weather was very fine, and the show unusually large. The total sum offered in prizes was almost £3250. The number of entries was 1387 of live stock, including poultry and dogs, and farm produce, and there were also 2750 implements on view. At the dinner, which was presided over by the Earl of Ellesmere, the Hon. Wilbraham Egerton, M.P., said he believed that, with hard work, perseverance, and greater skill in farming, English agriculturists would still be able to compete with the farmers of the virgin soil of the great countries of the West.

The annual show of stock and horticultural production of the Chipping Norton, Moreton-in-the-Marsh, and Stow-on-the-Wold Agricultural and Horticultural Societies was held on the 5th inst. at Chipping Norton, and in the evening a large number of members dined at the White Hart. The President, Mr. E. W. Harcourt, M.P., was in the chair, and the Earl of Redesdale and Mr. Cartwright, M.P., were present.

The Marquis of Hartington presided at the luncheon of the Radnorshire Agricultural Society, held on the 5th inst. at Pen-y-bont. Referring to the Royal Commission on Agriculture, he said that farmers must not anticipate that the result of its labours could be the placing of any imposition on the food of the people; any changes that might be made would have to be made in the relations between landlords and tenants, and not in the relations between the agricultural interest and the general community. Some remarks which he had made in the House of Commons had been misunderstood by Lord Beaconsfield, who seemed to suppose that he had advocated an alteration in the land laws for the purpose of encouraging the growth of a peasant proprietary. There were many persons, on all sides of politics, who thought that a considerable number of small proprietors would be a great advantage, but, with the imperfect consideration which he had been able to give to the subject, he had never laid down the doctrine that the existing tenure of land in this country should be altered, or that anything should be done to encourage any other tenure. All that he wanted even inquired into was, whether there was an unnatural condition of things existing in this country tending to aggregate vast properties in the hands of a few persons, who, perhaps, had not capital enough to manage them.

In the course of a lecture on agricultural science, which Mr. Buckmaster recently delivered in the village of Broadclyst, near Exeter, he stated that the Government were willing, through the Science and Art Department, to provide a teacher in any village where a class of twenty scholars could be formed, to instruct in the nature of soils and manures, and of the principles involved in the growth of animals and vegetables.



The Summer Lean Stock Show of the Guildford Agricultural Association took place on Tuesday. Lord Onslow presided at the dinner. His Lordship, in speaking of the prospects of agriculture, said the hope of the British farmer lay in the direction of cheapening produce, and that in that respect the Legislature could assist them but little.

The annual exhibition of the Warwickshire Agricultural Society took place on Tuesday at Atherstone, and was highly successful. It was followed in the afternoon by a dinner in a spacious marquee erected on the ground. About 600 persons sat down, and Mr. W. S. Dugdale presided. The principal speakers were Lord Norton, Lord Leigh, Mr. Newdegate, M.P., Mr. B. Davenport, M.P., the Earl of Yarmouth, M.P., and Mr. Sampson Lloyd, M.P. The main topic was the depression of agriculture, and the notion of co-operation between landlord and tenant was encouraged.

The large number of 13,581 passengers left the Mersey for foreign ports in August. This number is 3804 more than in the corresponding month last year, and 2990 in excess of the number of emigrants in the month of July this year.

NEW BOOKS.

A map, an "index to local names," and a "general index" are luxuries which call for grateful acknowledgment, even before the pleasure derivable from The Home of the Eddas, by Charles G. Warnford Lock (Sampson Low and Co.), is recorded for the information of whomsoever it may seem to concern. As regards the map, it is no common map; that may at once be stated. Small it may be, but 't will serve; it was "compiled especially for the Royal Geographical Society," and "for its size it is very accurate, except in the matter of spelling the local names," a matter about which it is a question whether one reader out of a thousand will care as many as two straws. If it should be asked who the Eddas were, and where they lived, and what they did, and whether there were many of them, and what may be the meaning of the word, the answer should be, it appears, that the word means, or did mean before it became obsolete in that sense, great-grandmothers, that there are two of them, that they are literary works, that the elder of the pair "is occupied chiefly with Skald-ship-figures and forms the Ars Poëtica of the old Norse tongue," and that the younger "contains the heathen mythology of Scandinavia." And so by degrees "the home of the Eddas" is made out to be Iceland, and the words are used for the title of an extremely entertaining and useful book concerning Icelandic people, places, and things. That the book is not new, and that it belongs to the ordinary class of works written by tourists, is the conclusion which will at once be drawn — but wrongly; for the author can boast of advantages and experiences of a peculiar kind. Not many visitors have seen and described Iceland as it appears in winter; but our author, "having resided there for full twelve months, making many excursions and twice crossing the island during the thaws of early spring," had special opportunities of observing special aspects. Moreover, his "training was of the kind generally denied to passing tourists." He was compelled by circumstances, which will unfold themselves during the course of his narrative, to obtain some considerable knowledge of the language, colloquial as well as literary, and to see a great deal of the inner life of the inhabitants, having his wits sharpened by the necessity of gaining his daily bread for a while in a manner unusual among tourists. It is a pity that he has shown so little method in the arrangement of his materials, and that he has displayed a tendency towards a somewhat strained facetiousness; but, for all this, he has produced a work which is something better than merely interesting and amusing. Drunkenness and clerical scandals figure with unpleasant frequency and conspicuousness in his pages; but so, unfortunately, they appear to do in the life of the Icelanders. The book is divided into twelve chapters, of which the twelfth, devoted to a personal quarrel with a certain "reviewer," might have been omitted without much detriment; the eleventh, containing an account contributed by Dr. C. Le Neve Foster of a journey across the Sprengisandr or Burting-sand, derives importance from the reputation attributed to the gentleman who is held titularly responsible for the account; and the ninth, with its history of a "six months' winter," is for many reasons the most interesting. The reason of the author's trip to Iceland is traceable to the formation of an "expedition to explore the brimstone diggings situated in Parliament County, Iceland;" which expedition "set sail from Granton on July 6, 1875, in a Scotch steamer;" and in that "region of thick-ribbed ice" he spent the winter of 1876-7, "at Akureyri and Húsavek and at various points between them." His experience led him to make six principal deductions: the first, that the most noticeable point as regards the winter is its length, varying from six to as many as ten months in duration, though, of course, he must have been dependent upon hearsay for a part of his deductions; the second, that the winter is "exceedingly variable, frost and thaw, snow and rain, wind and calm, alternate with each other in a remarkable degree;" the third, that "the frost, as a rule, is not excessive, nor does it endure for many days at a time, but the cold is considerable on account of the wind;" the fourth, that "the snowfall, except in extraordinary years, is singularly little, seldom more than six inches fall at a time, and that usually melts away before the next fall comes;" the fifth, that "the wind is far more formidable to vegetable life than either frost or snow, and forms the greatest impediment to travel;" the sixth, that "no value can attach to any observations which are not conducted regularly and systematically in the same place, and conducted by precisely similar observations taken under identical conditions, so far as possible, at many other spots," giving an example of contradictory evidence to support his conclusion, which, however, of itself would command assent. The most useful and practical part of the book is to be found in the second of two appendices, under the significant heading of "What the tourist wants to know." Here will be found information concerning "the means by which the island may be reached;" concerning the "fares by the steamers;" concerning "maps and charts;" concerning the choice of time for a visit; concerning guides, horses, and horse-gear—such as saddles, bridles, shoes, hobbles, &c.; concerning "boxes and lodes;" concerning "tents and canteen;" concerning "beds and bedding;" concerning "clothing;" concerning "meats and drinks;" concerning "toilette and other vanities;" concerning "inns and guesting;" concerning "coin;" concerning "presents;" concerning shooting, fishing, ornithology, exploration, mail routes, and other routes, with lists and sketched-out programmes, laboriously compiled to the minutest detail. Such a work, if only it be trustworthy, of which it were gratuitous to harbour a doubt, can surely need no further recommendation.

A new volume of Stanford's Compendium of Geography and Travel (E. Stanford, Charing-cross, publisher) has recently been issued. It is devoted to Australasia, and is quite equal in value to the volumes on "Africa," and "Central America, the West Indies, and South America," which have been noticed with due commendation. This treatise on Australasia, indeed, has a higher degree of originality than either of its two predecessors. The editor or compiler, Mr. Alfred R. Wallace, tells us in his preface that it consists almost wholly of new matter. He has, instead of accepting Hellwald's work, "Die Erde und ihre Völker," for the basis of the descriptive account, rejected the greater part, and rewritten all concerning the Malay Archipelago, Australia, and the Pacific Islands. Mr. Wallace, as a traveller and naturalist, had by his personal labours done much to render us acquainted with the islands lying south-east of Asia, from which Australasian and Polynesian forms of life were probably derived. He is thereby well qualified to perform this literary task, with a scientific breadth of view that no previous writer had attained. The geographical distribution of types of animal structure is a subject of which he has gained the mastery in a degree above most of his contemporaries. It presents some questions of peculiar interest arising from a comparative survey of the fauna of the Southern hemisphere, between the Indian and the Pacific Ocean. This volume, however, is chiefly occupied with details of geography; but the accompanying chapters of natural history, geology, and botany have more than ordinary merit. The history of the European discovery of those regions, the Portuguese, Spanish, and Dutch colonisation of the Asiatic islands, the British colonisation of Australia, Tasmania, and New Zealand, and their respective provincial governments, is sufficiently related. An ethnological appendix, by Mr. A. H. Keane, traces the affinities of race among the different populations—Australian, Papuan, and Negrito, three dark types; Malay, Maori, and Micronesian, varieties of the brown stock; with a table of the nations and languages. The volume is furnished with excellent maps, including a physical and a geological map of Australasia, and one showing the depths of the ocean, besides fifteen maps of particular regions or countries. It is adorned, moreover, with a large number of woodcuts of scenery and costumes.

The troublesome and costly warfare not yet terminated on the north-eastern frontier of the British dominions in South Africa has occupied a vast share of public attention during the past six months. It is four months since the publication, by Messrs. Chapman and Hall, of a book which still holds its place as the only volume, except a small compilation by Mr. J. A. Farrer, presenting an historical account of the causes of this unfortunate war. The Zulus and the British Frontiers, by Captain T. J. Lucas, formerly of the Cape Mounted Rifles, contains much information that we believe has not yet been presented to the general reader in any other form, either by newspaper correspondents, writers in the magazines and reviews, authors of pamphlets, or lecturers and debaters upon this exciting topic of the day. For, besides giving a concise description of the geography of South-east Africa, and of the past and present condition of all the Kaffir races and nations, with the rise of the Zulu monarchy and the wars of Chaka and Dingaan, of which we have read elsewhere, Captain Lucas is enabled to throw much light upon the military and political conditions of the problem now before us. His personal experiences of frontier, garrison, and campaign duty in South Africa will appear the more instructive, if we consider the need that must henceforth be felt of a permanent provision for the defence of the eastward provinces, and for the security of British rule or ascendancy on the side of the Zulus, and of other nations or tribes which are far from being civilised. Captain Lucas, in a previous volume, "Camp Life and Sport in South Africa," related the lighter incidents of personal adventure and observation with agreeable liveliness and pleasantry of manner. He has upon this occasion sought rather to give a direction of practical utility to his account of the organisation of the frontier defence service in his time; the Cape Mounted Rifles, the different Mounted Volunteer and Burgher Corps, the Fingo auxiliary force, and the line of forts on the line of the Kei; with some remarks upon the native tactics and methods of fighting, exemplified by stirring passages of narrative, and contrasting the Zulu army with the Kaffirs of the old Colony. The state of Zululand under the reign of King Panda, with the laws, customs, habits, and characteristics of the Zulu people, occupies the next chapter; but of these matters a sufficient account was given in Mr. J. A. Farrer's little book, which we have already mentioned. A more important and original portion of the work here under notice is the historical sketch of Natal and its large Zulu population under British rule since 1848, and of the system of native administration carried on by Sir Theophilus Shepstone; with the disturbances of 1873, the affair of Langalibalele, his trial and his defence by Bishop Colenso, the severities then practised against some of the native tribes, and Sir Garnet Wolseley's brief rule in Natal in 1875, the salutary effects of which are clearly set forth. We are not aware of a connected and complete narrative of these transactions to be found anywhere but in Captain Lucas's book. The same remark is to a considerable extent true of his account of the Coronation of Cetewayo—or Ketchwhyo, as he prefers to spell the name—by the hands of Sir T. Shepstone, in 1873, which has been frequently referred to in Parliamentary debates. The precise circumstances of that singular procedure, and the formal ceremonies and declarations which attended it, have been regarded as bearing somewhat upon the alleged justification of the present war. Yet no writer upon the subject, except in this volume, has thought it worth while, apparently, to test the correctness of prevailing impressions by reference to the facts officially put on record at that time. With regard likewise to the annexation of the Transvaal, the Dutch war with Secocoeni, and the disputed boundary question between the Boers and Cetewayo, immediately preceding the act of Sir Bartle Frere in declaring war, this book is a forcible exposition of views which have been reluctantly admitted to contain too much truth, and which are by no means creditable to British Colonial Government. Captain Lucas also furnishes a sketch of the last Kaffir war against the Galekas and Gaikas on the Trans-Kei border, and some military or tactical criticisms upon the disastrous affair of Isandhlwana. His book was published before the present war had reached its later stages.

There still remain, it is said, in the forest and mountain regions of South America, some wondrous aspects of nature which have not yet become the commonplace themes of ordinary travellers' talk. Mr. J. W. Boddam-Whetham, whose volumes entitled "Pearls of the Pacific," and "Across Central America," proved acceptable reading, has now given us an account of Roraima, that marvellous rampart of white and red sandstone, with perpendicular walls 2000 feet high, crowned with a primeval forest of trees, so long regarded as inaccessible. It is situated in the interior of British Guiana, or at the confines of that province with Venezuelan and North Brazilian territory, some 300 miles inland. Mr. C. Barrington Brown, late Government Surveyor of British Guiana, who visited Roraima about ten years ago, describes it in his Canoe and Camp Life (published by E. Stanford), as well as the Kaieteur Falls and many other remarkable features of that diversified country. He thought it impossible, except by the aid of a balloon, to reach the summit of that extraordiuary natural fortress. Mr. Boddam-Whetham's experience is such as to confirm this opinion; but he wished to make the attempt, so he went out to Demerara at the beginning of last year, and joined a colonial government expedition with that enterprising object. His new book, Roraima and British Guiana (Hurst and Blackett) contains not only the interesting narrative of the two-months' excursion there, but many particulars of travelling and sojourning on what old English adventurers used to call "The Spanish Main," including the towns of La Guaira and Caracas, besides the British island of Trinidad and one or two more places in the West Indies, and with Bermuda on the outward voyage. He has a fresh and lively style of delineation, and the faculty of distant observation, which enable him to present these subjects in an entertaining manner.

Our Australian colonies now form a social and political world of their own, which has already grown to such importance that its history and biography deserve to be set forth in print. We are not surprised to meet with an Australian Dictionary of Dates and Men of the Time, the London publishers of which are Messrs. S. W. Silver and Co., of Cornhill (at Sydney, Mr. George Robertson, Pitt-street). This convenient work of reference is compiled by Mr. J. H. Heaton, of Sydney, and will bear comparison with similar works for English contemporary service. The notices of "Men of the Time," or recent public characters, extend to nearly 224 pages, with about three names disposed of upon each page, including not only the men actually settled in Australia, but those who, like Mr. Lowe and Mr. Childers, the late Rev. Dr. Binney, or the late William Howitt, were for a time resident there. Tasmania and New Zealand are included in the scope of this account, and likewise of the "Dictionary of Dates," which is on the plan of Haydn's, combining with it the same kind of information that is furnished by the "Companion to the British Almanac." We should consider the volume indispensable for any careful study of colonial affairs. But we notice some important omissions—more especially of New Zealand public men—the names of Wakefield and Fox being omitted.

THE ZULU WAR.

Three further Illustrations of this subject, from sketches by our Special Artist, have been engraved for the present number of our Journal. One of them is an interior view of the old post at Rorke's Drift, which was hastily converted into a fort by Major Chard, R.E., V.C., and Major Gonville Bromhead, V.C., of the 24th Regiment, then simply Lieutenants, on the night of Jan. 22, and which they held, with scarcely a hundred men under their command, during twelve hours and through that terrible night, against not less than three thousand Zulus, emboldened to the attack by their recent destruction of the British force at Isandhlwana. The new fort on the same site, which has been constructed by the Royal Engineers and other troops forming its garrison, contains a particular quarter named "Bromhead's Post," to commemorate the place where that brave officer took his stand on Jan. 22, while engaged in directing the little garrison to repel the frequent assaults of that overwhelming multitude of foes. Not far distant from the ford over the Buffalo river, which is called Rorke's Drift, another fort has been erected, which bears the name of Lieutenant Teignmouth Melvill, the young officer who carried off the regimental colours of the 24th from Isandhlwana, and who was intercepted and slain by the enemy near this place.

The troops at Aldershott marched out on Tuesday to Sandhurst, where they went through a sham fight.

The Badenoch and Rothiemurchus Highland games took place at Kingussie on the 5th inst., and were highly successful.

Dr. Grimshaw has been appointed to the office of Registrar-General of Ireland, rendered vacant by the death of Dr. Burke.

The ship Strathleven, 1588 tons, Captain Pearson, chartered by the Agent-General for New South Wales, sailed from Plymouth for Sydney on the 4th inst., with 575 emigrants.

The Hon. Lionel Sackville West, who has been on a two-months' leave of absence, has returned to Madrid to resume his diplomatic duties as British Minister at the Spanish Court.

There was a field-day on Woolwich-common on Monday, the Royal Horse Artillery, in command of Colonel Andrews, and the field batteries, in command of Colonel Fitz-Hugh, taking part in the review.

Mr. Edward Baines, the veteran journalist of Leeds, celebrated his golden wedding on Tuesday, and was presented with a congratulatory address from 200 of the employees of the Leeds Mercury.

The life-boat John Stuart, belonging to the National Life-Boat Institution, stationed at St. Dogmael's, was launched on Tuesday to the assistance of the schooner Ellen Beaumaris, in Cardigan Bay, and brought the vessel's crew safely ashore.

At a meeting of the Edinburgh Town Council on Tuesday it was resolved, on the motion of Treasurer Harrison, to invite the Social Science Congress to hold their meeting next year in Edinburgh.

As a result of the magisterial inquiry into the charges against the directors and manager of the West of England Bank, of which the case for the prosecution closed last Saturday, Mr. Selwyn Payne, one of the defendants, was dismissed. The defence of the other accused was begun on Wednesday.

St. George's Chapel, Windsor Castle, which has been closed for cleaning since July 21, will be re-opened for Divine Service on and after the 21st inst. The Albert Memorial Chapel is open to the public on Wednesdays, Thursdays, Fridays, and Saturdays. The State apartments will continue to be shown until the return of the Court from Scotland on the usual days—Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays.

The Home Secretary has remitted the penalties recovered in the action of "Girdlestone v. the Brighton Aquarium Company," stating that the changes introduced by the Aquarium Company in the opening of that establishment on Sundays are such as to render it unobjectionable on the score of public morality, whilst it is a source of innocent and instructive amusement.

The granite for the New Eddystone Lighthouse, of which we gave an Illustration two or three weeks since, is supplied by Messrs. Shearer, Smith, and Co., proprietors of the Dalbeattie quarries, and not from quarries at Oreston, near Plymouth. At Oreston there are no quarries, but merely a yard for the reception of the granite already dressed and ready for the building. The whole of the granite is got from the quarries of that firm at De Lank and Dalbeattie, and is dressed and fitted in their yard at Wadebridge.

The Inspector of Reformatory and Industrial Schools, in his annual report, makes special reference to the law regulating the admission of children above ten years of age to reformatories, which requires that they be previously sent to serve ten days' imprisonment. He suggests that the age should be raised to twelve years, offenders below that age to be sent to industrial schools. The advantages of this would be twofold—the lessened cost of maintenance, and the moral benefit to the youth from not being too early associated with older and more hardened offenders.

Twelve sets of heliographs have been sent out from the Royal Arsenal at Woolwich to Sir Garnet Wolseley, the successful signalling between the Lower Tugela and Ekowe having given an enormous impetus to army signalling. Heliographic messages have been exchanged between Sl.ooter's Hill and the Essex Hills, a distance of fifty miles. A few nights ago a "heliogram" was transmitted from the Crystal Palace to Woolwich Common by moonlight. This mode of signalling has also been successfully accomplished at night by throwing light from strong reflecting lamps on to the disc.

The Countess of Noailles on Tuesday was sailing in her canoe from Holywell to Eastbourne, when she was capsized. She was, however, rescued by the occupants of a larger boat that was in attendance upon her.—A gallant rescue was effected by four daughters of Mr. Prideaux Brune, of Prideaux Place, Padstow, formerly High Sheriff of Cornwall. A boat containing three sailors and a boy was caught by a squall, sailing in Padstow Harbour, and sunk. The Misses Brune immediately rowed to the spot, and saved one of the men and the lad, but the two others, Thomas Gerratty and Henry Scammell, were drowned.

THE EDISON TELEPHONE EXCHANGE.

Mr. Edison discovered in 1872 that a strip of paper, moistened by a chemical solution which could be decomposed by an electric current, became smoother when such a current was passed through it, regaining its roughness when the current was withdrawn. If the paper, connected with one pole of an electric battery and pressed down by a strip of platinum connected with the other pole, were drawn uniformly over a metal base it would slip when a current was transmitted. Thus able to communicate motion to a distance without an electro-magnet, Mr. Edison has applied the principle to the telephone, substituting a cylinder of chalk for the strip of paper.

A successful trial of the instrument was made in London last Saturday before several scientific gentlemen, a central station in Lombard-street being connected with ten others in the City. At this central station any two of the others can be connected together by the shifting of a pin, numbers on a switch-board indicating to the operator at the centre the station at which is the person who wishes to communicate with another. Words spoken in a loud tone can be heard throughout the room where the receiver is situated, but a whisper can be heard only by the person at the instrument.

The apparatus itself is described by the Times to consist of the cylinder of chalk, which is mounted upon a spindle capable of being rotated by a small cranked handle. Attached to the centre of a disc of mica is a brass strip faced with platinum, which projects over the cylinder, and is made to press upon it by means of a spring. The wires are so attached that the electric current is made to pass from the brass strip to and through the chalk cylinder at the point of contact, which is, of course, the point of friction. Upon turning the handle, so as to rotate the cylinder outwards from the face of the disc, the friction between the cylinder and the strip will draw the centre of the disc inwards, giving it a curved face. If an impulse of electricity be passed over the wire, the friction between the strip and the cylinder will be destroyed, and the disc will regain its normal position of the true plane. If a variable or undulatory current of electricity be transmitted through the instrument, the diaphragm will be kept in continual motion by the constantly varying friction existing between the chalk and the platinum dragging the diaphragm in opposition to its own constant elastic tension. This simple mechanical arrangement is wonderfully sensitive to the smallest as well as to the most rapid and complicated variations in electrical intensity taking place in the transmitted current.

EISTEDDFOD AT CARDIFF.

The first National Eisteddfod held in Cardiff since 1834 was opened on the 3rd inst., in a large marquee, capable of seating 6000 persons, erected in Cathays Park, which had been kindly lent by the Marquis of Bute. As had been anticipated, the opening of the Eisteddfod was most successful. The railway companies made special arrangements for the accommodation of visitors, and the number of excurtionists from all parts of Wales was very large. The Gorsedd was opened at nine o'clock. About half-past eight o'clock a procession of bards walked to the park, preceded by a brass band. They proceeded to a cluster of fine trees, nearly in the centre of the park, where the Gorsedd was opened in the usual manner, and according to ancient rites and customs. Shortly before eleven o'clock another procession escorted the chairman of the day, Mr. W. J. Stradling Carne. By this time the large pavilion was nearly filled. A band of eight harps and a flourish of trumpets saluted the chairman on his taking his seat on the platform, and the band then played "The March of the Men of Harlech." The chairman, Mr. J. W. Stradling Carne, delivered an address at the opening of the proceedings, in which he reviewed, first the antiquity of Eisteddfodan, the great means they had of cultivating among the Welsh a love for music, and the result had been that love for music still remained among the Welsh. There were many men whose names were illustrious who had first become known through the medium of those Eisteddfodan. They had also been the means of introducing a cultivation of literature, and this had extended to other subjects; so that the Eisteddfodan of the present day embraced many other things than the cultivation of music, for which it was originally intended, but all the modern subjects were those tending to the moral and intellectual improvement of the Welsh people. The chairman's prize, £20, was awarded to the Rev. Gurnos Jones, of Rhondda Valley, for the best ode on "Instinct," and he was during the day installed in the chair with all the ancient rites of the bards of the Isle of Britain. A prize of £10 10s., given by Mr. L. Jones and friends, for the best epic poem to Sir Nicholas Kemeys, the captor and defender of Chepstow Castle, was divided between D. W. Jones, Hirwain, and Rees D. Morgan, Llanelly. Prize £5 5s. was awarded to the Rev. David Edmond, of Aberdare, for the best essay on the importance and advantages of friendly societies to the community, and the principles upon which they should be established to secure their permanent usefulness. The Llantrissant fife and drum band carried off the prize of £5, for the best rendering of three Welsh airs. Eight choirs competed for the prize of £5, given by Mr. W. E. R. Evans, Cardiff, for the best singing of Dr. Parry's new serenade, dedicated to Lord Aberdare. In the evening the Cardiff Choral Society, assisted by Madame Edith Wynne, Miss S. A. Williams, Miss Gertrude Lewis, Eos Morlais, Mr. Lucas Williams, with a full band, gave Haydn's "Creation." The marquee was crowded, and the performance, on the whole, most successful.

On the second day Mr. E. J. Reed, M.P., presided, and gave an address on the refining influence of literature, poetry, and music upon people of all times. He said that he regarded the Eisteddfod as well calculated to prolong the existence of and regard for the language, poetry, and music of the Welsh nation, but he would, however, recommend in addition the study of the English language. The Dean of Llandaff (Dr. Vaughan) also spoke in support of Eisteddfodan. The chief competition was for a prize of £100 for the best rendering by choirs not exceeding 300 voices of the chorus "The people shall hear and be afraid" ("Israel in Egypt"). Three choirs competed—the Aberdare Choral Union, the Llansamlet and Skewen choir, and the Taibach choir. The prize was awarded to the Taibach choir. There were about 8000 persons present.

A REMARKABLE CLOCK.

There is now on exhibition in Detroit, Michigan, a clock (the work of Mr. Felix Meier, a mechanic) which is said to eclipse the famous clock at Strasburg in complexity and interest. It stands 18 ft. in height, and is inclosed in a black walnut frame, elaborately carved and ornamented. The crowning figure is that of "Liberty," on a canopy over the head of Washington, who is seated on a marble dome. The canopy is supported by columns on each side. On niches below, at the four corners of the clock, are four human figures representing "Infancy," "Youth," "Manhood," and "Age;" each has a bell in one hand and a hammer in the other. The niches are supported by angels with flaring torches, and over the centre is the figure of Father Time. At the quarter-hour the figure of the infant strikes its tiny bell; at the half-hour the figure of the youth strikes his bell of louder tone; at the third quarter, the man strikes his bell; and at the full hour the gray beard. Then the figure of Time steps out and tolls the hour, as two small figures throw open doors in the columns on either side of Washington, and a procession of the Presidents of the United States follows. As the procession moves, Washington rises and salutes each figure as it passes, and it in turn salutes him. They move through the door on the other side, and it is then closed behind them. The procession moves to the accompaniment of varied music played by the clock itself. The mechanism also gives the correct movement of the planets round the sun, comprising Mercury, which makes the revolution once in 88 days; Venus, in 224 days; Mars, in 686 days; Vesta, in 1327 days; Juno, in 1593 days; Ceres, in 1681 days; Jupiter, in 4332 days; Saturn, in 29 years; Uranus, in 84 years. As these movements are altogether too slow to be popularly enjoyed, the inventor has added a device by which he can hasten the machinery to show its working to the public. There are dials which show the hour, minute, and second in Detroit, Washington, New York, San Francisco, London, Paris, Berlin, Vienna, St. Petersburg, Constantinople, Cairo, Pekin, and Melbourne. The clock also shows the day of the week and month in Detroit, the month and season of the year, the changes of the moon, &c. It is said that Mr. Meier has worked on his clock nearly ten years, and for the last four years devoted his whole time to it.

THE PHYSICAL BASIS OF LIFE. GOOD FOOD.
HOW to assimilate or enjoy good food, that would otherwise cause constipation, bilious headache, disordered stomach, and other disasters, use ENO'S FRUIT SALT; being a genuine product of nature, it is a true or natural way of preserving and restoring health. It removes effete matter or poison from the blood, thus preventing and throwing off fevers, boils, and other morbid conditions of the blood. On that account you cannot overstate its great value in keeping the blood pure and free from disease; without such a simple precaution the jeopardy of life is immensely increased. 4s. 6d.

"ROUND THE WORLD IN SIX MONTHS."
By Lieutenant-Colonel E. S. BRIDGES, Grenadier Guards. In a list of what to take with you is given ENO'S FRUIT SALT. See page 238.

DON'T go to Sea without a Bottle of ENO'S FRUIT SALT.

ENO'S FRUIT SALT.
"From a Town in British Guiana, South America, Dec. 5, 1878.
"J. C. Eno, Esq., London.
"Sir,—After two years' trial of your excellent FRUIT SALT, I can safely say that it has saved me much misery from colonial fevers, indigestion, and impaired appetite, to which I have been subject during eleven years' residence in the tropics.
"It is invaluable to travellers as a preventive of seasickness, and a relief from the other ailments of life aboard ship; and, for myself, I would as soon think of going a voyage without my tooth-brush as my bottle of FRUIT SALT. With ordinary care, it does not get hard and caked, as other effervescent preparations do in warm and humid climates, and this is greatly in its favour.
"I am, Sir, yours respectfully, "W. J. B."

"SUCCESS IN LIFE."—A new invention is brought before the public, and commands success. A score of ABOMINABLE IMITATIONS are immediately introduced by the unscrupulous, who, in copying the original closely enough to deceive the public, and yet not so exactly as to infringe upon legal rights, exercise an ingenuity that employed in an original channel could not fail to secure reputation and profit.—ADAMS. CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see the capsule is marked "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without it you have been imposed on by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists. Price 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. Prepared only at ENO'S FRUIT SALT WORKS, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. Eno's Patent.

FER BRAVAIS (Bravais' Dialysed Iron). Used in every Hospital. Recommended by all Physicians. For Anæmia, Chlorosis, Debility, Exhaustion, &c. FER BRAVAIS (liquid iron in concentrated drops) is the only one entirely free from acid; it is without smell, tasteless, and produces neither constipation, diarrhœa, inflammation, nor fatigue in the stomach; it is besides the only iron that never blackens the teeth. It is the cheapest of all Ferruginous Compounds, as a bottle of it lasts a month. General Depot in Paris, 13, Rue Lafayette (near the Opera); and at all Chemists. Beware of dangerous imitations, and see that the Trade Mark is on every Bottle, which can be had of all Chemists in the United Kingdom. An interesting Pamphlet on "Anæmia and its Treatment," sent free on demand (post-paid).—London: 8, Idol-lane, E.C., R. Bravais and Co. (Depôt and Agency For Bravais); and at Barclay and Sons', Farringdon-street; Roberts and Co., New Bond-street; and Jozeau's, Haymarket.

SOZODONT.—The Peerless liquid Dentifrice. Its use imparts the most fragrant breath; it beautifies, cleanses, and preserves the teeth in a surprising manner. It gives a delightfully fresh taste and feeling to the mouth, removing all Tartar and Scurf from the Teeth, completely arresting the progress of decay, and whitening such parts as have already become black by decay or neglect. Impure Breath caused by Bad Teeth, Tobacco, Spirits, or Catarrh, is neutralised by Sozodont. The price of the Fragrant Sozodont is 3s. 6d., put up in large bottles, fitted with patent sprinkler, for applying the liquid to the teeth and gums. Each bottle is inclosed in a handsome toilet box. Sold by all Chemists and Perfumers, and by JOHN M. RICHARDS, Great Russell-street, London. Observe the Name SOZODONT on the label, box and bottle.

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.

Physician to the Westminster Hospital.
"The value of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL as a therapeutic agent in a number of diseases, chiefly of an exhaustive character, has been admitted by the world of medicine; but, in addition, I have found it a remedy of great power in the treatment of many Affections of the Throat and Larynx, especially in Consumption of the latter, where it will sustain life when everything else fails."

DR. PROSSER JAMES,
Lecturer on Materia Medica, London Hospital.
"DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL contains the whole of the active ingredients of the remedy, and is easily digested. Hence its value, not only in Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, but in a great number of cases to which the Profession is extending its use."

LENNOX BROWNE, Esq., F.R.C.S.E.,
Senior Surgeon Central London Throat and Ear Hospital.
"The action of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL has proved, in my own experience, particularly valuable, not only in those diseases for which it was originally employed, but also in many cases of Weakness of the Singing and Speaking Voice, dependent on Bronchial or Laryngeal Irritation, and in all forms of Strumous Enlargement of Glands, and Discharges from the Ear."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S.,
Late Staff Surg., Army, Prof. of Hygiene, Birkbeck Institution.
"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of "hydro-carbons" in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognised."

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL is sold ONLY in capsuled IMPERIAL Half-Pints, 2s. 6d.; Pints, 4s. 9d.; Quarts, 9s.; by all respectable Chemists and Druggists throughout the World. SOLE CONSIGNEES, EPPS'S NEW MILLS.

"Building News" says:—"These extensive premises have a total frontage to Holland-street, Blackfriars, of about 320 ft. The heights from the semi-basement floor to the parapets vary from 60 ft. to 72 ft., while the clock-tower stands about 110 ft. above road level, the whole forming an imposing building, whether viewed from the River Thames or the bustling thoroughfare. The total area of the various floors, &c., amounts to nearly two acres, while the area of glass in the windows is about 11,000 ft.

EPPS'S COCOA.—"Civil Service Gazette" says:—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast-tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage, which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly-nourished frame."

EPPS'S COCOA.—"All the Year Round" says:—"Having now disposed of fancy chocolate, let us stroll to Holland-street, Blackfriars, to Epps's cocoa manufactory, where may be studied the making of cocoa on a stupendous scale, giving a just idea of the value of these articles, not as luxuries, but as actual food."

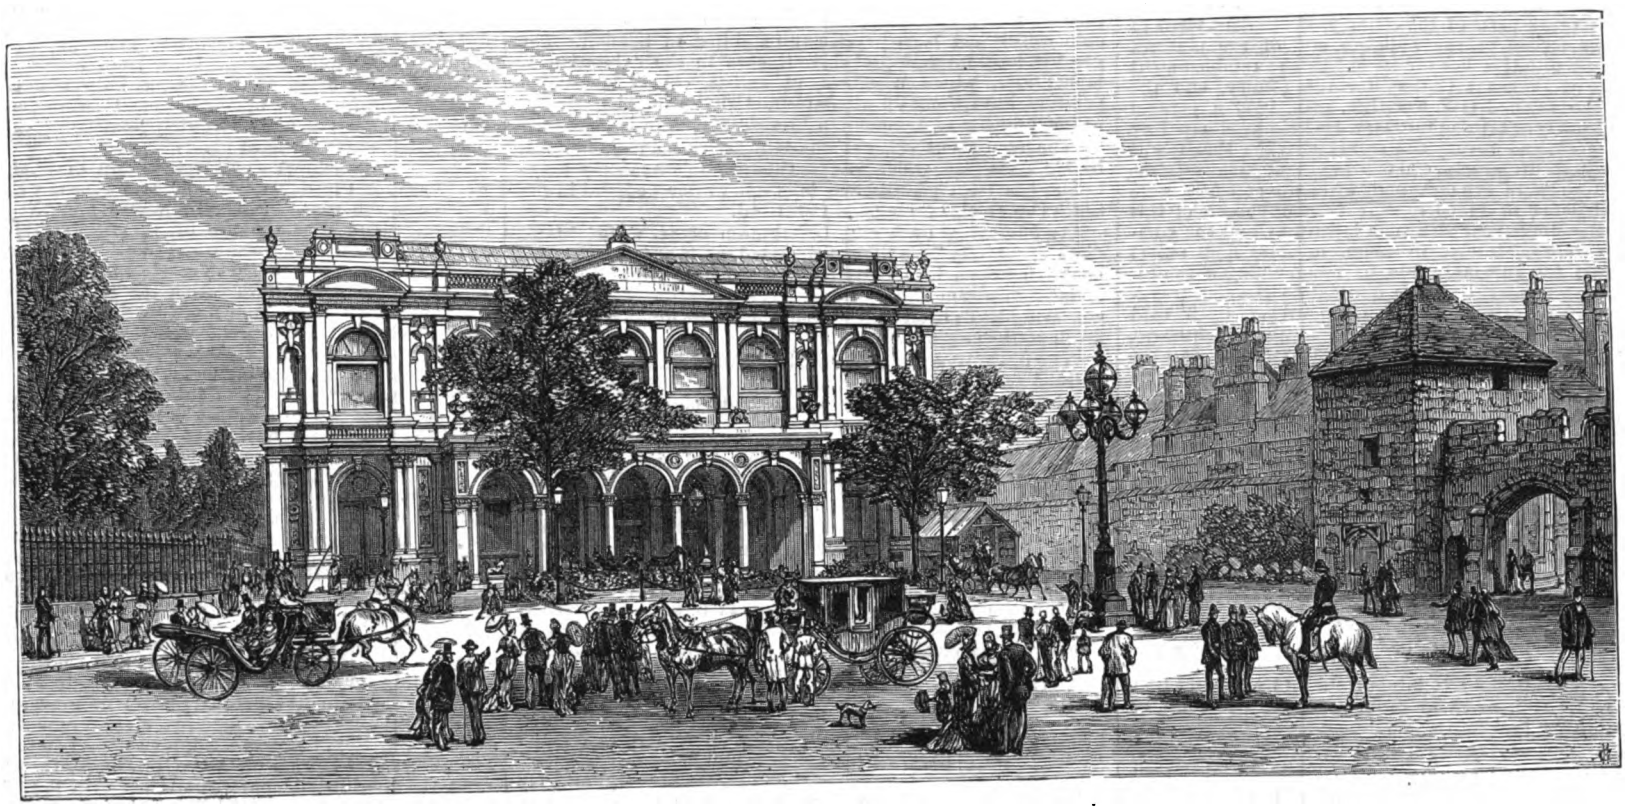
EPPS'S COCOA.—"Land and Water" says:—"Through the kindness of Messrs. Epps, I recently had an opportunity of seeing the many complicated and varied processes the cacao bean passes through ere it is sold for public use; and, being interested and highly pleased with what I saw during my visit to the manufactory, I thought a brief account of the cacao and the way it is manufactured by Messrs. Epps to fit it for a wholesome and nutritious beverage might be of interest to the readers of 'Land and Water.'"

EPPS'S COCOA.—"Court Journal" says:—"In a climate so varying and trying as our own to maintain sound and uniform health, our daily diet cannot be too carefully and attentively studied. Advancing science and recent discoveries have within the last few years been instrumental in adding several most valuable additions to our comparatively short list of dietetic foods. Foremost amongst these should be ranged cocoa, which, although known here several centuries previously, only came into general use within the last forty years. One of the first to popularise this now indispensable adjunct to our table was Mr. James Epps, whose 'Prepared Cocoa' has gained such just repute for its excellent and nutritious character. Prepared originally on homœopathic principles, in a soluble and convenient form, and easy of digestion, it met a public demand, speedily became popular, until now Messrs. Epps produce over five millions of pounds of their cocoa a year, and their manufactory is the largest of its kind in this country."

EPPS'S COCOA.—"Cassell's Household Guide" says:—"We will now give an account of the process adopted by Messrs. James Epps and Co., manufacturers of dietetic articles, at their works in Holland-street, Blackfriars, London."

EPPS'S COCOA.—"John Bull" says:—"In no branches of industry are recent scientific and chemical discoveries more generally applied than in those upon which our food supply is so largely dependent. The luxuries of the last generation have in many cases become the daily necessaries of the present. A forcible illustration of this is to be found in the enormous increase in the consumption of cocoa year by year—in exact proportion to the increased facilities for its manufacture. An idea of the vast extent of this industry may be gained from the fact that one firm alone—that of Messrs. Epps and Co.—now sell over five millions of pounds annually. The 'Homœopathic Cocoa' of Messrs. Epps has, during the many years it has been before the public, gained great and just repute, which its excellent quality and careful preparation certainly entitle it to. A cocoa in soluble form, and combining, what are technically known as 'flesh-forming' and 'heat-giving' properties, is clearly an invaluable addition to our scanty list of dietetic foods. Such Messrs. Epps claim for their prepared cocoas, and such analysis and—most valuable of all—experience has proved it to be."

EPPS'S COCOA.—"Christian World" says:—"'If I am to take cocoa,' said I, 'I must know what it is made of; I must examine the process; I must dive into the mystery of its manufacture; I must see and judge for myself what are the ingredients of which it is composed. With this view I made my way to the manufactory of James Epps and Co., in Holland-street, Blackfriars.'"



EPPS'S COCOA.—"Family Herald" says:—"The best makers—such as Messrs. Epps—sell a pure preparation."

TRANSVAAL.
The following interesting letter, addressed to the firm of JAMES EPPS and CO., has just come to hand:—
"Gentlemen,—Five years and a half ago I bought in Cape Town a case of your Cocoa, and started with my family for this country. During five months' travelling we experienced scorching heat, biting cold, floods of rain, and frightful droughts; in fact, we passed through all possible atmospheric changes. Almost daily we used for breakfast your Cocoa, and since our settlement here we did the same from time to time, until a few days ago we finished the last of the 420 packets contained in the case. I have now much pleasure in stating to your satisfaction that we have not only found your Cocoa most grateful and comforting for old and young, but also that the last packet was just as good and sound as the first, after so many years' keeping, whilst the products of other makers showed extreme decay after a few months only. In making this statement I solely have in view to render full justice to those who deserve it, now that so many adulterations of food are sent out to the colonies by unprincipled firms. You are at full liberty to make use of the above statement, requesting only not to publish my name.—Estate Roschdal near Rustenburg, Transvaal."

YORKSHIRE FINE-ART AND INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION.

This Exhibition has now been open some months, and will remain open six weeks longer. To draw further attention to its attractions before the close, and to indicate the encouragement which its success presents to the formation of similar exhibitions in other parts of the country, we present views of the handsome façade of the building and of the picture-gallery. The Exhibition has for its object the establishment of a permanent Fine-Art Gallery for the county, and the history of the scheme is interesting. In 1866 a general exhibition of works of art and industry was held in a temporary building in York, and during the eighty-six days that it was open was visited by nearly 400,000 persons. The receipts from all sources were £13,000, and, after all expenses were paid, a net balance of £1866 remained. The success of this experiment encouraged the idea of a repetition, and the committee, who were continued in office, in their final report suggested that the surplus would be best employed in providing some permanent building devoted to the encouragement of art and industry. It was not, however, until 1874 that the subject was revived, and then the site of the present permanent building was leased for 999 years, at a cost of £4000. A loan fund of £14,000 was subsequently raised by the citizens, and the foundation-stone of the building was laid in April, 1878. It consists of two portions, and includes a great hall, 200 feet by 90 feet, and a large lecture-room. The floor of the great hall and a portion of the galleries are filled with a display of manufactured goods, embracing almost all departments of trade. The total cost incurred is £24,000. The principal feature of the Exhibition is the fine-art department, which, under the management of Mr. W. H. Hargrove, has been rendered exceptionally attractive. The number of works of art exhibited amounts to 1771; many of them are by celebrated artists, and good taste is displayed in the hanging. The collection includes the fine pictures and statuary rescued from the fire some months back at Duncombe Park. The public appreciation of the Exhibition is shown by the fact that the number of visitors already probably falls little short of that reached in the first exhibition.

Professor Huxley's long-expected "Introductory Primer" of the Sciences is in the press, and will be published by Messrs. Macmillan and Co. in the course of the autumn.

A lighthouse is about to be constructed at Anvil Point, off the Dorset coast, at Swanage. The contract for the work has been taken by Mr. Clarke, of Bournemouth. The dangers of the coast have often been pointed out, the life-boat crew stationed at Swanage having been frequently called out during gales. The work has been recommended by the National Life-Boat Institution.

An influential committee, of which Earl Sydney, Lord Lieutenant of the county of Kent, is president, has been formed with the object of erecting on Chiselhurst-common a memorial to the memory of the late Prince Imperial, the subscription to the fund being limited in amount to two guineas each person. The treasurer and hon. secretary to the movement is Mr. T. R. Watt, The Briars, Chiselhurst.

The Corporation of Barrow-in-Furness opened last week a new reservoir, constructed by them at Pennington, near Ulverston, of an area of twenty-five acres, and a holding capacity of 120,000,000 gallons. The reservoir is connected with the original waterworks at Poaka Beck by a tunnel; and the Corporation now own reservoir accommodation for a population of 80,000 people. The new works will not only supply Barrow, but Dalton, Ulverston, and other parts of Furness district. The cost of the new reservoir is £32,000.

A commission lately appointed by the Prussian Government to investigate the best class of inks to be employed for official purposes have just presented their report. They state that aniline inks are not suited for this purpose, because they can be easily washed away, especially by preparations of chlorine. Inks in the composition of which alizari (Adrianople red) is employed can be obliterated less easily. But they are of opinion that the best of all is that made from gall nuts, and recommend that it shall be used for official purposes and for all documents the preservation of which is of importance.

In February last a French vessel named L'Ange was wrecked near the Porthcurnow terminus of the Eastern Telegraph Company, when four members of the staff, Messrs. J. E Smythe, Horatio Pritchard, H. S. Perry, and W. Leigh, were instrumental in saving the lives of the crew. Their services having been represented to the Royal National Life-Boat Institution and to the French Government, the former has presented them with a vote of thanks and the French Government with gold medals, which have just been received through the Foreign Office. Mr. Ash, the superintendent at the Porthcurnow station, has been thanked for the care bestowed on the sailors.

Appended is a list of candidates who have been successful in obtaining in the Science and Art Department Royal Exhibitions of £50 per annum each for three years and free admission to the course of instruction at the following institutions:—1. The Royal School of Mines, Jermyn-street, London.—Joseph P. Walton, 23, clerk, Middlesbrough; John E. Green, 17, student, Bristol; Charles H. Powell, 16, student, Bristol. 2. The Royal College of Science, Dublin.—Joseph B. Coleman, 20, warehouseman, Nottingham; Henry O. Minty, 15, student, Cheltenham; John W. Mackenzie, 20, engineer, Cheadle; Henry G. Jordan, 21, engineer, Manchester, appointed to fill a vacancy for one year.

The quarterly county conferences of the pastors and delegates of the English Congregational Churches of North Wales are in course of being held. The meetings for Carnarvonshire were held on Monday at Penmaenmawr; for Denbighshire on Tuesday at Mold; for Montgomeryshire on Wednesday at Welshpool; and that for Merionethshire will be held next week at Corwen. The draught of the new constitution of the North Wales English Congregational Union, rendered necessary by the contemplated affiliation of the Union with the Congregational Church Aid Society, has been discussed at these district meetings preparatory to the annual assembly of the Union, which is to be held at Bangor in October.

The arrivals of American and Canadian meat and live stock last week were—The Iberian, with 240 cattle, 1138 sheep, and 259 pigs; the Texas, with 255 cattle and 1000 sheep; the Nestorian, with 154 cattle and 1753 sheep; the Minnesota, with 428 cattle and 725 sheep; the Dominion, with 200 cattle and 1524 sheep; the City of Bristol, with 440 cattle and 130 pigs; and the Lord Clive, with 130 cattle. With fresh meat the steamers were the Lord Clive, with 730 quarters of beef; the Arizona, with 856 quarters of beef and 400 carcases of mutton; the City of New York, with 480 quarters of beef and 150 carcases of mutton: the Minnesota, with 559 quarters of beef; and the Iberian with 600 quarters of beef and 80 carcases of mutton; making the total for the week, 1827 cattle, 6140 sheep, 387 pigs, 3225 quarters of beef, and 630 carcases of mutton. During the voyage the steamer Texas encountered heavy gales, and many sheep were washed overboard.

FINE ARTS.

The annual autumnal exhibitions of modern works of art at Liverpool (held in the Walker Art-Gallery), Manchester (in the Royal Institution), Brighton (in the Royal Pavilion), and Glasgow, are now open. The similar exhibition at Birmingham, in the rooms of the Royal Society of Artists, we have already referred to. As usual, a large proportion of the more remarkable works had been previously exhibited in London. The greatest local interest probably attaches to the exhibition at Manchester, where a school of artists, chiefly landscape-painters, has sprung up whose characteristics may be referred to the influence of the modern French masters of landscape.

The recumbent effigy of the late Archdeacon of Stafford, by Mr. Armstead, which was in this season's Academy Exhibition, has been placed on a handsome altar pedestal in the south choir aisle of Lichfield Cathedral.

An engraving by Mr. T. L. Atkinson of Sir F. Leighton's picture, "Study"—a little girl, seated, absorbed in a picture-book lying open in a portfolio-stand—has been published by Messrs. Pilgeram and Lefevre. The mezzotint basis of the engraving lends itself well to the smoothness of tone and high finish of the original.

The death is announced of Mr. Edward Blore, the distinguished architect, architectural draughtsman, and antiquary, within a few days of having attained his ninetieth year. In early years he made the drawings for several works illustrative of provincial architecture and antiquities. He was intimately acquainted with Sir Walter Scott, and one of his first designs was for the exterior of the new house at Abbotsford. Mr. Blore was among the first to revive Gothic architecture. He was largely employed in connection with Peterborough Cathedral, Lambeth Palace, Windsor Castle, and Buckingham Palace; and he built or reconstructed numerous private mansions. For many years he was architect of Westminster Abbey, in which post, on retiring from the profession, he was succeeded by Sir Gilbert Scott. Mr. Blore was one of the founders of the Royal Archæological Institute. He had the honorary degree of D.C.L. conferred upon him at Oxford, and was a member of several London societies.

M. Protais, the French battle-painter, is at work on a picture, ordered by the Empress Eugénie, representing the Prince Imperial as he lay dead in the Zulu field.

The Grand Prix de Rome of the Fine-Art School, Paris, for painting has been awarded to M. A. Bramtôt; the first second Grand Prix to M. J. S. Buland; the second to M. E. Pichot. The Grand Prix for sculpture has been given to M. L. Fazel; and for architecture to M. A. Blavette.

The Museum of Decorative Arts in Paris, which is intended to serve the same purpose as our South Kensington Museum, has been transferred from the Pavillon de Flore to the Palais de l'Industrie. It will be opened in a few weeks, and the interval will be employed in augmenting the collections.

The exhibition buildings in the Champ de Mars are to be demolished, but the park, extending from the terrace in front of the palace to the Pont d' Jéna, is to be preserved. The city of Paris proposes to remove its pavilion to a spot in the park, and to utilise it as an industrial museum belonging exclusively to the municipality of Paris.

The monument raised at Père la Chaise by the State to the memory of the 2000 French soldiers killed during the siege of Paris is now completed. There will be no official inauguration. Near this monument is a memorial to the National Guards who fell during the siege.

The statue of Galvani, by Signor Cencetti, of Rome, has been erected in the Piazza della Pace at Bologna.

The Italian Ministry of Public Instruction has revived a former Papal edict, and put the same in force as regards the ci-devant Papal States, by which all antiques are subject on exportation to a tax of 20 per cent on their stated value, the object being to hinder the removal from the country of its art treasures.

Ludwig Vogel, the veteran Swiss painter, died recently at Zürich, at the great age of 101. He was a student at Rome when Overbeck and the small band of earnest German artists associated with him sought to revive religious art, and he became a pupil of Cornelius. On his return to Switzerland he executed a large number of monumental paintings, taking for his subjects scenes from Swiss history.

The well-known Baron Taylor, of Paris, died on Saturday last, in his ninety-first year. The deceased was English on the father's and Flemish on the mother's side. Young Taylor early showed a bent for art and literature, and became a pupil of the Artist Suve. He also served in the Army with much distinction, during which time he wrote five plays. On retiring from the Army he was in 1824 appointed Royal Commissioner of the Comédie Française, and, introducing many improvements there; he revived the "Mariage de Figaro," and brought out Victor Hugo's "Hernani," and Dumas's "Henri III." By successive French Governments he was sent to Egypt to negotiate for the Luxor obelisk; to Spain to recover works of art carried off in 1814, and to England to purchase the Standish collection of pictures. In 1838 he became Inspector-General of Fine Arts. He was also a member of the Institute, and the Empire in 1869 made him a Senator. His sumptuously illustrated books of travels were very popular in their day.

The world-famous caricaturist known as "Cham" also died on Saturday last. He was the son of the Comte de Noé (his pseudonym, the French form of Ham indicating his parentage as the son of Noé, or Noah). He first studied under Delaroche, and next under Charlet, with whom his taste for the grotesque developed itself. From 1842 till his death he furnished Charivari and other comic publications with an almost daily succession of satirical and witty, but rarely ill-natured, sketches, supplying also, like Gavarni, the letterpress as well as the drawing. He was particularly successful in ridiculing the Socialists in 1848.

It is determined to raise a bronze statue to the memory of Alois Senefelder, the inventor (in 1796) of lithography, at Munich, the city where the invention was made. The cost of the statue will be £2500, and of this sum £1100 has been raised by a committee formed at Berlin. It is now proposed to open an international subscription. Senefelder resided for a time in Paris and Vienna when engaged in introducing his invention to the world. The London Society of Arts awarded Senefelder their gold medal in 1819.

In consequence of the anticipated failure of the French vintage this season elderberries are said to be in great demand.

Mr. Arthur Richard Jelf, of the Oxford circuit, barrister-at-law, has been appointed Recorder of Shrewsbury, in the place of Mr. W. F. F. Boughey, lately appointed a stipendiary magistrate. Mr. Jelf was called to the Bar in April, 1863.

During a dense fog on Saturday evening the Glasgow steamer Brest, which left Havre for Liverpool on Friday with a crew of thirty hands and one hundred and thirty passengers, ran ashore off the Lizard. By the exertions of the crews of two life-boats, aided by the fishermen of the district, the passengers and crew, except one infant, were safely taken on shore.

"HERBS, SWEET HERBS."

One of the most frequent of autumn cries is "Herbs, sweet herbs;" by which is signified herbs suited for winter use, when duly dried. The "cry" is one of very olden date, though it has now a modern meaning; for when "the herbe women of Cheapside" cried "Herbs, sweet herbs," it then meant "Simples," and herbs fit for strewing. The chemists of those days sold simples, too, for divers maladies, as they were "Cullers of simples," as we know from Romeo, their chief place of resort being in the City, as Falstaff tells us, "that smell like Bucklesbury, in simple time." Herbs, too, could be obtained there for "the strewing"—that is, to strew the rushen floors with pleasant plants.

In the days before carpets were known in England rushes were used for the day-rooms and straw for the chambers, as had been the case, indeed, in houses and in palaces for centuries; and that the use of them in early days was known in Rome, for rooms and corridors, we learn from Shakspeare, who makes Tarquin, stealing to the chamber of Lucrece, pick up her glove "from the rushes, where it lies." Then, as time went on, and more modern ways brought with them luxuries, green boughs were hung about, and green leaves scattered; and to them at length were added sweet-scented flowers and aromatic herbs to please the eye and satisfy the senses, as in the majority of houses the changing of the rushes was not so frequent as it might have been, which made the reedy layer hurtful at times to health and by no means pleasant. Hence came the cry of "Herbs, sweet herbs; herbs fit for strewing;" and this "sweet" strewing was so much favoured by those who had strewn but hitherto the common rush that in all the houses of the better class the sweet flag soon replaced it, as the smell of it, when it was trodden upon, was as the odour of myrtle, and it thus added to the scent of what else lay there. This strewing of houses being a common custom, mention is made of it in the tenures of the time.

Thus, when William the Conqueror gave to his favourites some of the lands at Aylesbury, the charter stipulated the finding of "straw for his bed-chamber; straw and rushes;" and in the household roll of Edward II. there is an entry of money paid "for straw for the King's chamber." Hay, too, was used, for we read of the presence-chamber at Greenwich of Queen Elizabeth, that "the floor, after the English fashion, was strewed with hay;" and it is recorded in "Wits, Fits, and Fancies" that when Henry III., King of France, questioned Monsieur Dandelot on the most notable sights he had seen in England, he instanced, amongst other things, that the people there "strewed their best rooms with hay;" and we also read elsewhere that, in spite of the magnificence of the twelfth century, when the walls of the palace of Thomas A'Becket were, in 1156, hung with costly tapestry, and the hanging roofs were beautiful and rich, "the floors were strewed with rushes; or, with hay and straw, like stables;" and that as the number of guests was great, orders were given "that the floor should be every day covered with fresh hay or straw, in order that those who sat upon it to eat their dinners"—raised seats it would seem were scarce—"might not soil their dresses." From this covering of the floors with straw or rushes, that which was a luxury, extended to seats, and hay was used for its softness, as that French physician, Master Stephen Perlin, notes in his "Kingdoms of England and Scotland," where, alluding in 1558 to this country, he says, "and in taverns, a deal of hay on the wooden benches, on which the travellers sit."

Rushes, in those days, were in great demand; for, besides being used in houses, they were strewn upon the stage—that of "The Globe," for instance, "the thatched-hide" Globe, at famed Bankside—and they were also in request at all processions, and where honour was intended. Thus, at the coronation of Henry the Second, "Rushes, more rushes," is the cry; and in Browne's "British Pastorals" we read of rushes being brought "to overspread the ground, whereon to church the lovers tread;" and we find, also, in Beaumont and Fletcher's "Valentinian," "Rushes, ladies, rushes; rushes as green as summer for this stranger." They were used in churches, too, as is stated in the "Herball to the Bible," which was published in 1587, mention being there made of "sedge and rushes, the whiche manie in the countrie doe use to strewe their churches;" and that this custom had been of some continuance is proved by an early entry of it, as recorded in the wardens' account, under the date of 1504, for the London church of St. Mary-at-hill—"Paid for 2 Berden Ryssbes for the strewing the newe pewes, 3d." At Hailsham, in Sussex, there are also entries in the parish account of charges "for strewing the church floor" with straw or rushes; and at Norwich, too, in the books of the city, pea-straw, for such strewing, is charged for; and that custom of strewing is, if we mistake not, still, on certain days, observed there, the floor of the old cathedral being, on festive occasions, strewn with sweet flag and rushes; and "Rush-bearing Wakes," commemorating the practice, yet hold their place, between haymaking and harvest, in Cheshire, Yorkshire, Lancashire, and Westmorland.

But the days of rushes now are over, and they are only used, at the present time, for the tying of hops and the making of baskets; that which was formerly used for rushlights, and which is still required for mats and chairs, being the larger kind, the bulrush, or club-rush, the spongy stems of which are of use to the coopers, to fill up crevices in casks, and to cottagers for thatch for their dwellings, as we see in the hamlets of Huntingdonshire, and about that quarter. There is a kind of club-rush called the salt-marsh rush, the root of which is eatable, as is that of another kind—the water-chesnut, which the Chinese cultivate in tanks, and keep it for dessert, when it has been dried in the sun. The aromatic root, too, of the sweet flag is used by the rustics in this country in lieu of spice, and the Turks make a sweetmeat of it. But the handsomest of all rush-plants is that which blooms in August—the great reed-mace; and which, according to Loudon, is the one that is depicted by Rubens, and by the later Italian painters, as the reed which was borne by our Saviour.

In connection with the strewing of herbs, it may here be mentioned that in Norway, where they still strew their houses, the juniper is the plant that is used for the purpose; and they also strew it at funerals, as rosemary once was strewn—Ophelia's pleasant herb of "sweet remembrance."

Now the olden cry of "Herbs, sweet herbs," was very comprehensive, as it included not only the herbs and plants that were used as "simples," and those that were fit for strewing, as marjoram, rosemary, wild thyme, and mint, meadow-sweet, woodruff, and wood-sage, but also those which, when dried or trodden on, gave out sweet odours, as the ground-ivy, spikenard, and the scented colt's-foot, the resinous St. John's wort and the clove-smelling avens, the musky stork's-bill and the sweet musk-mallow, sweet bay, sweet basil, and sweet gale. It is no wonder, therefore, as that exclamation had so many belongings, and was so intimately associated with the practice of rush-strewing, that old times and customs should be thus called up when we hear the Autumn cry of "Herbs, sweet herbs."

THE MAGAZINES.

There is still more yachting than romance in Mr. Black's "yachting romance" in the Cornhill, the charming style, nevertheless almost disarms criticism. It is impossible to take a deep interest in the fortunes of personages who thus far seem mere accessories to the scenery; but more delightful light reading for a summer trip could not easily be found. "Mademoiselle de Mersac" is also very good this month, but the unexpected dénouement of "The Countess's Ruby" is better still, and would be most effective on the stage. The most remarkable of the miscellaneous papers is an essay on the Dance of Death in Italian art, the more interesting as this department of the subject is comparatively little known. The Italian treatment is much less uniform and conventional than the Teutonic, and branches off into a number of collateral versions of the conception in which the original is hardly to be recognised. A sketch of "Oxford in the Long Vacation" contains delightful pictures of the lovely scenery around the city; it is rather unsatisfactory, however, that the writer is not always sure whether the pleasant nooks he describes are still to be found.

There is but one important paper in Macmillan, and that on a subject too remote from the common track to be appreciated by many, although its importance will be admitted by all. It is Commander Cameron's report of the conclusions he deduces from his expedition to investigate the practicability of the Euphrates Valley Railway, a scheme which he strongly advocates. The facts and estimates on which his project is based, however, can only be apprehended by persons well acquainted with the country. Mr. Lang's plea for the retention of Cyprus is intelligible to everybody, and most impartial readers will allow that he has made out his case. Professor Seeley mourns, not without reason, over the perversion of history by party spirit; and Mr. Minto brings forward some of the most salient points in the highly entertaining correspondence of the late editor of the Edinburgh Review. The present instalment of "Haworth's" is unusually powerful.

Fraser has hardly anything of mark, except the excellent continuation of "Mary Anerley" and a brilliant review of Mr. Froude's Cæsar by Professor Sellar, whose encomiums on the historian's numerous beauties of detail are far from amounting to a generally favourable verdict on his work. A paper on tenant right in Ireland recommends the creation of an independent peasant proprietary, but contains no suggestion for preventing the minute subdivision of land which would probably ensue.

The most interesting paper in Blackwood relates, like so many others, to Syria, and is understood to be from the pen of Mr. Laurence Oliphant. Mr. Oliphant's pictures of Druse manners and beliefs are very spirited, and his account of the general condition of the Lebanon is very satisfactory. The graphic cleverness of "Reata" has gradually deepened into pathos, and the present instalment reveals remarkable knowledge of human nature and power of subtle analysis. "Rufus Hickman, of St. Botolph's," will perhaps be generally considered more amusing, and is, indeed, a most entertaining burlesque.

The most conspicuous contribution to a good number of the Contemporary Review is a brilliant essay by "Vernon Lee" on the double current in the art of the Renaissance, the return to Nature, and the enthusiasm for the antique. Not until their perfect fusion was really fine art possible, and the writer's description of the weakness of each apart from the other is singularly effective. Professor Mivart's essay on animals is no doubt an indispensable portion of the book of which it is to form a part, but by itself appears little more than a catalogue. Sir W. Medhurst's forecast of the political future of China, and M. Kasasis's survey of the present state of Greece are both serviceable, although the latter is rather too much of a manifesto. M. Lenormant brings together the numeous parallels afforded by ancient mythology to the Biblical history of the Fall: and Mr. Proctor endeavours to explain some of the peculiarities of the Great Pyramid by the ingenious conjecture that it was constructed for the observation of the stars as mirrored in a reflecting medium. His further conjecture that its purpose was astrological seems inconsistent with the fact that the star to whose position it was apparently adjusted is devoid of special significance in astrology.

The Nineteenth Century is not very strong this month, Mr. Mallock's "dialogue" on human happiness disappoints the curiosity it excites. It is difficult to discern its bearing on Mr. Mallock's favourite subject: its moral, if it has one, would rather seem to be that men and women might be happier if the former were more clairvoyant. The ease of the conversation, however, and the clear presentation of the personages, justify favourable anticipations of Mr. Mallock's success as a novelist whenever he may condescend to that department of authorship. Mr. Froude's "Cagliostro of the Second Century" also disappoints expectation. The historian's peculiar powers are hardly sufficiently taxed by a mere analysis of a tract by Lucian. Mr. Joseph Jacobs's "God in Israel," on the other hand, is an essay of real value, tracing out the consistent development of the Jewish conception of Deity, from the Patriarchs to Spinoza. Mr. Spedding's criticism of Mr. C. Tennyson Turner's sonnets is tasteful and just, but minute and elaborate to a degree only to be accounted for by personal attachment. Mr. Bear's paper on English agriculture, and Mr. Caird's notes of his tour as a famine commissioner in India, are valuable contributions to two of the most urgent questions of our time.

The Fortnightly Review opens with a deliverance on the land question, by Mr. J. B. Kinnear. The originality of Mr. Kinnear's paper consists in the proposal to prohibit mortgages on landed property, in order that the needy landowner may be forced to sell. It does not seem to have occurred to him that landowners disinclined to sell their estates would, in many cases, be prevented from doing anything to improve them. Mr. Tuttle's survey of German politics is mainly a lament over the perversity of Prince Bismarck, whom there is no living either with or without. He is, in Mr. Tuttle's view, the rope that suspends Germany over a precipice, most uncomfortable and perilous to hold on by. But if it breaks? Mr. Herbert Giles's views of Chinese affairs seem unduly coloured by his distaste to the missionaries. It may be that the missionaries would be better away; but if we allow them to be driven away we shall have no security for any other class of Europeans. Mr. Kinnaird Rose proves unanswerably that the Turks are behaving to the Christians in Macedonia exactly as the Christians are behaving to the Turks in Bulgaria. Mr. Simcox contrasts, in a very pithy and pointed fashion, the most characteristic features of the wisdom of Solomon and Horace, Bacon and Goethe. Mr. Saintsbury is quite in his element in commenting upon two most strongly contrasted writers—the dashing Charles Lever, so charming as a retailer of anecdotes, but little better than a scribbler from a strictly literary point of view, and Théophile Gautier, whose style is generally ahead of his substance. Mr. Saintsbury's admiration of Gautier as an artist is, perhaps, even excessive: in a sonnet which he cites with enthusiasm there are two hemistichs palpably brought in for the sake of rhyme.

The North American Review publishes the first part of "Autobiography of Richard Wagner," as far as relates to his career as a musical composer. It is, of course, highly interesting, although some passages savour of special pleading, and the style of the English version is heavy. Wagner lays especial stress on the national mission he considers himself to be fulfilling, and it is satisfactory to find him allowing merit to the national composers of other countries. More interesting still are a selection of extracts from a diary kept at Washington at the outbreak of the Civil War, during the last days of President Buchanan's administration, and evidently by one well behind the scenes. The writer is apparently a person of narrow sympathies, much more concerned for the manufacturing than the national interest; but the light he brings to an obscure and eventful period is very acceptable. The Atlantic Monthly and Scribner's Monthly maintain their usual character for inexhaustible variety; and St. Nicholas is as decidedly as ever at the head of all juvenile magazines.

The cleverest contribution to any of the month's magazines is Mr. Traill's poem "L'Enfant Terrible," in Time, a piece as perfect in its way as slashing style and dashing rhyme can make it. The "terrible child" is Democracy; and Mr. Traill's apparently humorous stanzas are not devoid of a serious purpose. They are in some measure illustrated by the concluding paper of M. Pascal Grousset's series on the Paris Commune, which M. Grousset thinks saved the Republic, as some doctors consider a patient cured by the medicine which has just missed killing him. Sir Edward Watkin contends that railway and other accidents are not preventible, a dismal conclusion for the companies who have to pay for them. For our own part, we have considerable faith in the preventive which juries are wont to apply. The other contributions, though slight, are for the most part highly entertaining, and the interest of the two serial stories is admirably kept up.

There is nothing remarkable in the Gentleman's Magazine beyond the continuation of Mrs. Linton's novel—the most powerful she has ever written, and Dr. A. Wilson's clear description of the numerous fossil connections between different departments of the animal kingdom which palaeontological research has recently brought to light. In the University Magazine we have chiefly to note the commencement of a new story, entitled "Ichabod," full of sarcastic humour, and quite outside the sphere of ordinary novel-writing. The pessimism which springs from an overdose of utilitarianism is the chief object of the writer's wholesome satire. There are also an interesting paper on Servian popular poetry, with copious translated specimens, by Mrs. Freiligrath-Kroeker; and a good memoir and excellent photographic likeness of Mr. William Black.

The most interesting papers in The Month are historical—a biography of Bellarmine; an apology for Father Petre, James the Second's confessor; and the first instalment of what will probably prove a valuable historical essay, by the Rev. J. Stevenson, on Charles the First's abortive courtship of the Infanta of Spain. Temple Bar, besides the continuation of "Probation," has a pretty little story entitled "Bunkett's Letter," and a remarkably picturesque description of Arcachon. Mr. McCarthy's and Mr. Gibbon's novels continue to form the staple interest of Belgravia, which has also two singularly pathetic sketches by Mr. Norris and Mr. James Payn, respectively entitled "The Old Maid's Holiday" and "A Very Quiet Rubber."

Mrs. Riddell's tale, "Daisies and Buttercups," continues its pleasant course in this month's number of Home, opening up another and most charming vista. The hero, Mr. Cheverley, gives us delightful glimpses into his inner life—showing, among other things, how love came to him in middle age—which sets the reader longing for further acquaintance with this pure, simple-minded gentleman, sympathising with him in his difficulties, and hoping, amid many fears, for the successful issue of his romance. Among other matters in the present Number are "Une Nichée de Gentilshommes," by Ivan Turgenieff; a pleasant sketch of Lucerne; and a continuation of the story, "Great Heart."

From Messrs. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin we have received the Magazine of Art, Illustrated (the success which has attended the issue of which has induced the publishers to determine upon its enlargement, and this change will be effected with the commencement of the new volume in October, the price of the magazine remaining unaltered); Part III. of Longfellow's Poetical Works, Illustrated; Science for All, Illustrated; Familiar Wild Flowers, with Coloured Plates; Part I. of European Ferns, with Coloured Illustrations from Nature; the Illustrated History of the Russo-Turkish War; and their Family Magazine, with its usual amount of varied excellence, pictorial and descriptive.

We have also to acknowledge Good Words, London Society, Tinsley's Magazine, the Argosy, the Churchman's Monthly Magazine, Charing-Cross, Popular Science Gossip, Men of Mark (containing portraits of Professor Huxley, Sir H. Manisty, and Birket Foster), the Theatre, Parts 3 and 4 of Greenhouse Favourites, third part of the Etcher (containing three beautiful examples), the Fern World, Kensington, Golden Hours, Peep-Show, Familiar Wild Flowers, Haydn's Dictionary of Popular Domestic Medicine, Haydn's Bible Dictionary, Haydn's Dictionary of Dates, Josephus, Science for All, Mission Life, Excelsior, Kind Words, St. James's Magazine, Our Native Land, Golden Childhood, the Animal World, Ladies' Gazette of Fashion, Englishwoman's Domestic Magazine, Myra's Journal of Dress and Needlework, Myra's Mid-Monthly Journal, Sylvia's Home Journal, the Ladies' Treasury, and Weldon's Ladies' Journal; and Monthly Parts of All the Year Round, Once a Week, Leisure Hour, Sunday at Home, Sunday Magazine, Gardener's Magazine, Day of Rest, Weekly Welcome, Social Notes, Young People's Paper, Sunday Reading for the Young, the Christian Age, and the Boys' Own Paper.

A PARISIAN CONCIERGE.

The inexperienced English visitor to Paris may be led to seek an economical private lodging, au quatrième étage of some large house disposable in many separate apartments, instead of remaining at an ordinary hotel. He will have to reckon with this formidable domestic official authority, be it in male or female shape, at the portal of the house with rooms to let. If his stock of French language be rather insufficient for the purposes of such a business negotiation, their discussion may take the lively form displayed in our Artist's drawing. She resorts to the primitive and universal method of finger-talk, in order to let him know the terms upon which he can have the accommodation he requires. Four francs a day is the price for which he may enter upon the occupancy of a modest chamber, furnished with a small bed, chair, and washstand, and with the inevitable fancy porcelain clock on the mantelpiece, besides having the free run of the stairs at all hours of the day, and his own key, to be left with the concièrge whenever he goes out. The energetic figure and gesture of this worthy woman should at once persuade the young stranger that he has nothing to do but to signify his compliance with her stipulations and resign himself to such efficient guardianship during his intended stay in Paris.

HARVESTING.

The wheat-harvest has begun; the corn is falling to the sickle, and there seems now some hope of the crop being saved, though as the yield, of necessity, must be poor and light, the consumption of flour in this country can only be met by a continuance of those vast importations which are still coming from America, where the growth of wheat has been so great that 15,000,000 bushels of it are available for distribution, and an abundance is thus assured to us for some time to come. With respect to our earlier crops—beans, clover, oats, and barley, which are cut after the hay, and before the corn—we shall want help, too; as the beans are starved and small, the late clover lacks nutriment, the oats are devoid of plumpness, and, of the barley to hand, there are but few bright samples, through the very great undergrowth of scutch and weeds. There is promise, however, that we shall get large shipments, and that all may yet be well.

The beans, thus cut, are the winter ones, those planted in October, which are smaller than the Spring ones that are sown in March. Beans, the sweet scent of which, as the sun goes down, is one of the charms of the country, are much liked by the farmer, as they prepare the ground for wheat better than any other crop, and there is a good sale for them. They are mown if the yield is a poor one, and cut with the hook when the growth is heavy, and they are then tied into stooks and stacked until sun, wind, and air shall have dried them, when they are carted, ricked, and thrashed, and the haulm is used up in the thatching of sheds and for litter. In Scotland, however, where the beans are got in just short of ripe, the haulm serves to feed both sheep and cattle; and in London the green stalks of broad beans, after the pods have been picked, are given to their cows by milk-sellers as the best of all ways to increase the cream. Beans, when split and mixed with oats, form, as is well known, an important food for working-horses; and when ground and given in the shape of meal they are equally useful to pigs and cattle.

Of the clovers, the white and the red, as we have already seen, were cut before the hay, and the sort which is gathered after the beans have been stacked is the purple—the trefoil or honeysuckle variety, that kind so loved by bees.

Of oats, though there are many varieties, they are of three colours only, dun, white, and black; and of these, whilst the black Tartarian are preferred by some English farmers, the white Canadian oat is the one that finds most favour, as it crops well, is heavier than the others, and fetches more money at market. Thin black oats, too, contain but 13 per cent of flesh-forming substances, whereas in the white and plumper oat we have 18 per cent. As moist summers and a low temperature seem best to suit them, oats attain to greatest perfection in Ireland and in Scotland, and in our own fen districts. They are cut with the hook when they are barely ripe, and are tied into sheaves like wheat, to ripen on exposure, and to be stacked when dry; then, after removal to the barn, the dried oats are sent to the mill to be cleaned—and also to be crushed, if they are required to be "kibbled"—and the straw is given to the cattle. It was facetiously said by Dr. Johnson that oats were the food "of horses in England, and of men in Scotland," but the value of good oatmeal as a cereal food—and 186 lb. of meal can be obtained from one quarter of oats—has long been recognised, as it has been chemically and conclusively proved that the meal from oats is, of all other cereals, the one best calculated to thoroughly renovate the muscles and sinews; and this assertion is borne out by the muscular strength of the brawny Scotch, with whom oatmeal is a diet, and a good diet, too, as it is the one which is exactly suited to their cold, damp climate, being heat-giving and digestive. Oats, when not otherwise required, serve as a useful fodder for stock, in which case they are usually got in about ten or twelve days before they are ripe, and passed through the chaff-cutter, when, the grain and straw being thus cut together, it makes a welcome food.

The crop next to be gathered is barley; and of this, also, there are several sorts, though we need here only mention the best of them—namely, the chevalier, the two-rowed, and the giant. Of these, the first—the largest cropper—is preferred for malting purposes; the second, for its straw—which grows to the great length of four feet eight inches; and the third, where the land is exposed to gales, as its stiff straw keeps it from being "laid." Growers differ as to the month for barley-sowing, though February is the time with most light-land men. But there is one kind of barley that is sown in autumn—the "winter," common bere, or big—as it forms a good sheep-feed in spring. In Ireland, however, the grain of this "bere," which ripens in July, is used for distillery purposes, as oats, too, were used until very lately. As barley can stand more ripening than wheat, it should not be cut until it droops completely, and the corn is crisp to the touch. It will then be plump and good. Barley, when ground to meal, is given to poultry, pigs, and cattle; and its product, malt—as also the residue of that product, draff, or brewers' grains—forms a fine food for milking cows. Malt, as may be known, is grain excited to germination by the malster, by being steeped, fermented, and kiln dried; and it is used by the distiller in the manufacture of whisky, and by the brewer in the making of beer. Any cereal can be used for the making of malt; but, as barley is the best one, it is most employed.

When the barley has been garnered, then comes "the corn," by which term is meant, the wheat, that plant which forms the chief bread-food for man; and of wheat, as of barley, there are many kinds, both red and white, but the white is the sort most grown. Wheat is sown either as "winter-wheat" in October, or as "spring-wheat" in March; but the sun ripens each in autumn. With the majority, however, the earlier, or October planting, is preferred, as they consider, while the seed has "a frozen top, but a warm berth under," it gains in strength, and comes up much better. In the gathering of the wheat with the bagging-hook, scythe, or the sickle—while the men keep cutting, their wives tie up and stack, and each stack is composed of six or eight sheaves, propped up with the ears together and the butts apart, that the air may get under and through it. Then, when dry, it is carried, ricked, and thrashed, and sold to the miller; to be by him brushed, ground, and sifted; when, after it has been duly incorporated with other qualities from other samples, it is sacked, and sent out to be made into bread by the baker; the rougher portions of its component parts, as sharps and bran, being reserved for other purposes, for poultry and for cattle, and to make bran-bread. The straw of the wheat serves for chaff, thatching, and litter; and the making of hats, paper, boards, and bonnets. The wheat being got in, but one crop remains—spring-beans; and, that over, then comes hop-picking. From the adverse state of the weather and the general lateness of the harvest—and it seems now as though the completion of corn-cutting will be this year as late as it was in 1860, when there was wheat still out in the fields on Oct. 8—it was at one time feared that we should have dear bread, but as in one week only 35,000 barrels of flour, 355,000 quarters of Indian corn, and 348,000 quarters of wheat were shipped to this country, and there is still so much to come, there is no longer a chance of that great calamity.

A WET DAY IN A WELSH HOTEL.

It is a Sunday morning, in the rainy summer weather of the Cambrian Highlands. Here, just at this time, a thick wet blanket of opaque atmospheric vapour shrouds the romantic shapes of jutting crags, and the sublime contour of mountain ranges in the distance, which might as well be a thousand miles away, for any pleasure they can give to lovers of the picturesque. Hoarsely murmurs the brawling torrent along its restless bed, and loud is the cataract's menacing roar, heard across the sodden meadow and the miry turnpike road, fronting the commodious hostelry of Jones ap Williams. But within that noted mansion of venal hospitality, a score of disconsolate tourists, the victims of an inclement season, endure their doom of tedious discontent. They have loitered an hour and a half over the miscellaneous fare of breakfast; they are now sitting together, yet not in company, in a very listless and unsocial mood, shunning each other's conversation, as English ladies and gentlemen are wont to do, in a common drawing-room with no presiding hostess authorised to bring them into conventional acquaintance. Every one there, with two or three exceptions, wishes that both he or she and all the others were far removed from that scene of mutual boredom. Such is life, upon too many occasions of expected gratification, which is rather dearly purchased, for these unhappy holiday folk, at the expense of some 15s. a-day, till they arise, in desperate resolve, and start on their return journey home.

There is no hope of stirring out this morning without the risk of a thorough soaking. It is hardly worth while to look out of the window at the dripping shrubs that adorn the garden-lawn. Only those three impatient gentlemen who are standing there to watch the rain-drops may discuss the chance of its holding up for an hour in the afternoon, when the trout will be apt to rise briskly to the angler's mimic fly. It is probable that in Wales, a province rather addicted to strict Sabbath observance, the billiard-room is shut up, and the smoking-room may not be opened till after church and chapel hours. We once had to walk four miles out of our path on the banks of the Menai, because a ferryman conscientiously refused, on that sacred day, to help us across the water, though he had nothing else to do at the moment, and his boat lay ready for use. The religiousness of the Welsh people deserves our respect, "though it appear," as Shakspeare says of Fluellen, "a little out of fashion." Some of the English visitors are not less mindful of Sunday observance, but have different ways of keeping the day; there is a young clergyman, with two sisters at the pianoforte, superintending the vocal performance of a hymn; while the elder lady, their maiden aunt, benignantly offers to distribute a small parcel of evangelical tracts among the assembled guests who have no other reading. One of these, a mild and rather frightened young man, has the courtesy to accept her well-meant gift of literary edification; but the other young men lounging on the sofa put up a scornful expression of face, and are prepared to behave, we fear, with something like insolence when she approaches them. At the round table are seated a mother and daughter, who also seem indisposed to admit any particular exhortation. That plump and drowsy matron has fallen into a profound slumber over the book which is destined in five minutes to fall out of her lap, while the wakeful girl beside her, though pretending to examine photographs, is staring rather too freely at the gentlemen on the sofa. A Dissenting minister, who has secured a comfortable folding chair, with his spectacled son behind him, is engaged in the perusal of some theological treatise. The lady who sits next him, though she appears to be listening with attention to his reading, or to his remarks upon it, belongs to a different school, as she thinks it no harm to occupy her hands with the crochet needles. Behind these worthy folk are seen a happy pair of lovers, setting their youthful heads together over one and the same book, which is likely enough to be Tennyson's "Maud," or something of Patmore's or Rossetti's, or one of the older poets of tender sentiment. The old gentleman with his Times newspaper finds himself not much worse accommodated than at his ordinary club in Pall-mall or St. James's-street. They will all contrive, somehow or other, to live through the wet Sunday at the Welsh hotel, taking their pleasure sadly, as is the custom of the English people.

The Marquis of Bath presided on Monday afternoon over an important meeting at Bridgwater in connection with the Somersetshire Drainage Act, which has been obtained for the more effectual drainage of lands within the county, and for the prevention of the annually recurring floods that of late years have proved very destructive. It is intended that more than 90,000 acres shall be brought under the jurisdiction of the newly-formed body of commissioners. Works of arterial drainage are also to be undertaken, including, it is understood, the widening and deepening of the River Parrett, and a new cut through the Sedgmoor district.

The Queen has commanded that the grant of the India medal of 1854, with clasp inscribed "Perak, 1875-6," shall be extended to every officer, non-commissioned officer, or soldier who was engaged in the expedition to Perak in 1875-6. Commanding officers of regiments employed in the expedition have been ordered to prepare nominal rolls of individuals entitled to the decoration. Officers and men who are already in possession of the medal will only receive the additional clasp. The rolls of officers and men not now serving in India are to be forwarded direct to the Adjutant-General of the Forces for transmission to the East Indies. All claims should be submitted through the officer commanding the regiment, or the head of the department in which the applicant was serving at the period the medal was earned.

The American Company of Revisers of the Authorised Version of the Bible have issued an address in which they state that the greater part of the work will be published next year, and that the following were the rules under which the committees on both sides the Atlantic have worked:—1. To introduce as few alterations as possible into the text of the Authorised Version consistently with faithfulness. 2. To limit as far as possible the expression of such alterations to the language of the authorised or earlier versions. 3. Each company to go twice over the portion to be revised—once provisionally, the second time finally. 4. The text to be adopted to be that for which evidence is decidedly preponderating, and that when the text so adopted differs from that from which the Authorised Version was made, the alteration be indicated in the margin. 5. To make or retain no change in the text on the second final revision of each company except two thirds of those present approve of the same, but on the first revision to decide by simple majorities. 6. In every case of proposed alteration that may have given rise to discussion, to defer the voting thereon till the next meeting whensoever the same shall be required by one third of those present at the meeting: such intended vote to be announced in the notice for the next meeting. 7. To revise the headings of chapters, pages, paragraphs, italics, and punctuation. 8. To refer on the part of each company, when considered desirable, to divines, scholars, and literary men, whether at home or abroad, for their opinions.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

A number of new regulations for the volunteer force were issued last Saturday. Corps which have adopted scarlet as the colour of their uniform can obtain supplies of clothing from the Royal Army Clothing Dépôt, and the value of such supplies will be deducted from the capitation grant; but corps which retain uniforms of a colour other than scarlet can only be supplied on prepayment. Other regulations relate to the granting of the honorary rank of major to certain adjutants after twenty years' service, to the age at which volunteers may enter or must leave a corps, and to the passing of volunteers into the reserve.

At most of the rifle ranges near London—especially at Wimbledon, Epsom, the Scrubbs, Ilford, Rainham, Purfleet, Ealing, Tottenham, and Plumstead—some hundreds of the metropolitan Volunteers were engaged last Saturday in fulfilling the Government requirements of class firing, and competitions for a long series of prizes were also in progress. Probably the largest attendance was at Rainham, where more than 200 members of the London Brigade and 2nd and 3rd City of London were on the ground, about half for class firing and the remainder for competition. The former, of course, took precedence, and it was consequently dark before the prize contests were finished, one contest being postponed. The principal results of the other competitions are as follow:—B (Captain Grene's) company, 2nd London Rifles. Nine prizes and the company silver badge. For the first prize and the badge, on which, worked in silver, are the City arms, there was a keen contest between Colour-Sergeant Rayner and Corporal Nicholls, who tied with 23 points each at the first distance, Rayner winning at the second range by one point. Nicholls, therefore, took second prize, Private Belsham third, Lance-Corporal Parsons fourth, Private Eyles fifth, Sergeant Lankshere sixth, Lance-Corporal Clarke seventh, Private F. Spencer eighth, and Lance-Corporal R. W. Parr ninth. The prize list of D (Captain Prichard's) company comprised five money prizes and two silver cups. Only two men were able to compete—Private May and Sergeant George. The tie between Corporal Love and Corporal Fortunati, of I company (Captain Cantlow's) of the same regiment, for the company silver badge, resulted in favour of Love. The other winners of prizes in this company were Captain Cantlow, Corporal Love, and Corporal Fortunati; Private G. Baker, Lance-Corporal Paul, Lance-Sergeant Stere, and Privates Harvey, Luff, and Pitt. M (Captain Mack's) company of the 3rd London competed for their annual prizes. The first, a cup and the company silver badge, went to Private Tratt; the second to Sergeant Peter, the third to Lance-Corporal Robearts, and the fourth to Lance-Corporal H. Mayhew. Private C. Ward and Private Richardson tied for next places, the former winning; and Colour-Sergeant Ward took a prize.—The following are the winners of the regimental prizes of the 23rd Surrey (Rotherhithe), held at the ranges at Nunhead:—First series—Captain Sweeting, Corporal Butcher, Lieutenant Griffin, Captain Bisell, Captain Watson, Private Hurle, Corporal Brewer, Sergeant Brown, Sergeant-Major Lynch, Privates Jones and Ahern, Sergeant Reeves, Colour-Sergeant Willoughby, Sergeant Willoughby, Colour-Sergeant Jones, and Private Jefferies. Recruits' Prizes—Privates Gurney, Franklin, Lockhart, Cook, Jordan, Reid, Earwicker, Green, Lanyon, and Grubb. Band Prizes—Privates Driscoll and Abbott, Drum-Major Harrison, and Private Curtis. Consolation Prizes—Quartermaster-Sergeant Evans, Sergeants Hall and Besley, Private Young, Sergeant Lineker, and Corporal Chaney.

The annual Regimental Prize Meeting of the 36th Middlesex Rifle Regiment was held recently at the Scrubbs Ranges. The following are the principal results:—The Commanding Officers' Prize, value £5, was won by Bandmaster Heath; Major Barrow's Prize, value £5, by Sergeant Cave; the Churchwardens' Challenge Cup (presented by Mr. James Flood and Mr. Archibald F. Arbuthnot, churchwardens of Paddington), by Captain Gamge; Lieutenant-Colonel Baylis's Prize, value £4, Major Baylis's Prize, value 3 guineas, Quartermaster Read's Prize, value 2 guineas, and the Ammunition Fund Prizes, value 6 guineas, by Private Campbell, Private G. Rudkin, Sergeant Horne, Private Wright, Sergeant Woodley, Captain Reed, Private M'Kellar, Lance-Sergeant Jefferson, and Sergeant Masson; Sir R. T. Kindersley's Challenge Cup, by Sergeant Masson, Sergeant Horne, and Private R. Palmer; the Shakespeare Challenge Cup, value £5 5s., by Private Plimley; the Regimental Challenge Cup and Silver Medal, by Sergeant Gomme; Second Prize, Regimental Bronze Medal and one-third of Entrance Fees, Captain Gamge; Third Prize, Private M'Kellar.

A rifle contest for prizes of the value of several hundred pounds, including the Duke of Bedford's Challenge Cup and many other handsome and valuable pieces of plate, has been brought to a close, at the Government rifle ranges on Wormwood-scrubbs, among the members of the 37th Middlesex (Bloomsbury). The result of the principal competitions are appended. First series—The Duke of Bedford's Challenge Cup, value 100 guineas, and other prizes, value £45: Winner of the cup, the Bedford badge, and £5. Private Cooper. The other successful men in this series were Private Baker, Corporal Prebble, Private Tuppin, and Corporal Howes, Private Assig, Private Skerray, Sergeant H. P. Miller, Sergeant C. Paish, and Drummer Hill, Private Kennedy, Private Brunswick, Sergeant J. Miller, Private Young, and Corporal Worley. The following also won prizes:—Colour-Sergeant Tomlinson, Corporal C. Sheppard, Sergeant Catlin, Private White, Sergeant Steers, Corporal Sheppard, Private Wookey, Private Prince, Sergeant M'Clary, Corporal Greenfield, Private Waghorn, Private Lake, Private Woodward, Corporal James, Private Ellis, Private Pinder, Corporal Anderson, Private D. Davis, Sergeant Urry, and Corporal Blundell. Private Cooper, first in this series, also wins Lieutenant-Colonel Steadall's (the commanding officer's) prize, and the Battalion Challenge Cup, value thirty guineas. For the Nursery Challenge Cup, value £20, with £5 added quarterly by the corps for training and encouraging company teams, was open to all who entered for the Commanding Officers' Challenge Cup, excepting the battalion twenty and reserve. No. 4, was the winning company. In the second series the principal prizes were the challenge gold and silver badges, the contest for which was very keen. At the close Captain Bompas came in first, winning the challenge gold medal and badge, presented by Mr. James Patrick, with a small gold medal to be retained by the winner, and a purse of £4. The silver medal of the corps, with £2 10s. added, went to Corporal Millar; and a silver medal the gift of Mr. Theophilus Taylor, with £2 added, to Sergeant Ball. Other winners in the series were Sergeant T. Stevens, Sergeant H. Paish, Private H. J. Hill, Colour-Sergeant Hall, Corporal Tatnall, Major Crowle, and Sergeant W. W. Drover. The shooting tens of companies afterwards competed for the Turner prizes, a challenge cup, value thirty guineas, with five guineas added yearly, the gift of Mr. H. J. Turner, and £2 5s added by the regiment. No. 7 company won the cup, which will be held for the year by the captain, £3 15s. being divided among the ten. No. 6 company was second, and receives £2 10, and No. 4 company third, and receives £1 5s. The Battalion Twenty Challenge Cup, value thirty guineas, presented by Captain and Adjutant Matthew Coke, with £10 added by the commanding officer (Lieutenant-Colonel Stedall), was open only to the battalion twenty and any members, reserve or otherwise, who had shot with the twenty in any match during the year. The cup and £5 were awarded to Corporal Millar; and money prizes for the next four highest were won by Sergeant T. Stevens, Sergeant Miller, Drummer C. Hill, and Sergeant H. Paish. For the volley-firing prizes, a challenge cup presented by Colonel Corrie and £10 added by Lieutenant-Colonel Stedall, twenty members of each company contended. Nos. 4 and 7 tied; No. 6 company was also close up, and No. 1 gained a prize. Another useful match was that at unknown distances between 200 and 400 yards, for Major Richards's prizes Major Crowle won the first prize, Corporal Howes the second, and Drummer C. Hill the third. Ties for other prizes have yet to be decided. Captain Bompas won the first of the Officers' Prizes, Major Crowle the second, and Captain Knight the third; and the Sergeant-Instructor s Prizes were awarded to Sergeant-Major Welsh, Sergeant-Instructor Smith, and Sergeant-Instructor Hardy. The result of the best aggregates in the first and second series was decided thus:—Privates Cooper, £3; Sergeant H. P. Miller, £2; Drummer C. Hill, Sergeant T. P. Stevens, Private Tuppin, Sergeant J. Miller, Sergeant C. Paish, Private Brunswick, Captain Bompas, and Private G. Young, £1 each. Two competitions are put off.

The E (Marylebone) company of the 3rd City of London Rifles held their annual prize meeting at the Scrubbs ranges recently. The first prize of the first series was won by Corporal Ford; and among the other winners were—Colour-Sergeant Wells, Private Kirkland, Corporal Bartholomew, Sergeant Baker, Private Wright, and Corporal Handford. Private Cater, Sergeant Kean, Private Stannard, and Private Payne also took prizes. The second series was restricted to winners in the first, and resulted in Corporal Bartholomew winning the first prize, Corporal Ford the second, and Colour-Sergeant Wells the third; Corporal Ford having made the highest aggregate in the two series was awarded the company silver badge.

Yesterday week the 2nd Surrey (Croydon) team met the champions of the Honourable Artillery Company at the Park range. The ranges were the usual ones of 200, 500, and 600 yards, seven rounds at each. The Artillery men made 264, 253, and 220—total, 737; the Surrey team, 258, 248, 210—total, 716. In the evening the competitors dined together at the Artillery House, Finsbury.

The annual great gun competition of the First Sussex Artillery took place recently with the 40-pounder Armstrongs, at a range of 1800 yards. In the officers' match, the first prize in which was a valuable challenge cup, presented by the late Sir Francis Goldsmid, supplemented by £10 each year by Sir Julian Goldsmid for the men working the guns, the winning detachment was Captain Puttock's of No. 4 battery; the second prize of ten guineas, given by the stand trustees, being won by Lieutenant Stride's detachment, of No. 5 battery; and a third of £10, given by Colonel Hannington, by Captain Woodin's detachment, of No. 6 battery. The principal prize in the men's competition, a silver challenge cup, and ten guineas given by Mr. Ashbury, the senior borough member, with a five-guinea watch given by Mr. Boxell, was won by Sergeant Bishop, of No. 6 battery.

The competition for the Challenge Cup, value 20 guineas, presented by the late Field-Marshal Sir W. Gomm, G.C.B., Constable of the Tower, to the Volunteers of Bermondsey and Rotherhithe (10th and 23rd Surrey), began on Monday at the Government rifle ranges on Plumstead-marshes, and has been brought to a close. Both regiments contributed a large number of entries for the honour of holding the prize. The contest was open only to members who had made themselves efficient in musketry and drill. Corporal Butcher, of the Rotherhithe corps, gained the cup and £3; Captain Bissell took the second prize; and Captain Sweeting the third prize. The match between the two corps at the same distances for the Inter-Corps Challenge Cup was unsatisfactory. As usual on this range, the shooting had to be suspended every few minutes by signal from the butts, with the result that darkness set in before it was possible to finish, and the marking was by no means reliable. The scores of six men instead of ten were taken, and these gave the victory to the 10th Surrey.

The annual regimental prize-meeting of the 39th Middlesex (Finsbury) was held on Monday. Nearly eighty competitors entered, the prizes being of the aggregate value of about £100. Lieutenant-Colonel Radcliffe, the commandant, and for many years a member of the English eight, was one of the competitors. In the first series he made splendid shooting, scoring 67 points out of a possible 70 for the first prize, a watch value 12 guineas. This score has not been equalled with the Snider rifle this season. Sergeant Page was nine points behind, but took £10, Corporal Gilham winning £6 for a like score, but a smaller total at the last range. Colour-Sergeant Hamston, Private Chapman, Sergeant Wolfe, and Corporal G. Brading won £5 each; and among the other successful men were—Major Morris, Private Elliott, Sergeant Guest, Private Jackson, Colour-Sergeant Pride, Bugle-Major Hemens, Sergeant Chalfont, Corporal West, Sergeant Parker, Colour-Sergeant Hoefling, Private Chalfont, Private R. Brading, Colour-Sergeant Brading, Drummer M'Cormack, Drum-Major Miller, Private Dobbs, and Sergeant Broad. In the second series the winners were—Private Oldham, Colour-Sergeant Page, Corporal Vokes, Corporal Beasley, Captain Messenger, Corporal Edwards, Sergeant Watkins, Sergeant E. Brading, Colour-Sergeant Wilcocks, Private Hoare, Private Hext, Sergeant Smith, and Corporal Parry. A match was afterwards fired, ten men aside, between Lieutenant-Colonel Radcliffe's and Major Morris's team, at 500 yards. The latter won.

The Volley-Firing Challenge Cup, value twenty guineas, presented to the 26th Middlesex (her Majesty's Customs and the Docks) Rifles by Mr. Chambers, has been won by A (the Customs) company.

On Wednesday the West Middlesex Volunteers competed at the Scrubbs ranges for a long and valuable list of prizes.

A purse containing £25 has presented, in the name of the English residents in Boulogne, to Walter Hill, second mate of the South-Eastern Railway Company's steam-ship Albert Edward, who on July 22 leaped overboard to the rescue of a passenger who had jumped off the paddle-box to commit suicide.

Reports from Winnipeg describe this year's harvest in the Red River Valley, and throughout Manitoba generally, as a most bountiful one. By the 21st ult. the harvesting was well advanced, and the grain garnered in excellent condition. The average yield has been—of wheat 30 bushels, of barley 40 bushels, and of oats 60 bushels to the acre.

Her Majesty's gun-boat Zephyr, which was sent from St. John's, Newfoundland, with a magistrate of that colony on board, to make inquiries concerning disputes reported to have arisen between the inhabitants of Trinity Bay and a party of American fishermen, ascertained that the rumour was unfounded. No opposition had been offered to the Americans, who, on the contrary, were on friendly terms with the people.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

C E (Broad-street).—We have not the position at hand, but believe the Bishop serves a useful purpose. We have several problems of yours on file, but without the solutions, and should be glad to receive them.

J A (Calcutta).—The black Pawn upon the diagram inclosed in your letter is required to prevent stalemate after the moves 1. Q to Kt 8th, B to B 6th; 2. K takes B. Your last problem, if found correct, shall have early publication.

F H B (Ilkley).—We prefer the problem in two moves, and it shall soon appear.

H B (Prestbury).—The answer to 1. Q to K sq, is 1. Q takes Kt; and, if White play 2. Q to Kt 4th (ch), the adverse King escapes by 2. K takes P. Your defence is weak.

Egypt.—Castling is a privilege the exercise of which is limited by certain conditions, and one of these is that all the squares between the King and Rook shall be unoccupied. You can learn the rules from Staunton's "Praxis."

W S L (Rochester).—You are very probably right, but there is nothing to be gained by reopening the subject. So far from being considered troublesome, your comments are read with pleasure, so pray continue them.

H N N (Cairo).—Too elementary for publication.

F W H (Soho).—The mate is given by 2. Kt to Q 6th.

Alfyn (Plymouth).—We credit you with solutions of Nos. 1849 and 1851.

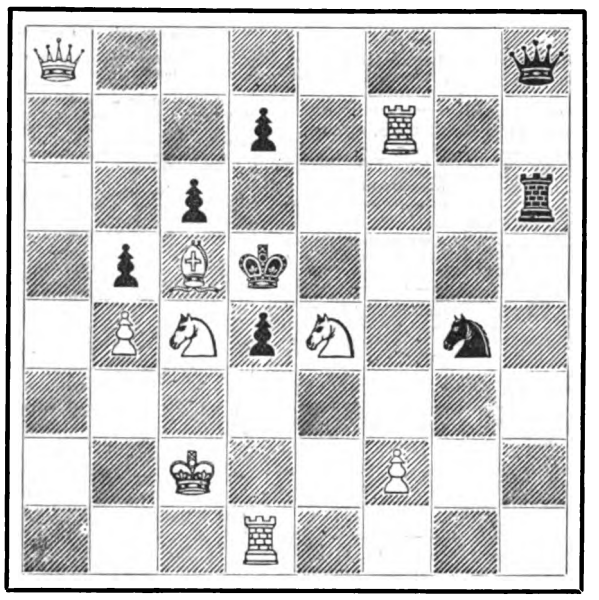
E N F (Abbey-road).—It shall be carefully examined.

J B (Hartford, U.S.A.).—We are greatly obliged by the regular receipt of the Times, and have written to you by the last mail on that and other matters.

J P (Bedford).—The three-move problem can be solved by 1. R to K 4th (ch), K to Q 4th; 2. Kt to R 4th, mating next move. The other is very good, and is marked for early publication.

Correct Solutions of Problem No. 1852 received from Alfyn, J Hargraves, Underwood, H L Foster, R Newcome, W Daly, Isoline, H P West, R Dalton, Nerina, and Giuseppe (Boulogne).

Correct Solutions of Problem No. 1853 received from W (Mentone), W S Leest, H Benthall, Alfyn, W D Jones, S P Macartney, D A (Dublin), R Newcome, Isoline, Giuseppe (Boulogne), Tom, C E, and T P Q.



Correct Solutions of Problem No. 1854 received from L Nathan, W H Leest, H Benthall, Semaj, East Marden, W G Harris, H Longford, W S B, Copianino, Ben Nevis, L Sharswood, B L Dyke, Helen Lee, C S Coxe, W Daly, Isoline, R Dalton, Anonyma, W Warren, E Elsbury, N Cator, S Ferrant, R Jessop, Orazio, E H H V, E P Vulliamy, C C E, R Gray, T Barrington, F R Jeffrey, T Greenhank, R Arnold, N Warner, C Darragh, E Worsley, G L Mayne, R Ingersoll, R Shindler, W Leeson, W O S Harnett, C F Jones, W D Jones, Alpha, Alfyn, J Hargreaves, Norman Rumbelow, R H Brooks, S P Macartney, Lulu, J W W, R F N Banks, F A Bright, E L G, J Bunistead, W Scott, D A (Dublin), P le Page, An Old Hand, Elsie, V, C E, and T P Q.

Solution of Problem No. 1853.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. B to B 3rd	B takes B*
2. R to Q 4th (ch)	Any move
3. Mates accordingly.

* If Black play 1. Q to B 5th, then 2. Q takes Q, &c.; and if 1. B takes R, White continues as above.

PROBLEM No. 1856.
By Rev. W. Lesson.
BLACK.

WHITE.
White to play, and mate in three moves.

Played at Simpson's Divan, between Messrs. Steel and Blackburne.
(Ruy Lopez.)

WHITE (Mr. S.)	BLACK (Mr. B.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th
2. Kt to K B 3rd	Kt to Q B 3rd
3. B to Kt 5th	Kt to B 3rd
4. Kt to B 3rd	B to Kt 5th
5. Kt to Q 5th

5, B takes Kt, followed by 6. Kt takes K P, leads to exchanges and a dull, but at all events an equal, game.

5.	B to B 4th
6. P to Q 3rd	P to K R 3rd
7. Castles	P to Q 3rd
8. P to Q Kt 4th	B to Kt 3rd
9. Kt takes B	R P takes Kt
10. P to K R 3rd	Castles
11. B takes Kt

In the course of the last four moves White has weakened his game on the Queen's side of the board, and this capture serves to strengthen Black's centre.

11.	P takes B
12. Q to K 2nd	Q to K 2nd
13. P to B 3rd	R to K sq
14. B to Q 2nd	P to Q 4th
15. P to Q R 4th	B to R 3rd
16. P to Kt 5th	P takes Kt P
17. P takes P (Kt 4th)	B takes P,
18. R takes R	R takes R
19. P takes P	P to K 5th
20. P to B 4th	Q to B 4th
21. Kt to K 5th	P takes P
22. Q takes P	R to R 6th
23. Q to B 5th	B takes P
24. R to B sq

24. Q to B 8th (ch) seems to offer some chances of, at least, a draw; but White is evidently playing to win.

24.	P to Q Kt 4th
25. B takes P	Q to Q 3rd

Much better than taking the Bishop.

26. B takes P	K takes B
27. Q to Kt 5th (ch)	K to B sq
28. R to K sq	B takes P
29. Q to R 6th (ch)	K to Kt sq
30. Kt to Kt 4th

All this is very ingenious, but unavailing.

30.	Kt to K 5th
31. Q to R 4th	R to R 3rd
32. Kt to K 3rd	Q to K B 3rd
33. Q to Kt 4th (ch)	K to B sq
34. P to B 3rd	Q to Q B 6th
35. R to K 2nd	R to R 8th (ch)
36. K to R 2nd	Q to K 4th (ch)
37. P to B 4th	Q to K 3rd
38. Kt to B 5th

A natural move to avoid exchanging Queens; but he overlooked the counter-stroke that follows.

38.	Q takes Kt
39. Q takes Q	R to R 8th (ch)
40. K takes R	Kt to Kt 6th (ch), and wins.

CHESS INTELLIGENCE.

The match between Messrs. Potter and Mason was brought to a conclusion last week, in accordance with an arrangement, made some time ago, limiting the contest to twenty-one games. The twenty-first game was won by Mr. Potter, who thus brought his score up to six and a half, and, as an equal number of points stood to the credit of Mr. Mason, the match was declared drawn. The termination of the match on any terms would, probably, have been satisfactory to the players, who must, long ago, have become conscious that neither could claim to be superior to the other in the chess arena, and, in the circumstances, a drawn match should satisfy their respective friends. It is tolerably certain that the relative skill of any two chessplayers must be determined in the course of a match comprising twenty-one games, and, therefore, the futility of prolonging the contest is obvious, when, as in this case, each side has won five, and the remainder have been drawn. Mr. Mason's chess force was in some danger of being underrated in consequence of his small score in the Paris tournament; but his careful and steady play throughout this arduous and protracted match shows that he is gifted with all the qualities of a first-class chessplayer; and, if Mr. Potter has not increased his already high reputation, he has, at all events, sustained it against a worthy adversary.

The new Chess Monthly is printed on excellent paper, so much of which is left blank, however, that the magazine appears to have been hurried through the press before its time. The contents comprise ten games, three original problems and six selected from the Shachzeitung, several pretty end games by Mr. Horwitz, besides an introduction and the news of the month. One of the selected games is the first of the match played at Paris in 1858 between Morphy and Anderssen, diligently annotated after the manner of the foreign school. It is, perhaps, a necessity, in the case of the much-edited games of the players mentioned, that many of the notes are not new; but, in any case, we think the republication of these games and notes might be left to the men of the next generation, in whose time they may have become more difficult of access to the general reader than they are at present. We are not disposed to reflect upon the literary deficiencies of the first number. So long as the editors, Messrs. Hoffer and Zukertort, supply us with good games and problems, we shall not find fault with style.

We quote from the Hartford Times the following paragraph for the information of English players engaged in the tourney therein referred to. In answer to several players on the American team in the International correspondence tourney, we will again state that the managers have decided to let the games progress until the players are notified to the contrary. Most of the players desire to fight it out, and perhaps that is the best way.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will of Thomas Nicholas Barnewall, Lord Trimleston, of Trimleston, in the county of Meath, in Ireland, who died on the 4th ult. at his town residence in Park-lane, has just been proved in London by the Hon. Mrs. Anna Maria Louisa Elliot, the daughter, and her husband, Mr. Robert Henry Elliot, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £70,000. The testator leaves to his cousin and life-long friend, the Rev. Francis Hill, an annuity of £300 for life; to his said daughter £999, and he states he would have left her the whole of his real and personal property if she could have inherited it absolutely, but that a clause in her marriage settlement prevented her taking more than the sum he has bequeathed to her; he therefore leaves the residue of his real and personal estate to his said son-in-law absolutely.

The will (dated Dec. 11, 1875) of the Rev. Edward Bowyer Sparke, Canon of Ely Cathedral and Rector of Feltwell, Norfolk, who died on June 28 last, was proved on the 22nd ult, by Mrs. Catharine Maria Sparke, the widow, the sole executrix. the personal estate being sworn under £160,000. The testator gives, devises, and bequeaths all the estate and property, both real and personal, whatsoever and wheresoever, which may belong to him at his decease to his wife absolutely.

The will (dated Dec. 10, 1877) with a codicil (dated the 27th of the same month) of General Charles Hagart, C.B., Colonel of the 7th Hussars, late of Eastbury Manor, near Guildford, who died on July 30 last, was proved on the 26th ult. by Lieutenant-Colonel James McCaul Hargart, C.B., the brother, the acting executor, the personal estate in the United Kingdom being sworn under £100,000. The testator leaves to his sister, Miss Ann Elizabeth Molineux Hagart, £700 per annum for life, and an additional £250 per annum if she shall cease to reside at Eastbury Manor: he also leaves her his horses and carriages, and bed and table linen. His diamonds and pearls are to be divided between his two sisters—viz., Miss Hagart and Mrs. Ellice; and the residue of his real and personal estate is to go to his said brother.

The will (dated May 15, 1878) of Mr. Samuel Smith, late of No. 23, Westbourne-terrace-road, who died on May 20 last, was proved on the 26th ult. by Mrs. Louisa Smith, the widow, Edward Creaton and Stephen Philpot Low, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £90,000. The testator bequeaths to his wife an immediate legacy of £200, and all his furniture, plate, pictures, household effects, horses and carriages absolutely, and his residence, with the stable, and the income of £10,000 for life; £50 each to the London Society for Teaching the Blind to Read, Upper Avenue-road, St. John's-wood, and the Association for the General Welfare of the Blind, Oxford-street and Euston-road; £25 each to the Home for Female Orphans who have lost both parents, Grove-road, St. John's-wood, St. Mary's Hospital, Paddington, and the Princess Louise Home, Wanstead; and the sum of £25 to the Minister and Churchwardens of St. Saviour's Church, Paddington, to distribute at their discretion for the relief of the poor of that district. There are considerable bequests to children and grandchildren, and numerous legacies to his executors, his own and his wife's relatives, servants, and others. The residue of his estate, including his property at Calcutta, he leaves to his sons, Edmund Davidson Smith, William Eastgate Smith, and Donald Hadfield Smith, and his daughters, Mrs. Trehern and Mrs. Green.

The will (dated March 13, 1878) of Mr. Henry Lindsay, late of No. 31, Blessington-street, Dublin, who died on Feb. 17 last, was proved in Dublin by his nephew, Colonel Henry Gore Lindsay, J.P., of Woodlands, Cardiff, the personal estate being sworn under £90,000. The testator left all his property in trust to Colonel Lindsay, in order that he, his brother, the Rev. William T. C. Lindsay, and his two sisters, Mrs. William O'Connor Morris and Miss Alice Lindsay, should equally have a life use therein, with benefit of survivorship, and the whole of the property at the death of the survivor to go to Colonel Lindsay's eldest son.

The will (dated March 13, 1879) of Captain Edward Nares, R.N., late of Ashfield Villa, Scarborough, who died on April 27 last, was proved on the 21st ult. by Markham Law, Charles Edward Preston, and George Boughton Hume, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. Subject to a few legacies, the testator leaves all his real and personal estate to his daughter, Agnes Sophia Nares.

The will (dated Nov. 14, 1876) with a codicil (dated May 17, 1879) of Lady Emily Maria Somers Cocks, late of St. Margaret's Home, East Grinstead, who died on the 5th ult., was proved on the 20th ult. by John Francis Wegg Prosser, the nephew, the acting executor, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. The testatrix bequeaths £14,000, subject to two small annuities, upon trust for her brother Earl Somers for life, and then for her niece, Lady Henry Somerset; the residue of such part of her property as she may by law bequeath for charitable purposes she leaves to the Society of St. Margaret's, East Grinstead.

The will (dated Sept. 22, 1876) with two codicils (dated Nov. 24, 1877, and Nov. 8, 1878) of Mr. Rice Richard Clayton, late of Hedgerley Park, Bucks, who died on May 4 last, was proved on the 19th ult. by the Hon. The will (dated June 5, 1869) with two codicils (dated June 24 and 26, 1871) of Mr. Henry William Berkeley Portman, late of Red Hill, near Lydney, Gloucestershire, who died on March 31 last, was proved on the 18th ult. by the Rev. Henry Fitzhardinge Berkeley Portman, the son, the acting executor, the personalty being sworn under £3000.

The will (dated Aug. 29, 1877) with a codicil (dated July 3, 1878) of Lady Elizabeth Finch, late of No. 9, Chesham-place, who died on June 1 last, was proved on the 9th ult. by the Hon. Daniel Greville Finch, the nephew, the acting executor, the personal estate being sworn under £5000.

The will (dated Jan. 10, 1871) of Mr. Edward Thomas Meynell, late of the Fryerage, near Yarm, and of Kilvington Hall, both in the North Riding of Yorkshire, who died on March 17 last at Florence, was proved on the 16th inst. by Mrs. Matilda Meynell, the widow, the sole executrix, the personal estate being sworn under £4000.

The will (dated April 10, 1878) of Mr. Heyman Lazarus Samson, formerly of No. 8, Woburn-place, Russell-square, but late of Devonshire-place, Brighton, who died on July 8 last, has been proved by Mrs. Hannah Samson, the widow, Raphael Harris, and Hyman Montagu, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £10,000.

Canon Basil Wilberforce has allowed the use of St. Mary's Rectory grounds, Southampton, next Sunday, for the performance of the Sunday afternoon band.

Sir Charles Legard, Bart., M.P., and Sir Harcourt Johnstone, Bart., M.P., jointly opened a bazaar at the Spa, Scarborough, on the 4th inst., in aid of the funds of the volunteer rifle corps, which has for some time been encumbered with a debt contracted in their new outfit.

TESTIMONIALS.

THOMAS FAIRBANK, M.D., of Windsor, referring to Anti-Fat the "British Medical Journal" of June 7, 1879, says:—
"I gave some of this extract (Fucus Vesiculosus) to a very corpulent lady, who in three months lost three stones in weight without any change of diet. Since then I have frequently given it for reducing weight, depending on the accumulation of adipose tissue, and have never found it fail. I may state that a patient who has been lately taking it as an anti-fat, and who always suffered very much from rheumatic pains about the body, has been entirely free from such trouble while she has been taking the extract, a fact which she quite independently noted."

EDWARD PARRETT, Esq., Chemist, of Market-square, Winslow, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 12, 1879:—
"One lady to whom I have sold Allan's Anti-Fat has decreased 91b. in four weeks."

THOMAS NEWBOULD, Esq., Chemist, of Bradford, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 11, 1879:—
"The gentleman for whom I obtained four bottles of Allan's Anti-Fat has derived great benefit from the same, and has recommended it to a friend. Please send me one dozen at once."

C. J. ARELASTER, Esq., Chemist, of Birmingham, writes, under date of June 4, 1879:—
"Have just received a capital account of the effects of Anti-Fat in reducing corpulency."

"22, Redcliffe-street, South Kensington, S.W., June 2, 1879.
"To the Proprietors of Allan's Anti-Fat.
"Gentlemen,—I have tried your wonderful medicine Anti-Fat both in America and this country. Through its use I can thin down at command, closing on an average five pounds per week.—Yours respectfully, "HARRY BRAHAM."

T. L. REEVE, Esq., of Birmingham, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of July 1, 1879:—
"A gentleman having used one dozen bottles of Allan's Anti-Fat, reports a satisfactory reduction."

J. A. STEWARD, Esq., of Worcester, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 18, 1879:—
"Three bottles of Anti-Fat have produced a wonderful effect."

Herr F. ABBOTT, of the Elbe, Prussia, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of July 15, 1879:—
"I have much pleasure to inform you that by taking six bottles of your Allan's Anti-Fat I am ten pounds lighter."

LONDON: SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 1879.

The appearance of slight clouds above the political horizon has been followed, as might have been expected, by a prevalent feeling of suspense in the public mind, which, whether destined to be transient or of some considerable duration, has had the immediate effect of extinguishing the very few sparks of commercial revival which had begun to show themselves. The Cabul Massacre is, in every aspect in which it can be viewed, a most calamitous event. Further tidings from Afghanistan do not diminish its importance. The conduct of the Ameer Yakoob Khan with whom the Treaty of Gundamuk was concluded, whether dictated by weakness or prompted by illwill, tends rather to foment than to stifle the suspicion that his further co-operation with us cannot be relied upon. The mutiny of the Afghan regiments, which culminated in a murderous attack upon the British Residency, does not, on a closer acquaintance with the details, take the form of a merely local and isolated disturbance. The contagion of rebellion, or perhaps we may more correctly say of armed opposition to the domination of British influence in the direction of Afghan policy, is extending beyond the walls of the capital, and the mutineers have already advanced to Jellalabad. Some of the Hill Tribes, it is true, have announced their determination to abide faithfully by the stipulations of the Treaty recently concluded. But the inevitable difficulties to which the assault upon the British Mission has given rise cannot but very seriously embarrass the movements of the Indian Government, and, in sympathy with it, the position of the Government at home.

The first step (about which there is no great difference of opinion) is an immediate advance of Indian forces upon Cabul. The obstacles calculated to impede it will, in all probability, be triumphantly battled with. The city will, no doubt, be occupied by our troops and effectual measures be taken to exact some adequate penalty for the offence which has been committed. It is not to be concealed, however, that this is the easiest part of the task devolving upon us. The question will then present itself whether we will, or can, hold fast to the policy embodied in the Treaty of Gundamuk. Are we to persist in the maintenance of a British Resident at Cabul? Can he be of the slightest service to the Indian Government unless he is able to fulfil the duties of his office with the acquiescence, if not with the cheerful consent, of the Afghan people? Must he not be effectually protected from such surprises as that which issued in the death of our late Envoy; and is it possible that, being guaranteed his position by external force, he would yet command opportunities of becoming possessed of the details of policy over which he will be appointed to watch? Besides, it is not by any means to be taken for granted that the occupation of Cabul, to which the safety of a Resident British Agent in that city would oblige us, would not expand into the occupation and annexation of the entire country.

And this, just now, is, perhaps, the most embarrassing problem which the Government will be driven to solve. They have repudiated, and no doubt with the utmost sincerity, the policy of annexation. They will not be driven into it if they can possibly avoid it. The responsibility which it will involve is heavier than they are disposed to assume. To some extent, doubtless, it will render the Government of India less secure than it has been. In two respects would this be the case. It would impose a fresh burden on Indian resources, and it would push our frontier much nearer to Russia—so near, indeed, that no very distant collision might be reasonably anticipated. But there is already a party being formed at home whose demand for annexation, coupled with the circumstances of the case, may render it impossible, or all but impossible, for the Government to maintain its determination, however fixed. All this brings under cognisance an outlook as indefinite as it is gloomy in its character, and the waste of British resources upon a Central Asian War points to a not very remote decadence of Imperial stability.

There is suspense in Africa as well as in Asia. Every one takes it for granted, and reasonably takes it for granted, that the Zulu War is practically at an end. But, supposing Cetewayo captured and formally deposed from his Sovereignty, and assuming that the Government substituted by Sir Garnet Wolseley for that of the King to be accepted and adopted by his principal chiefs, there remain several other knotty questions to be solved affecting other portions of her Majesty's South African Dominions. No one can foresee what will come out of the unrest of the fierce and warlike tribes in the neighbourhood of the Transvaal. From the Boers themselves we may meet with unexpected troubles, and, perhaps, deep draughts upon Imperial resources. In fact, a spirit is abroad which it will require special wisdom, not to say special forbearance, to soothe once more to rest. The future cannot be distinctly foreseen. Hence, confidence, which is the soul of business, is withheld, or, if temporarily extended, is but too quickly withdrawn. Nature seems to conspire with political events to add to our discouragement. The sunshine of a day or two is almost invariably succeeded by blighting storms. Nothing prospers. All trades are dull, or even worse than dull. Distress hangs out its signals in most parts of the country; nor are we surprised that numbers of people augur the very worst from the threatening symptoms that show themselves amongst us. For ourselves, although we must confess that facts present just now a dismal appearance, we see no sufficient reason for deducing from them such dismal inferences. The country is passing through a very troubled experience, no doubt—perhaps it has not yet seen its darkest day. But we are very far from convinced that brighter times are not in store for us. Great Britain, we may depend upon it, has in reserve an incalculable volume of life and energy which four or five years of sore trial and misfortune cannot have exhausted. The "better days" which have already dawned upon other countries will, in due season, reach us also, and perhaps, in looking back upon the past, we may detect from our vantage-ground a "needs-be" for what we are now suffering.

THE COURT.

The Queen, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, and Princess Beatrice attended Divine service on Sunday, performed at Balmoral Castle by the Rev. Archibald Campbell, of Crathie. Mr. Campbell dined with her Majesty. Princes Christian, Victor, and Albert of Schleswig-Holstein lunched with the Queen on the previous day, when they left for the south. On Monday her Majesty, accompanied by the Duke and Duchess of Connaught and Princess Beatrice, drove to the Linn of Dee and the Linn of Quoich. Sir John Rose, Bart., G.C.M.G., and Lieutenant-Colonel and Mrs. Stanley Clarke dined with the Queen. Colonel Sir Evelyn Wood, V.C., K.C.B., and Lieutenant-Colonel Redvers Buller, V.C., C.B., who had been the guests of her Majesty for several days, left Balmoral on Saturday last; and the Right Hon. R. A. Cross, who had been Minister in attendance upon the Queen, also left the castle. Her Majesty, with the members of the Royal family, has driven out daily, and has visited Invercauld and other localities. The Duke of Connaught has had good sport deerstalking; and the Duchess of Connaught, with Princess Beatrice, has taken frequent rides.

Prince Leopold landed at Aberdeen on Saturday last from a cruise on board her Majesty's ship Lively, and arrived at Balmoral in the afternoon, attended by Captain Waller and Mr. Royle.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Princess of Wales, with her children, participated in celebrating the sixty-second birthday of the Queen of Denmark on the 7th inst. A Drawingroom was held in honour of the auspicious occasion at Bernsdorf Castle. The Royal dinner party included only the members of the Royal family, with their respective suites; and in the evening a small reception was held at the castle. Princes Albert Victor and George of Wales took leave of the Princess and the King and Queen of Denmark on the 10th inst., upon their return to England, preparatory to embarking upon their tour of circumnavigation of the globe and visits to our chief colonial possessions. Their Royal Highnesses embarked from Bellevue, Copenhagen, on board the Royal yacht Slesvig. The Diplomatic Corps and Court officials, with many of the nobility, were present. The Princess, with her daughters, was accompanied by the King and Queen, and the Crown Prince of Denmark and the Grand Duchess Xenia, and the Czarewitch and the Czarevna with their two sons, and Prince Wilhelm and Prince Hans of Glücksborg. After an affecting leavetaking the young Princes of Wales waved their last good-by from the bridge of the Slesvig, which steamed away for Lübeck. Their Royal Highnesses arrived yesterday week at Marlborough House, where they joined the Prince of Wales. The Prince, accompanied by Princess Frederica of Hanover and Princes Albert Victor and George, went to the promenade concerts, Covent Garden Theatre, on Saturday last; and on Monday his Royal Highness, with his sons, witnessed the performance of "Madame Favart" at the Strand Theatre. The Prince, accompanied by Prince Louis of Battenberg, has also visited the Princess's Theatre. On Wednesday the Prince, accompanied by Princes Albert Victor and George, arrived at Portsmouth, and were the guests of Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, at Government House. His Royal Highness inspected the Bacchante corvette, aboard which his sons have been entered.

His Excellency the Danish Minister and Madame de Bülow have returned to town from Hewell Grange, Lord Windsor's seat in Worcestershire. Madame Thiers has arrived at the French Embassy, Albert-gate, from Paris, on a visit to his Excellency Admiral Pothuau. The Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, accompanied by Mrs. Gladstone and Mr. Herbert and Miss Gladstone, has left town for the Continent.

FASHIONABLE MARRIAGES.

The marriage of the Hon. Adelaide Fanny Hood, third daughter of Viscount Bridport, of Cricket St. Thomas, Somersetshire, to Commander Herbert F. Gye, R.N., took place on Tuesday. The bride wore a dress of ivory-coloured satin, with Brussels point-lace flounces; and the veil was of old Brussels point. The bridesmaids were the Hon. Rosa Hood, Miss Gye, the Hon. Georgina Windsor Clive, Lady Margaret Seymour, Miss Mary and Miss Sibyl Hood. They were attired in dresses of cream-coloured cashmere, trimmed with Breton lace of the same shade, and with bonnets to match, and they also each wore a pearl-and-gold brooch, the gift of Commander Gye. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. G. Gowring, assisted by the Rev. D. H. Spencer (Vicar of Wincham) and the Rev. T. Shaw. Breakfast was served at the residence of Viscount Bridport, after which the bride and bridegroom left for Devonshire. Among the bridal presents were an Indian shawl, the gift of the Queen, a silver salver, given by the tenants on Viscount Bridport's estate, and a silver breakfast set, given by seventy-five members of the household.

The O'Conor Don, M.P. for Roscommon, was married on Tuesday at Kingstown, in the county of Dublin, to Miss O'Farrell, daughter of Mr. J. O'Farrell. The newly-married couple left shortly after the ceremony for England.

Marriages are arranged between Mr. Henry Turner, Postmaster-General of Madras, and Frances, youngest daughter of the late Mr. W. H. P. Gore Langton, M.P., and Lady Anna Gore Langton; and between Mr. Christopher W. Wilson, of High Park, Kendal, eldest son of Mr. William Wilson, of Rigmaden Park, and Miss Edith Farquhar, youngest daughter of Lady Townsend Farquhar and the late Sir Walter Minto Townsend Farquhar, Bart., M.P. for Hertford.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

A show of fruit and autumn flowers was held on Tuesday at the Royal Horticultural Society's Gardens, South Kensington, when several new and rare plants were exhibited. The display of fruit was very limited.

A memorial tablet to the late Baron Lionel de Rothschild, erected in the East London Synagogue, was on Tuesday unveiled by his eldest son, Sir Nathaniel de Rothschild, M.P., and a choral service was held, at which the Rev. Professor Marks presided, and the Rev. Dr. Adler gave an address.

Mr. J. L. Haddan, M.I.C.E., gave a lecture last Tuesday at the United Service Institution on "Military Tramways," advocating for use in Afghanistan the construction of a tramway composed of a single rail supported upon posts, the load to be carried being slung pannier fashion.

The annual meeting of the governors of St. John's Hospital, Leicester-square, was held on Monday at the Westminster Palace Hotel, Mr. W. N. Massey, M.P., in the chair. The report, which was agreed to, stated that the hospital had made considerable progress during the past three years.

The stud of 129 horses, the property of Mr. Carleton V. Blyth, who has horsed the Oxford and Cambridge coaches during the past season, was sold by auction at Tattersall's on Monday. Many of the fast roadsters and horses of good blood realised "three figures," and the entire stud produced good average prices.

The Charterhouse School of Science and Art (the largest in the United Kingdom), of which the Rev. J. Rodgers, M.A., is president, will recommence its work the 27th inst. Several well-known lecturers have been added to the teaching staff. A chemical laboratory is now available for the use of students. Classes in Latin, Greek, French, and German will be open to students during the session.

On Tuesday the distillery of Messrs. J. Currie, at Bromley-by-Bow, was destroyed by fire. Soon after twelve o'clock smoke was observed issuing from the mill, and an alarm was given immediately. In spite of every effort, the fire spread throughout the whole of the premises, and in five hours the buildings were a ruin. Fifteen engines were present, and Captain Shaw personally directed the efforts of his men. Damage to the extent of £200,000 was done, little being saved but the books and two stills.

A meeting of the parents of children attending the United Westminster Schools was held on Tuesday night to consider the position of Mr. Goffin, the head master, as affected by the report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons. The tone of the meeting was favourable to Mr. Goffin, and resolutions were passed expressing confidence in his character and integrity, and affirming that the parents of the boys refused to come to any decision on the case until he had had an open trial, with every opportunity of defending himself.

More than a year ago Sir Edmund Henderson and Captain Harris sanctioned the formation of ambulance classes among the metropolitan police by the St. John Ambulance Association, and similar classes have lately been formed in the City police force by permission of Colonel Fraser and Major Bowman. Last week a meeting was held at the Snow-hill police-station, and Sir Edward Perrott presented certificates on behalf of the Duke of Manchester and the chapter of the Order of St. John to the successful candidates at the recent examination.

Last month the officers of the Fishmongers' Company seized at and near Billingsgate Market and on board boats lying off there the large quantity of 60 tons 12 cwt of fish as unfit for human food. Of this 55 tons 15 cwt were brought by land and 4 tons 16 cwt by water. The fish numbered 53,687, and included 14 bream, 16 brill, 67 coalfish, 682 cod, 33 crabs, 2 conger eels, 200 dabs, 36 dories, 400 flounders, 1120 gurnets, 9440 haddocks, 60 hake, 5225 herrings, 174 ling, 2426 lobsters, 866 mullets, 1860 plaice, 1 salmon, 12,110 smelts, 340 soles, 510 thornbacks, 50 trout, 25 turbot, and 17,030 whiting; and, in addition, there were seized 12 bags of oysters, 181 bushels of mussels, 6 of cockles, 457 of periwinkles, and 119 of whelks, 1778 gallons of shrimps, 172 quarts of whitebait, 1715 lb. of eels, and 1 kit of pickled salmon.

Last week 2394 births and 1262 deaths were registered in London. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 18, whereas the deaths were 104 below, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths included 3 from smallpox, 33 from measles, 38 from scarlet fever, 13 from diphtheria, 42 from whooping-cough, 22 from different forms of fever, and 134 from diarrhœa. At the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, the mean reading of the barometer last week was 29·58 in.; the lowest reading was 29·37 in. on Tuesday morning, and the highest 29·90 in. on Wednesday evening. The mean temperature of the air was 57·6 deg., being 0·8 deg. below the average in the corresponding week of the twenty years ending 1868. The duration of registered bright sunshine in the week was 21·8 hours, the sun being above the horizon during 90·4 hours.

POLITICAL.

Since the Chancellor of the Exchequer spoke at Exeter on the Cabul Disaster no Minister has found occasion to say anything fresh regarding the massacre of our Envoy and his suite. Mr. W. H. Smith on Saturday last congratulated Henley-on-Thames upon the opening of new National Schools for the favourite riverside town; and the First Lord of the Admiralty delivered himself with his habitual thoughtfulness and sound common sense in enforcing the necessity of the State seeing that all children had facilities for acquiring a useful elementary education, though acknowledging the great good effected by voluntary action such as led to the erection of the schools that day inaugurated. The opportunity was not deemed fit to answer Mr. Grant Duff's acrimonious denunciation of the Marquis of Salisbury as responsible for the Cabul misfortune. Nor could the Elgin philippic of Mr. Grant Duff well have been replied to by Sir Stafford Northcote on Tuesday, for the right hon. Baronet was then so far practically engaged in the reopening of the parish church of Iddesleigh, in North Devon, that he read the first lesson at the religious service, and confined himself at the indispensable lunch that followed to proposing very briefly "The Bishop and Clergy of the Diocese," and to gracefully complimenting the absent Bishop of Exeter. We furthermore hear that the Chancellor of the Exchequer is next month to visit Dublin, with the view of rearranging some of the Irish Government offices.

The Marquis of Hartington, meantime, opens fire on the Government at the close of the week at Newcastle-on-Tyne, the programme of his Lordship's visit thereto comprising the opening of new schools and a Junior Liberal Club, the presentation of addresses in the Townhall, and speechmaking before a popular meeting in the Tyne Theatre. Sir William Harcourt visits Liverpool early in October, to be entertained by the Liberals of that city, and not improbably to swell the chorus of censure which is gathering round the heads of Ministers.

The Earl of Beaconsfield all this while appears to be acting with respect to Opposition speeches on the principle which Napoleon adopted in regard to his letters—i.e., by leaving them unanswered to let them answer themselves.

Mr. Gladstone, even on the eve of his departure for his Continental holiday, could not bring himself to observe equal reticence. Writing from Harley-street on Saturday to a Dudley correspondent, the right hon. gentleman fired a preliminary shot against the Government—

> With its dishonouring and destructive policy, of which we have had the latest, but, I fear, not the final, fruit in this horrible massacre at Cabul.

Ireland provides statesmen with matter for grave consideration in a series of large "tenant-right" meetings, one of which, at Mallow, last Sunday, was addressed by Sir Joseph M'Kenna and other M.P.'s, and passed resolutions calling the attention of the Government to the distressed condition of the country, and suggesting the institution of State relief and a general reduction of rent.

The election for Nairn and Morayshire, of more than local interest in the present juncture, took place on Wednesday, Brodie of Brodie being the Conservative, and Sir George Macpherson Grant the Liberal candidate. Sir G. Grant polled 959 votes against 701 given for Mr. Brodie.

"THE WHIP HAND."

The picture by Mr. G. A. Storey, A.R.A., an Engraving of which adorns our front page, was noticed in one of the annual Exhibitions of the Royal Academy. It is a pleasing subject of an animated character; for, not to speak of the poet's beautiful fancy (read Spenser's "Faerie Queene") of gentle Una accompanied by her mighty lion with equal gentleness as by her "milk-white lamb," one is touched with admiring sympathy at the sight of a naturally fierce brute creature thus owning the sway of excellent womanhood; Beauty leading the Beast a willing captive, and teaching him the mild manners of social and domestic life. This is an allegory of humane civilisation, the true moral lesson of which, in every age of the world's progress, needs to be constantly repeated by our didactic artists and poets, that it may be laid to heart and faithfully put in practice through all our dealings with men of savage condition, whereby, as Shakspeare says,

> Your gentleness shall force,
> More than your force move me to gentleness.

The girl's bright face, glowing with health and good spirits, assures us that she has nerve sufficient for an office more really difficult and formidable than managing this obedient canine pet, who would die before he would permit her to be harmed by foes of any species, and who delights in every caressing word or touch of his young mistress above the gratification of his natural instincts. She is, nevertheless, a little anxious to restrain the excitable disposition of her eager friend in the presence of a flock of sheep, or a grazing bullock, which they have to pass in the meadow, or perhaps one of the deer she has seen afar in the park; and this is why she has secured him by twisting the lash of her pretty riding-whip (with its handle made of a fawn's foot) through the great dog's collar, and holding it with a determined grasp. She has, in fact, converted the whip into a sort of bridle or halter, which serves perfectly well to convince the gallant hound of her intention not to let him run into any kind of mischief. The whip is not likely to be used or needed in a more severe punitive admonition by a hand so kind as hers.

THE LATE MR. WILLIAM JENKYNS.

One of the four Englishmen whose lives have been taken by the outbreak of ferocious violence among the Afghan soldiery at Cabul, on the 3rd inst., is Mr. William Jenkyns, of the Bengal Civil Service, Secretary to the Envoy. He was a son of Mr. Jenkyns, Inspector of Works at Aberdeen, and was just thirty years of age, as he was born, in Aberdeen, on Aug. 23, 1849. After receiving the ordinary education, he was engaged on the teaching staff of the Free East Church School, now the St. Andrew's-street Public School. He then went through the Arts curriculum at Aberdeen University, and distinguished himself in the various classes, carrying off a large number of prizes. After obtaining the degree of M.A. he entered for the Indian Civil Service examinations, and passed these with high honours, his name being fourth on the list for that year. He went out to India about eight years ago, and was stationed, as Assistant-Commissioner, in various places in Cashmere and the Punjaub, where his legal and linguistic abilities secured for him a high position in the service. He gained numerous honours for his knowledge of Indian Jurisprudence, political economy, and geography, and recently he was awarded a prize of about £200 for excellence in the Persian language. His merits as an administrator had not been unrecognised by those in authority. He was appointed to an important post in the first Embassy to Afghanistan under Sir Lewis Pelly, and recently, on the conclusion of peace, he was appointed Secretary to the Envoy and First Political Assistant, and was thus next in rank to Major Cavagnari. The latest news was received from him about a fortnight ago, and in this letter he spoke hopefully of his position and prospects, and mentioned that he had been decorated with the order of the Companion of the Indian Empire. It may be mentioned that Mr. Jenkyns was intrusted with the conveyance of the Treaty of Peace for ratification by the Viceroy at Simla, after it had been signed by the Ameer, and it was in respect of this service that the above decoration was conferred. Mr. Jenkyns was held in high esteem, not less for his scholarly ability than for his general kindly nature. It is needless to add that the news of his tragic fate has come with terrible effect on his father and the other members of his family, all the more so as they had been looking forward to his early return home on furlough. His acceptance of the honourable and distinguished post at which he has now fallen prevented his immediate return to this country.

The portrait of Mr. Jenkyns is from a photograph by Messrs. Bourne and Shepherd, of India.

CABUL AND THE BALA HISSAR.

The city of Cabul, which is the capital of Afghanistan undef the Ameers of the ruling dynasty, is situated on the banks or the Cabul river, in an elevated plain 6300 ft. above the sea-level, inclosed by high rocky hills on the south and west sides. It has about 60,000 inhabitants, and a considerable trade. The principal articles of commerce are fruit and merchandise from India. An active trade is also carried on with Bokhara and with Candahar. There are separate bazaars for each trade, and there was a great bazaar, called "Chouchut" or "Char Chouk," for the whole city. This was a kind of arcade, about 200 yards long and ten yards across. It was blown up by Pollock's order in 1842, but Dost Mahomed took steps for repairing the damage that was then done. The present edifice is said to have no claim to architectural beauty. One of the most remarkable sights is the public cooking-shops, which are very numerous, as few people cook at home. The "kabobs" or cooked meats of Cabul, are famed far and wide. To these must be added a list of delicacies in the shape of fruits, sweets, and cooling drinks, that have earned for Cabul an imperishable name as a place where good quarters and good living can be obtained at a very moderate cost. The gardens of Cabul are well known for their beauty, those in particular called the Gardens of the King Timour and that round the tomb of the Emperor Baber. The latter is the favourite promenade of the townspeople. Burnes and other travellers have discoursed of the beautiful view of the city that is to be obtained from the towers and hills round. Those who have approached it from Jellalabad have told us of the favourable impression it has made upon them after traversing the barren and rugged country of the Khoord Cabul and Jugduluk passes. Cabul improves, also, on acquaintance; for, except in the wet weather, it is a clean town, and the air is at all times salubrious.

The Bala Hissar is a fortified inclosure, comprising nearly a fourth of the whole area of the city of Cabul, and surrounded by a wall which follows every rise and fall of the rocky slopes on which the palace-citadel stands. "Not that the Bala Hissar deserves either name," says a late writer, "for either as palace or citadel it is contemptible, being, in fact, a huge congregation of huts, interspersed with shabby gardens and diversified by a crumbling mosque—the Royal Mosque—and the half dilapidated buildings known as the Harem Serai and Palace and old Embassy. Turning at the highest point to look down upon the town which the Bala Hissar undoubtedly commands, but which in a riot as invariably falls into the hands of the populace, Cabul lies spread out, a monotonous level of flat mud roofs, broken at very infrequent intervals by the variety of a paltry mosque or double-storied house."

The Bala Hissar is divided into two portions. The inner citadel is small, and could only hold a limited number of men. It is probably here that Yakoob Khan has taken refuge. The main portion of the fortress is large and commodious, and could hold 5000 men. Despite, however, its imposing appearance and its elevation, 150 feet above the town, the Bala Hissar is in too dilapidated a state to be held for any length of time against an English army. The only occasion on which the Bala Hissar has undergone an assault in modern times was when Dost Mahomed besieged it fifty years ago, and captured it by blowing up one of the towers. In fact, the Bala Hissar has been always held as the Royal palace, because it was a place sufficiently strong to resist the seditious risings on the part of the populace, and it afforded a place of security against any sudden outburst of rebellion. It was also very convenient as a prison-house for rivals or refractory vassals. But as a fortress against the attack of disciplined troops the Bala Hissar is practically incapable of defence. It will probably surrender to us without any attempt being made to defend it. The Afghans, as they have always done before, both in their wars with us and among themselves, will evacuate it on the approach of an English army.

The Cabul River is crossed by three or four bridges, and one of these is in the heart of the Kizilbash quarter of the city. These Kizilbashes are of Persian descent. They are supposed to have settled in Cabul in the time of Nadir, although some records date their residence further back. They occupy a quarter of the town separated from the rest of the city, and have always been considered an industrious portion of the community. We had many friends among them during the old occupation, and the house which Sir Alexander Burnes occupied was situated close to their quarter. At one time they used to form the body-guard of the Kings, but the Barakzais have curtailed their privileges. There is also a large Hindoo element in the population; but the most numerous and the most aggressive class is that of the Afghan nationality, who are termed Cabulees. Cabul is, after Bokhara, probably the city in Asia where the fanatical zeal of the Mussulmans runs highest. The Mollahs are a numerous and all-powerful class, and dervishes are met with in great numbers. Cabul is therefore a true metropolis. In its bazaars are to be seen the numerous tribes of northern Afghanistan, as well as travellers and merchants from Turkestan, Bokhara Khiva, Cashmere, and India. It has flourished on the trade which has been brought to it by these numerous wayfarers. But, singular as it may appear, these cosmopolitan advantages have by no means mollified the natural character of its inhabitants. They are still, as they have ever been, the turbulent Cabulees. It is matter for regret that the future of a spot so favoured in every way as this city should have been placed in danger by the fury of its mob, and that the barbarous act which has just sullied for a second time its streets should quite possibly entail upon it the loss of those privileges which it has only possessed for the purpose of abusing them. The greatest punishment that could be inflicted on the Cabulees would be to remove the capital of the State back to the old Durani city of Candahar.

We present three views of Cabul and the Bala Hissar, the Durbar Khaneh or Ameer's Reception Hall, built by Shah Soojah-ool-Moolk, and the tomb of the Emperor Baber; these are drawn, by permission, after the lithographs of Atkinson's "Sketches in Afghanistan," published by Mr. Henry Graves of Pall-mall East.

The tusk of ivory sent by Cetewayo to Lord Chelmsford as a peace offering, or rather as an evidence of his desire for peace, arrived safely at the Colonial Office, Whitehall, on Monday. The tusk is 7 ft. in length and about half a yard in circumference at the girth, and it is the finest specimen of an elephant's tusk that has probably ever reached this country.

THE AFGHAN WAR.

The renewal of our troublesome war in Afghanistan, in consequence of the revolt at Cabul and massacre of the British Resident Envoy with his companions on the 3rd inst., is now the most urgent topic of public discussion. We gave the Portrait of Sir Louis Cavagnari in our last, and related the circumstances of this terrible affair, which has excited general feelings of sorrow and indignation. The Portraits of Mr. William Jenkyns, Secretary to the Envoy, who also fell a victim, with Captain Walter Hamilton and Dr. A. H. Kelly, to the ferocity of the Cabul mob and of the Ameer's mutinous soldiery, appears in this week's Paper. A view of the city of Cabul, with the fortified precinct of the Bala Hissar, in which the British Residency, the Ameer's palace, and the military barracks were situated, has been drawn for our Journal, by permission, from one of the lithographs composing a volume, published in 1842 by Mr. H. Graves, of Pall-mall East, entitled "Sketches in Afghanistan, by James Atkinson, Esq." We are indebted to the same volume for two other Illustrations—that of the Durbar Khaneh, or Reception Hall of the Ameer, which adjoins the Harem Serai or Palace; and that of the Tomb of the Emperor Baber, who reigned at Cabul in the early part of the sixteenth century, and who conquered Upper India, establishing his Imperial throne at Delhi. The scene of Afghan village life, with peasant women and girls employed in washing clothes, is from a Sketch by Mr. William Simpson, our Special Artist late in Afghanistan. He contributes also the portrait, drawn by himself at Gundamuk, of Daoud Shah, the Sipah Salah or Commander-in-Chief of Yakoob Khan's army. From a military correspondent at Candahar, Major W. G. Byron, of the 60th Rifles, we have received the Sketch, drawn by Sergeant Blackburne of that regiment, which gives a view of the cantonments of the troops, and the head-quarters of General Sir Donald Stewart, commanding the British force at Candahar, with the city at a short distance in the background.

There is still much doubt concerning the attitude of the Ameer, Yakoob Khan, and of the Afghan Chiefs and nation with respect to the British Government. It is now seriously apprehended that the shocking affair of the 3rd inst. may prove to be something more formidable than an accidental outbreak of rebellious soldiers, or a mere local insurrection of the city populace. But the immediate occasion seems to have been the presence of Sir Louis Cavagnari and his party at the Residency, with his escort of seventy-six Punjaub Guides, under the provisions of the fourth article of the Treaty of Gundamuk, concluded on May 26 as the result of the late war.

It should be remembered that the danger of enforcing such an arrangement at Cabul had been repeatedly insisted upon throughout all the Afghan negotiations and discussions of past years. The late Shere Ali endeavoured to convince Lord Lytton that "the permanent presence of a Mission would embarrass him in his internal administration, causing annoyance to the patriotic party and raising the hopes of the discontented." In conference with Sir Lewis Pelly at Peshawur, his agent, Noor Mohammed, exhibited the same view of the Ameer's position. "The people of Afghanistan," he urged, "have a dread of this proposal; and it is firmly fixed in their minds and deeply rooted in their hearts, that if Englishmen or other Europeans once set foot in their country it will sooner or later pass out of their hands. In no way can they be reassured on this point; and it is impossible to remove these opinions from their minds, for they advance many proofs in support of them. Therefore, since the opinions of the people of Afghanistan are such, the protection of the Englishmen in the midst of these hills is difficult, nay, impossible, because the whole army and the subjects of the Government are of these mountain people. . . . Besides this, there are some people who, out of hostility to the Ameer, would secretly kill some Sahib in order to mar the friendship of the two Governments. Was not the Commander-in-Chief of the Ameer's army murdered by these people in the very midst of 20,000 of his troops? Now the Ameer would have to protect the Sahibs with his army; but if he could not protect the life of his own Commander-in-Chief, then in what manner could he protect the life of any other person? Again, if at any time a disturbance or revolution should occur in Afghanistan, the Sahibs would certainly be destroyed. . . . Therefore, what would be the advantage if the Ameer should comply with such a proposal, in which there is both loss of reputation and injury to Afghanistan, as well as bitterness of feeling, besides alienation of the two Governments either now or hereafter?"

A short time before this Conference, when Lord Salisbury, then Secretary of State for Indian Affairs, urged upon Lord Northbrook, the predecessor of Lord Lytton in India, that he should insist upon the same point, which both Lord Mayo and Lord Lawrence had decided not to do, the Viceroy took the opinions of his Council, and of the principal English civil and military officials conversant with Afghan politics. They were unanimously opposed to it; but General Reynell Taylor, one of the most experienced, was particularly earnest in trying to prevent so mistaken a step. He quite admitted that it seemed "unreasonable that we should not have the power of sending officers to study the lay of the country, and thus to understand the full bearings of the game we are supposed to be playing; and so he must confess, judged by all ordinary rules, it was. It was only the extraordinary difficulties of the case which rendered it not so unnatural a result as it appeared at first sight." The difficulties of the case lay in the character of the people, and their fanatical aversion to foreigners. "It may be a fact that the Ameer himself is somewhat afraid of the mischief and annoyances, if not real dangers, as he considers them, that would follow from the presence of British officers; but he is still more afraid of Afghan opinion, and averse to running counter to the strong national feeling against permitting our interference in any shape with their affairs, which is still the predominant feeling in the breasts of the Afghan Sirdars with regard to us." The majority of them, General Taylor said, "appear to be senselessly rabid on this point, losing no opportunity of exacerbating this prejudice in the Ameer's mind against the admission of British officers to the country in any form."

General Taylor, after referring to the cry of "Afghanistan for the Afghans!" says that the true key to the reiterated plea of the Ameer and his advisers, "Do anything but force British officers on us," is to be found in the dread of something occurring to the Mission, which it would be impossible for the Ameer's Government to prevent.

In the categorical objections laid before the Conference at Simla, in 1876, by Shere Ali, occurred this one:—"That the presence at Cabul of even a temporary Mission might create excitement, and be attended with personal risk to the Envoy." As we have now to lament the death of Sir Louis Cavagnari, the brave and devoted instrument of a fatal policy, it may be well to quote the opinion expressed by him as to the appointment of British officers in Afghanistan. Major Cavagnari then (April, 1875) considered that the Ameer "would probably declare that the unsettled state of his kingdom prevented his being able to guarantee the safety of the officer appointed." After pointing out the advantages which would result from the presence of English residents in Afghanistan, he says, "But should the Ameer refuse, or unwillingly assent to the measure, it would possibly be productive of very evil results. Everything would be done to thwart the action of the Resident, and not unlikely some insult would be offered, which would either result in his having to be withdrawn, or supported in his position by force of arms." The cause is explained by the following observation of our Envoy:—"The Sirdars, who probably hope to become Governors in the different Afghan provinces, would, like the Ameer, be adverse to the appointment of European British officers. They probably fear that the appointment of such Residents would be merely a preliminary to annexation."

It is also worth while to bear in mind the distinct protest, long before this time, which was put on record in a Viceregal Minute drawn up by Lord Lawrence, in reply to the "Confidential Memorandum" of Sir Henry Rawlinson in 1868. Lord Lawrence's Minute, in fact, embodies the opinion of the Executive Council, and it peremptorily objects to "any active interference in the affairs of Afghanistan by the deputation of a high British officer, with or without a contingent, or by the forcible or amicable occupation of any post or tract in that country beyond our own frontier." This it does on the ground that it would "engender irritation, defiance, and hatred in the minds of the Afghans, without in the least strengthening our power either for attack or defence." Lord Lawrence proceeds to say:—"We foresee no limits to the expenditure which such a move might require, and we protest against the necessity of having to impose additional taxation on the people of India." In voluminous minutes appended to his despatch, Lord Lawrence pointedly refers to the dangers to which English agents would be exposed in Afghanistan, and to the impossibility of obtaining any counterbalancing advantages for the risks incurred. "I do not think," he says, "that a British officer with a native contingent would be safe."

At the Umballa Conference of 1868 Lord Mayo gave the Ameer a most distinct pledge, "that we would not force European officers or Residents upon him against his wish." The treaty of 1857, upon the occasion of the Persian war, contained an express stipulation that the British agent at Cabul was "not to be a European officer." We have seen that every Viceroy before Lord Lytton objected to breaking this promise.

These warnings and remonstrances have unfortunately been despised by the present Government, so that Lord Cranbrook, the Secretary of State for India succeeding Lord Salisbury, in his most recent despatch to Lord Lytton after the late war thus refers to the stipulation in the Treaty providing for the appointment of a British Resident at Cabul:—

"Although her Majesty's Government always abstained from pressing this measure on the late Ameer in deference to his objections, they have never ceased to consider it in itself expedient. They are satisfied that the objections expressed by Shere Ali will be shown to have been without substantial foundation; and they anticipate with confidence that the effect of the presence of a British officer at Cabul will be to consolidate that unity of policy between the Governments of India and Afghanistan which it is the first object of the Treaty to establish. . . . Her Majesty's Government confidently believe that the policy embodied in the Treaty of Gandamak will, if pursued consistently, secure both British and Afghan interests and promote the stability and peace of the Empire."

The most recent news of what is going on in Cabul, and of the military preparations on the British frontier up to the time of preparing this account on Wednesday, does not add much that is positive and substantial to the account which we gave last week. A sowar or cavalry soldier belonging to the Corp of Guides named Taimur, who was present at the attack on the British Residency at Cabul on the 3rd inst., and subsequently escaped, arrived at Lundi Kotul on Tuesday morning. He brings the following further particulars respecting the massacre of Sir Louis Cavagnari and the other members of the British Embassy:—

"The roof of the Residency, being commanded by other houses, was untenable, and the besieged made a trench outside. About one o'clock in the afternoon Sir Louis Cavagnari was severely wounded by a ball which ricochetted on to his forehead. Mr. Jenkyns, who arrived at the Residency during the attack, wrote a letter to the Ameer asking for help. The reply received was, 'God will; I am making arrangements.' A previous request for aid by Sir L. Cavagnari had received a similar reply. The sowar was told that Lieutenant Hamilton shot three of the mutineers with his revolver and killed two with his sword. He also heard that Dr. Kelly was lying dead inside the Residency, and that Sir L. Cavagnari was in the room which was burnt and which subsequently fell in. His body had not been found, and the other three officers of the Guides were burnt to death near the Residency. Another sowar who had escaped was in Cabul, but was prevented from leaving. He told Taimur that the grass-cutters were in safety, that he had helped Dr. Kelly when wounded, and that Mr. Jenkyns had written a second time to the Ameer stating that Sir L. Cavagnari was wounded. The bearer of the letter was cut to pieces by the mutineers. Taimur then started, but was disarmed and placed in confinement. He succeeded, however, in escaping, and at daybreak of Sept. 4 he visited the Residency, and saw the body of Lieutenant Hamilton lying across a mountain gun, stripped of his jacket, but not dishonoured. Mr. Jenkyns was with Yahyah Khan."

The Ameer, Yakoob Khan, has sent another letter to Ali Khel, again expressing his confidence in the British Government and his deep grief and great distress on account of these events. He announces his intention to punish the offenders. On the other hand, it is stated that a Sirdar, who left Candahar for Cabul last month, has just returned with the news that the Ameer has sent for troops to Herat and Balkh. He has also, it is said, summoned the Ghilzai tribes to rise and join a Jehad, or holy war of the Mussulman people. We believe this news to be premature, and it may be entirely unfounded. There is an official telegram from Candahar, dated last Monday, and forwarded by the Viceroy from Simla, to the following effect:—"Private letters from Cabul state that three regiments only were engaged in attack on Residency; that the affair was apparently unpremeditated, having arisen from disappointment of these three regiments at getting one month's pay only, but that no serious attempt at relief was made, beyond preventing other troops taking part."

The military preparations made by the Indian Government were notified by the Viceroy on Tuesday morning. Briefly, the arrangements decided upon are that an army 6500 strong is destined to operate in Cabul, and that its communications are maintained by two separate roads, the Khyber and the Khoorum, each held by a sufficient force. The main advance will be by the Shutargardan, and it will be supported by a corresponding move from Peshawur, strong brigades will be dropped at commanding points on either line, and the task of maintaining communications will devolve upon specially selected officers. Sir F. Roberts will advance over the Shutargardan with 6500 men, his cavalry under General Massy, his infantry under Generals H. Macpherson, V.C., C.B., and D. T. Baker, C.B. The force advancing on Cabul under General Roberts will consist of three batteries artillery, one squadron British cavalry, two and a half regiments native cavalry, three regiments British infantry, four regiments native infantry, one company Sappers, in all about 6500 men, divided into three brigades, one of cavalry and two of infantry. General Gordon, with a strong brigade of two batteries, two regiments of native cavalry, a regiment of the Line, and five of native infantry, is intrusted with the charge of the country from the Shutargardan to Thall, where a native infantry regiment will maintain communications with Kohat and Bunnoo.

The Khyber column will be commanded by Major-General R. O. Bright, C.B. The importance of holding this route in force is very urgent, for in a couple of months the road over the Shutargardan will be closed, and General Roberts will then be entirely dependent for his supplies and reinforcements on the Khyber line. At the present moment our force at Luudi-Kotal and Ali Musjid, the advanced posts in the Khyber, consists of the 11th battery, 9th Brigade, Royal Artillery, and No. 4 Mountain Battery of the Punjaub Frontier Force, the first battalions 12th and 17th Regiments, the 6th, 24th, and 45th Regiments of Bengal Native Infantry. They are to be reinforced by five batteries of artillery, a whole regiment of British Cavalry, probably the 13th Hussars, two squadrons 9th Lancers, the 81st Foot, 85th King's Light Infantry, four regiments of Native Cavalry, and five of Native Infantry, with two companies of Sappers and Miners. The column will be divided into three brigades, two of which will be quartered at Basawal and Jellalabad, while a third, under Brigadier-General Gough, V.C., C.B., will push on from Gundamuk and establish communication with Sir F. Roberts at Cabul. By this means the powerful Afghan clans on the Sufed-Koh and in the Tezin Valley will be completely in our grasp.

The Queen's regiments in the Peiwar Pass are the 2nd Battalion 8th, commanded by Colonel Drew, C.B.; 67th South Hampshire, Lieutenant-Colonel Knowles; 72nd Duke of Albany's Own Highlanders, commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Clarke, during the absence on furlough of Colonel Brownlow; and 92nd Gordon Highlanders, Lieutenant-Colonel Parker. The Native Infantry regiments in the Peiwar are the 11th N.I. commanded by Colonel Lamb; 23rd Pioneers, Lieutenant-Colonel Currie; 28th Punjaubees, Lieutenant-Colonel Hudson; and 5th Punjaub Infantry, Major M'Queen. The cavalry force, under the command of Colonel Hugh Gough, C.B., V.C., consists of the Brigadier's own regiment, the 12th Bengal Cavalry, with the 14th Bengal Lancers and the 5th Punjaub Cavalry. Since the departure of General Roberts to commence his labours with the British Army Commission at Simla the command of the Khoorum Valley Field Force has been intrusted to Brigadier Dunham Massy, late of the 5th Royal Irish Lancers.

Candahar is held by Lieutenant-General Sir Donald Stewart, with a force which has been considerably reduced the past month. General Stewart has only two Queen's regiments—the 59th and the 2nd Battalion 60th Rifles. The native regiments with him are the 15th and 25th N.I., the 3rd Goorkhas, and the 2nd Belooch Regiment. His cavalry force consisted, at the end of last month, of the 2nd Punjaub Cavalry, 3rd Sind Horse, and 19th Bengal Lancers.

The advanced corps of the Khoorum Valley Force, under Brigadier Massy, has already taken up its position at the top of the Shutargardan Pass, which has been fortified by the 23rd Pioneers, and will presently descend to Khushi, at the foot of that mountain range, on the road between Ghuzni and Cabul.

The Indian Government has appointed General Sir P. Lumsden its permanent Chief of the Staff, and Sir Neville Chamberlain is summoned as military adviser. A railway is to be constructed from Sukkur to Dadur, with a tramway to the Bolan Pass, and one from Rawul Pindi to Kohat.

A competition in the manipulation of fire-engines took place on Monday among various brigades of the Isle of Thanet and other parts of East Kent, in the grounds of Mr. E. Davis, at St. Peter's. The prizes ranged from £6 to £2.

Tuesday's Birmingham Post states that the Pope has appointed the Rev. Canon Ilsley, Rector of St. Bernard's Seminary, near Solihull, to be Bishop-Auxiliary to the Right Rev. Dr. Ullathorne, of Birmingham.

Last week eight steamers arrived in the Mersey with live stock and fresh meat, the totals being 2517 quarters of beef and 637 carcases of mutton, 1340 cattle, 4400 sheep, and 302 pigs, which is a considerable decrease when compared with the figures of the previous week, except as regarded mutton, which was about the same.

The Home Secretary has given notice that he is prepared to receive tenders for the purchase of eleven prisons, all freehold properties, including the land and buildings thereon, formerly used for prison purposes. These prisons include those of Bath, Beverley, Bury St. Edmunds, Mold, Montgomery, Norwich City, Ripon, Southampton, and Wisbech. These have all been closed under the provisions of the Prisons Act.

The Agamemnon was successfully launched on Wednesday. At half-past twelve Mrs. Smith, the wife of the First Lord, was conducted to the bows of the vessel, when the form of prayer ordered by the Admiralty to be used on the occasion of the launch of vessels of war was recited by the dockyard chaplain. The work of splitting away the remaining blocks was rapidly gone through, and at twenty-five minutes to one Mrs. Smith named the vessel, and at the same time pressed the lever, which released the last of the supports. Instantly the Agamemnon began moving down the launching-ways into Chatham Harbour amid cheers from thousands of spectators, the band playing "Rule Britannia." Unfortunately a boat which was in the way at a critical moment was swamped, and one man was drowned.—The composite-sloop Phoenix was launched on Tuesday at Devonport Dockyard.

The Burying Ground at Jellalabad was the subject of one of our Illustrations last week, from a Sketch by Mr. W. Simpson. This spot of ground, which must be of some interest to many yet living, was where all those who died of disease, or who fell in the "Illustrious Defence" of Jellalabad in 1842, were buried. Major Bailey, now of the 4th Battalion Rifle Brigade, who was all through the defence of Jellalabad under Sir Robert Sale, identified the spot when our troops arrived at that place in December last. Here General Elphinstone's body was interred, it having been sent in by Akbar Khan's people, for he died a prisoner; and also that of Colonel Dennie, who was killed while gallantly leading an attack on Akbar Khan's force at Jellalabad. Major Bailey says that the bodies were placed in a double row, and the natives were never allowed to see a burial; but means were taken at the time to conceal the place, so as to prevent any desecration of the spot after our departure. Major Bailey thinks that the bodies have not been disturbed, and he is most probably right, for there is a mosque built on the ground, and it partly covers the bodies. Our commanders made no effort to test this point while at Jellalabad, thinking it best not to disturb the present arrangement, and also trusting to Major Bailey's opinion. The spot is at the north-east corner of the town, and inside of the defensive walls.

General Noyes, the American Minister at Paris, gave a great dinner party on Monday in honour of Mr. Wood, the chief of the American Democratic party. General Noyes will leave Paris on Oct. 15 to make a journey through a part of Europe and the East, in order to discharge himself of a commercial mission of which he has been intrusted by his Government.

Military manœuvres have been carried on by night round Versailles. There was a sham capture of the camp of Satory and an attack on a fort. A bomb or fusee launched in a certain direction indicated the point likely to be attacked.

There was a large gathering of actors, musicians, and men of letters on Monday at Baron Taylor's funeral. All the theatres in Paris sent representatives to place wreaths on the bier, and the five societies for the relief of different classes of artistes founded by the deceased figured in the procession, as also did the Institute and other bodies. Baron Felix Taylor, son of the deceased, was chief mourner. The funeral service was held in St. Eustache, and at the tomb in Père la Chaise addresses were delivered by M. Jules Simon, M. Alexandre Dumas, and others.

The first sub-committee appointed to examine the scheme for a Trans-Sahara railway held a sitting at Paris last week, under the presidency of M. Ferdinand de Lesseps. Several members addressed the meeting, urging the necessity of directing the efforts of the committee to the exploration of Central Africa as a preparation for the commencement of the line, and also to the working of the salt-mines, which the speakers regarded as the key of the Soudan.

M. Achard, the Moderate Republican candidate at Bordeaux, polled on Sunday at the second ballot 4698 votes against 4440 given for M. Blanqui.

The new French ironclad Admiral Duperre was launched last week from the Mediterranean dockyard of Messrs. Laseyre at Toulon. A large crowd of people assembled to witness the launch, which was successfully effected amid much cheering.

The Budget for the coming year was presented on Monday to the President of the Chamber of Deputies. The revenue is estimated to amount to 1,402,000,000 lire, and the expenditure to 1,295,000,000 lire, thus showing a surplus of seven millions. The report accompanying the Budget states, however, that, taking into account the expenditure already submitted to Parliament, there will be a deficit of six million lire.

HOLLAND.

The Netherlands Chambers were opened on Monday by the King in person. The Speech from the Throne began by stating that relations with foreign Powers were very friendly. Alluding to the Acheen War, his Majesty congratulated the country upon the satisfactory results which had been obtained. He next dwelt upon the distress under which industry, commerce, and navigation were now labouring, and upon the harvest being less abundant than usual, which causes, it was to be feared, would result in a decline in the yield of some of the imposts, and a necessity for strengthening the resources of the Treasury. The King announced that, for the purpose of promoting the prosperity of the country, the Government would maintain the salutary principles of free trade, and would propose measures for the improvement of the means of communication. His Majesty was happy to inform the Chambers that the measures adopted for preventing the cattle plague had proved successful. The bill respecting the penal code would be again submitted to them, and a bill upon primary education would be introduced as soon as the preparatory measures were completed. The King stated that the position of the East Indian possessions was in general favourable, and he hoped that the continuance of large public works would advance the prosperity of those colonies. With regard to their finances, the speech pointed out that great circumspection in their administration is necessary. His Majesty referred, in conclusion, to the necessity of promoting coolie immigration in Surinam, and pointed out the expediency of developing the mineral wealth of Curaçoa.

In the First Chamber on Tuesday Baron van Lynden van Sandenburg, the President of the new Ministry, explained the programme of the Cabinet. He stated that all rights would be respected, and that, while maintaining the principles of the Constitution with moderation but without weakness, the Government would not hesitate to propose such reforms and changes as the progress of the age might show to be necessary.

M. Dullert has been elected first candidate for the presidency of the Second Chamber.

The King has conferred the Grand Cross of the Lion of the Netherlands upon the Crown Prince of Sweden.

M. van Karnebeek, the Dutch Minister to the Courts of Stockholm and Copenhagen, has resigned his post.

M. Heemskerk, the ex-Minister, has been appointed member of the Council of State.

Very favourable news is said to have been received at the Hague relative to the war in Atchin. The Dutch expeditionary columns have been disbanded, several native chiefs have given in their submission to the Dutch authorities, and the natives are returning to the Kampongs.

BELGIUM.

The Royal Commissioners of the Belgian National Rifle Association, presided over by the Comte de Flandre, have issued their programme of the forthcoming meeting at Brussels to which "all comers" competing with "military" arms alone are invited. The Tir, which is at a walking distance from the city, will open on Sunday, the 21st inst., and close on Monday, the 29th, the opening anticipating the celebration of the national fêtes and the anniversary of the achievement of Belgian nationality by two days. There is now an order by the War Office that no volunteers are to visit foreign rifle association meetings in uniform, and those who attend in private clothes are forbidden to take Government arms. There are four categories for the competitors—two restricted to the Belgian military bodies, and two to "all comers." One of the latter is for "military weapons of all kinds"—that is, excluding rifles with fancy sights, wind-gauges, &c.—and the other is open to weapons carrying a bayonet or sword. If the prizes are not large they are numerous, and the entries are small. The prizes are given in the various categories by the King, the Comte de Flandres, the Government, the City of Brussels, and the commune of Schaerbeck, a community which holds the same relationship to the Tir that the district of Putney does to Wimbledon. One prize is given by the National Rifle Association of Great Britain—a cup valued at 4000f. is competed for annually by battalions of the Belgian forces, the winner receiving with the challenge prize the substantial prize of 500f. and a medal of honour. The distance is 225 metres, about 250 yards. The shooting is all from the shoulder; the targets are circular, with five circular zones, the central counting five for points, the next four, the next three, the next two, and the outer one.

GERMANY.

The German Emperor's reception in Dantzic was, according to the Standard correspondent's account, as brilliant as that of Königsberg. His Majesty and the Crown Prince arrived at eleven o'clock on the morning of the 10th inst. in that ancient, romantic Vistula town, commonly called the German Venice, and proceeded through the ornamented streets amid the acclamations of an enthusiastic multitude, the ringing of bells, and salvoes of artillery. There was scarcely a house that was not decorated from top to bottom. The route taken by the Imperial party was lined with platforms, which were crowded with spectators. School girls strewed flowers before the Imperial carriages, and various associations and guilds brought up the rear with music and banners. Thirty-eight German maidens, who had been chosen for their beauty and grace, dressed in coloured costumes of the mediæval period, occupied a canopied stand, before which the Emperor's carriage drew up. One of their number then stepped forward, addressed his Majesty in verse, and presented a bouquet. After an hour's rest in the Government buildings, the Imperial party went by railway to Neufahrwasser, where a naval review was held. On his Majesty's return to Dantzic, a dinner was given to the Emperor by the province of West Prussia. The ancient hall, with tables covered with costly plate, and crowded with gay uniforms, presented a magnificent appearance. The Emperor entered at five o'clock and immediately took his place, surrounded by the Crown Prince and other German Princes and distinguished persons. Covers were laid for 300. An address to the Emperor, read by the Governor of West Prussia, contained the following patriotic passage:—"The Province of West Prussia will always cherish and disseminate on the Vistula German education, German manners, and German culture." In the evening the town was splendidly illuminated, and a ball was given in the old Franciscan Monastery, now the Town Museum, at which the Emperor was present, and a company of 2000 dancers. The Emperor left Dantzic highly gratified with the splendour and loyalty of the reception accorded to him. From Dantzic his Majesty went to Stettin, the next scene of the German manœuvres. The entire route between the two towns, a distance of about 200 English miles, resembled a triumphal way. His Majesty, on the operations being concluded last Tuesday morning, expressed himself highly pleased with the result of the manœuvres, and conveyed to General von Weyhern his thanks for the efficient state of all the troops under his command. Enthusiastic multitudes gathered to bid his Majesty farewell. The Emperor, accompanied by several members of the Royal family, arrived at Berlin at seven o'clock on Tuesday evening.

Tuesday's Official Gazette publishes a Royal decree dissolving the Prussian Chamber of Deputies. A notification of the Minister of the Interior is also published fixing the 30th inst. as the date for the election of the Wahlmänner, or direct electors, and Oct. 7 for the election of deputies to the new Chamber.

A visit was paid on the 11th inst. by the Empress of Germany to the Empress of Russia at Jugenheim.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

On the arrival of the Austrian troops at Plevlje on Wednesday, the 10th inst., the Turkish commandant of the town, in pursuance of an order received from the Porte, protested against the entry of the troops, and demanded that there should be a joint garrison. General Killics, the Austrian commander, declared his intention to enter the town, however, on the ground of the convention concluded with the Porte, and the entry was made immediately without opposition. The combined columns of the first and second brigades arrived at Prjepolje in the forenoon of Sunday, and met with a friendly reception from the authorities and the populations.

RUSSIA.

A treaty has been signed which provides for the evacuation of the Kuldja territory by the Russians by instalments during three years, and the payment by the Chinese of an indemnity of five million roubles in money, and also of the expense of four consular establishments. A strip of land is retained by Russia, which includes a military road in the direction of Kashgar.

The Czar's birthday was celebrated on the 11th inst. at various places outside the Russian Empire as well as within it. Prince Gortschakoff's birthday falls on the same day, and at Baden, where he is staying, a "Te Deum" was sung at the Russian church. The Emperor is said to have sent a most flattering telegram from Livadia to the veteran Chancellor, who is in excellent health and spirits. All his friends at Baden sent bouquets of flowers and called upon him, and the military band went to his hotel in the morning and performed a selection of Rossini's music, of which the Prince is an admirer.

A special telegram from the Daily News' Correspondent at St. Petersburg informs us of the conclusion of the Kuldja Treaty between Russia and China. It provides for the gradual evacuation of the Kuldja territory by the Russians and the payment by the Chinese of an indemnity of five million roubles in money. Russia retains a strip of land which includes a military road in the direction of Kashgar.

ROUMANIA.

The 11th inst. being the second anniversary of the capture of the Gravitza redoubt at Plevna, a mass, at which the Ministers, senators, and deputies were present, was celebrated in the cathedral at Bucharest for the Roumanian officers and soldiers who fell on that occasion.

On Tuesday, after a Ministerial Council, at which Prince Charles presided, a secret meeting of Roumanian Senators and Deputies was held, at which M. Boerescu is reported to have made a statement respecting the result of his recent mission to the European Courts. His explanations are stated to have produced a bad impression.

In order to decide upon the measures necessary to be taken for the relief of the rural population of Roumania, who are suffering from the failure of the maize crop, the District Councils have been convoked in extraordinary session.

TURKEY.

Sir Henry Layard took leave of the Sultan on the 11th inst., prior to taking his departure from Constantinople for Asia.

In the sitting of the Turco-Greek Frontier Commission on the 11th inst. the Ottoman Commissioners stated the conditions upon which they would accept the thirteenth Protocol of the Treaty of Berlin as a basis of negotiations. To these conditions the Greek Government are expected to adhere, in which case the discussion of the frontier line would commence at the next sitting of the Commission. Meanwhile, the Greek Commissioners have referred to their Government for instructions.

The Commission for the delimitation of the Montenegrin frontier has terminated its labours. The Commissioners have resolved to submit the vexed question of the delimitation of Plavitzna and Boicim to the decision of the Powers.

A sanguinary conflict is reported to have occurred at Aidos, in Eastern Roumelia, between the Christian inhabitants and the returned Mussulman refugees. The latter pillaged the bakers' shops, and fifteen persons were killed before tranquillity was restored. Owing to the representations of the Russian Ambassador, the Porte has given orders to the authorities to put an end to the influx of the refugees into Eastern Roumelia.

AMERICA.

The New York Democratic Convention have re-nominated Mr. Lucius Robinson for the post of governor, and adopted a resolution declaring that they held to the Constitution, with all amendments, and to the rights of the States under the Constitution. They arraign the Republicans for their tendency towards centralisation, deprecate the efforts of the Republicans to revive sectional funds; demand honest elections, and the honest counting of votes; they declare their faith in gold and silver as the Constitutional money of the country; and, in conclusion, they condemn all favouritism, stating, however, that if any class is to receive special consideration, it should be the working people. The Tammany delegates from New York city withdraw from the convention, as they object to the nomination of Mr. Lucius Robinson. They have formed a separate convention, and nominated Mr. John Kelly for the post of Governor of New York city. The Massachusetts Greenback convention have nominated General Butler as their candidate for the Governorship of that State; and the Republican convention have nominated Mr. John D. Long, the Lieutenant-Governor, for the post.

The Lieutenant-Governor has signed the bills passed by the Quebec Legislature, and the Legislative Council has further adjourned until the 30th inst. The Hon. A. Chauveau has tendered his resignation of the post of Provincial Secretary, which has been accepted by the Lieutenant-Governor.

A banquet has been given by the United States citizens resident in Canada to Mr. Evarts, the American Secretary of State, who has been staying at Toronto, on a visit to the Governor-General. Mr. Evarts, in acknowledging the toast of his health, said he did not know that there could be representatives of the British Crown in Canada more acceptable to the United States than the Governor-General and Princess Louise. When the speaker visited Great Britain during the civil war he found no more resolute and able friends of the United States than the Duke of Argyll and the illustrious parents of Princess Louise, who, continued Mr. Evarts, had steadily maintained the rights of the United States to suppress the rebellion, and had resisted the influence sought to be exercised by France in favour of the recognition of the Southern Confederacy. Referring to the relations between Canada and the United States, questions were, he said, always liable to arise owing to the proximity of the two countries, but it was impossible that any maladjustment or delays should disturb the peaceful and respectful relations subsisting between them. With regard to the Halifax awards, Mr. Evarts said the United States had represented to Great Britain that the Commission which decided the award did not fairly adhere to the subjects committed to their consideration, and the result was a larger award than the circumstances warranted. The United States Government had, however, been careful that the cause of their objection should not be confounded with the pecuniary estimate in the case. The United States view favouring a reconsideration of the subject was not, however, taken by Great Britain; the award, therefore, had been paid, and the matter was at an end. Regarding the future of the fisheries question, Mr. Evarts remarked that the treaty with the British Government would terminate in six years hence, when further negotiations on the subject would be entered into.

A note in the maid's writing said, "You shall no longer have your daughter; I take her to a better world." Their ages were twenty-six and fourteen.

The Observer states that the Grand Cross of St. Michael and St. George has been conferred by her Majesty's Government on Nubar Pasha. In the letter conferring this distinction on the eminent Egyptian statesman recognition is made of his services as "the author of the recent reforms in Egypt and the champion of justice and good administration."

On Tuesday morning the Indian troop-steamer Malabar sailed from Portsmouth for Bombay. She had on board nearly forty officers, including three field officers, and she calls en route at Queenstown to embark over eleven hundred non-commissioned officers and men, composed of draughts from about twenty regiments. She is under orders to complete the passage with all practicable dispatch, and on arrival the draughts will be hastened up country to take part in the operations in Afghanistan.

The Sixth International Congress of Physicians, held at Amsterdam, closed last Saturday with the reading of a few papers, a banquet offered by the medici of Amsterdam to their foreign colleagues, and a serenade from the Amsterdam medical students to the principal members of the congress. Crookshank Hamilton, with Captain Herbert Jekyll as secretary, has been issued by her Majesty to inquire into the condition and sufficiency of the means, both naval and military, provided for the defence of the more important seaports within our colonial possessions and their dependencies, and to report as to the stations which may be required in our colonies for refitting or repairing the ships of the Navy and protecting our commerce. They are empowered to examine all plans and designs for all works of defence now in progress or under consideration, or any other plans or designs that may be laid before them; they are authorised to call before them such persons in the civil, military, or naval services, or others connected with British colonial possessions, as would be likely to afford them the best and fullest information.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

Now, whatever can the late Right Honourable William Pitt, First Lord of the Treasury and Chancellor of the Exchequer, have to do with the Theatre Royal St. James's, which, reconstructed and redecorated, is about to open under the management of Mr. Hare and Mr. Kendal? The "pilot who weathered the storm" died full thirty years before the St. James's Theatre was built. But when Mr. Pitt was a very young man, just called to the Bar, and waiting to raise some money to buy a set of chambers in Lincoln's Inn, I find him (in Lord Stanhope's admirable "Life") frequently writing to his mother, Lady Chatham, from "Nerot's Hotel, King-street, St. James's." This was in 1779; and Nerot's seems to have been as fashionable an hotel at that period as the Golden Ball in Suffolk-street was a fashionable lodging-house for the "county families" when they came to town. I find from Thornbury and Walford's "Old and New London" that the St. James's Theatre was built on the site of Nerot's Hotel. Surely Messrs. Hare and Kendal might with propriety place a marble bust of the great statesman in their crush-room. But who was Nerot? A cook?

Well-read correspondents have, during the last fortnight, sent me quotations of at least twenty parallel passages from writers ancient and modern to Shelley's "Death and his brother Sleep." The esteemed "T.W. O." refers me to Virgil, Æneid, vi., 278. My Delphin Virgil happens to be at the binder's; but I turn up the Editio princeps of Dryden's translation, "printed for Jacob Tonson, at the Judge's Head, in Fleet-street, near the Inner Temple Gate, 1697." But there I find that the two hundred and seventy-eighth line of the sixth book runs thus:—

Since the Sibyl's breath
Foretold, alas! too true, Misenus' death.

I am very blind and stupid, I know; but is "T. W. O." quite sure that he is correct in his reference to the passage? Between the lines 270 and 280 I find no mention of sleep.

Students who have more leisure than I have (on a Wednesday) will perhaps be able to dig out the line which I have not time to disinter from the Æneid. "T. W. O." goes further and to the fountain head. He cites Homer's Iliad, xiv. 231. I am obliged to quote the line in Greek, for I have only one edition of Pope (Warton's, in nine volumes), and it does not include the Iliad. Here is the line—

Enth' upno Xumbleto kasigneto thanatoio.

Shelley comes closer to this than to any other writer cited by my correspondents.

Touching parallel passages, I may mention that I was reading Ben Jonson's "English Grammar" (and a very excellent grammar it is) the other day, when I found him quoting Chaucer in the third book of Troilus:—

For of fortune's sharp adversitie
The worst kind of unfortune is this:
A man t' have been in prosperitie,
And to remember when it passed is.

This bears all the appearance of a rough and ready translation of Dante's sublime "Nessun maggior dolore," &c., so briefly and beautifully paraphrased by Mr. Tennyson; but how comes it that Ben, whose "Grammar" is full of indices of his having been a ripe Italian scholar, failed to notice the parallel?

I never had the slightest pretensions to be a Shaksperean scholar; and it is in perfect good faith, and solely with the desire to gain information, that I ask Shaksperean commentators if they ever heard of a play by the immortal bard called "The Double Falsehood; or, the Distressed Lovers"? I find such a drama advertised as "by Shakespear" in a catalogue of plays printed for T. Lowndes and W. Nicoll, bound up with Samuel Foote's farcical comedy of "Taste," published in 1765. Was the play of "The Double Falsehood; or, the Distressed Lovers," a "Cibberised" version of "Romeo and Juliet"? In the same catalogue I find "Papal Tyranny; or, King John," by Colley Cibber, Esq.; "Britons, Strike Home" a farce (with music), by W. Phillips, Esq.; "The Walking Statue; or, the Devil in the Wine-Cellar," by Aaron Hill; and "Greenwich Park," by Mountfort.

That last name sets me a thinking. It was that possibly of "poor Will Mountfort the player," who was killed by the savage profligate Lord Mohun in a nocturnal brawl outside the lodgings of Mrs. Bracegirdle, the actress. But poor Will's name turns up in another and little-expected quarter; in learned Mr. Foss's "Biographia Juridica." "His elevation," writes Mr. Foss, in his life of the infamous Judge Jeffreys, "made no change in his manners. At a dinner he gave, at which Reresby was present, he not only drank deep, but made one of his gentlemen named Mountfort, an excellent mimic, who had been an actor, plead before him in a feigned cause, during which he aped all the great lawyers in their tones, their actions, and their gestures, to the great diversion of the company." Fancy a modern Lord Chancellor getting up a "Judge and Jury society" in his dining-room!

The Times obituary of Wednesday makes record of the passing away, at the great age of seventy-five, of a once very well-known journalist, Mr. Thomas Littleton Holt, who died on Sunday last at Hendon. I suppose that in his time he had been the editor or the proprietor of more newspapers and periodicals than "any gentleman of the press" whom this century has produced. He started at least a dozen papers in conjunction with the late Gilbert Abbot A'Beckett. He was very nearly making an immense fortune as proprietor of a paper called the Iron Times, published during the great railway mania of 1845. He was at one time editor of the Morning Chronicle. He projected the Novel Newspaper. He fought against the advertisement duty and the paper duty years before the feasibility of abolishing those imposts was recognised by "practical" politicians. It generally takes "practical" politicians a very long time to recognise the feasibility of any important social or fiscal change.

I first knew Mr. Thomas Littleton Holt in the year 1846, just after the collapse of the railway mania and the Iron Times. Even as Napoleon migrated from the Tuileries to St. Helena, and Manager Elliston from Drury Lane to the Surrey, so did Mr. Holt abdicate a splendid position and an income (at the rate) of twenty thousand a year to accept the editorship of a modest little weekly periodical called "Chat," which was published at 304, Strand, at the south-west corner of Holywell-street, and the price of which was one halfpenny. The proprietor of "Chat" was Mr. Frederick Marriott, who is yet alive, and owns and edits with great success a well-known Californian journal, the San Francisco Newsletter. Mr. Holt, as editor of "Chat," was my literary father. I had published in the year 1845 a crude little story in the Family Herald; but Mr. Holt (in concert with Mr. Marriott) first gave me regular employment, taught me my earliest lessons in the trade of journalism, and introduced me to the "gentlemen of the press." I ultimately became editor of "Chat," myself, at the magnificent salary of a pound a week. Ah! those were my happy days.

In addition to the supplementary sums forwarded to me since I closed accounts with Sir William Fraser, I have this week to acknowledge the following donations:—Peter Whittey, £5; N. L. C., £1 1s.; H. M. (stamps), 5s.; and "For Asa Trenchard, from an American Cousin," an U.S. "greenback" for one dollar—say, four shillings. G. A. S.

Mrs. S. C. Hall unveiled a memorial window to Thomas Moore, the poet, in Bromham church, Wiltshire, on Saturday last.

The seventh annual festival of the London Church Choir Association will be held in St. Paul's Cathedral on the evening of Thursday, Nov. 6, 1879.

The Archbishop of Canterbury presided last Monday at a jubilee meeting of the Dover auxiliary of the Church Missionary Society.

An influential meeting of persons, lay and clerical, connected with the Church was held at Darlington on Monday, and a resolution was passed inviting the next Church Congress to hold its meetings in that town.

The Bishop of Ripon consecrated on the 10th inst. the new Church of St. Margaret, at Ilkley, which has been built at a cost of over £12,000. At the luncheon which followed the opening service his Lordship stated that this was the thirty-eighth church he had consecrated in the diocese of Ripon.

Sir Stafford Northcote, who is lord of the manor at Iddesleigh, North Devon, was on Tuesday present at the reopening of the parish church, which has undergone restoration, and at a public dinner given on the occasion, spoke at some length on the subject of the preservation of our churches.

The Times of India says that Dr. French, the Bishop of Lahore, is making an appeal in behalf of the proposed cathedral for the capital of the British province of the Punjaub. A cathedral has been designed by Mr. Gilbert Scott, which would cost some £30,000. Of this sum a sixth has been collected. Another sixth may possibly be subscribed by the Government of India, when the Government is a little less pressed for ready money than it is now; a third sixth may be raised, the Bishop hopes, in the Punjaub and North-West.

The annual report of the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty for the year ending Dec. 31 last was issued on Monday. It states that the gifts by benefactors towards the improvement of poor benefices slightly decreased in 1878. Grants from the general fund were assigned during the year to 114 cases as compared with 117 in 1877. A statement explanatory of the transactions that have taken place in the whole of the various trusts vested in the corporation shows how such trusts have increased from £3,814,920, the amount at which they stood on Jan. 1, 1878, to £3,845,556, the amount they stood at on Dec. 31 last.

The church of the Burslem Cemetery was consecrated on Tuesday by the Bishop of Lichfield, the Nonconformist part of the Town Council declining to take part in the ceremony. An appeal was made to the Bishop to allow the Town Council to erect one mortuary chapel not to be consecrated, for the use of all sects; but he declined, saying that if the burial laws had been carried out with laxity, it was no reason why he should follow the same course. He added that the proposal to erect a mortuary without having it consecrated was, in his opinion, illegal, and the expense could not be charged to the rates.

Archdeacon Earle on the 10th inst. reopened the church of Stoke Gabriel, near Totnes, which has been restored by Messrs. Hayward, of Exeter. The building is a fine one, and is distinguished for the height and majesty of its arcades. The east window is filled with beautiful stained glass, by Messrs. Clayton and Bell. The oak screens separating the nave aisles and the aisles of the chancel have been restored, and a new screen in the same material has been put up between the western tower and nave. The church boasts of a very curious old oak pulpit, carved with much skill. This has been restored, and where the carving was deficient it has been made good. A handsome new reredos, by Mr. Hems, of Exeter, has been erected.

The sanitary authorities of Tamworth, after boring to a depth of only 170 feet, have struck upon a spring of water, the yield of which is reckoned at a million gallons a day.

A new pier was opened on Tuesday at Pegwell Bay, near Ramsgate, by the Rev. E. G. Banke, chairman of the Ramsgate Improvement Commissioners. A large bath, said to be the largest swimming-bath in England, was also opened.

MUSIC.

THE HEREFORD MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

Our last week's record of this music meeting was necessarily incomplete, as the performances did not terminate until the Friday after our publication. The Wednesday morning's performance offered some strong contrasts of styles, having begun with Purcell's fine "Te Deum" in D, which was followed by a selection from Bach's "Christmas Oratorio"—the first and second parts. The solo vocalists in the former were—Misses Thursby and de Fonblanque, Madame Enriquez, Mr. Cummings, and Mr. Thurley Beale; in the latter, Miss A. Williams, Madame Patey, Mr. Cummings, and Mr. Santley. The chorus-singing was particularly excellent in Bach's music, the extreme difficulty of which offered a special test of the efficiency of the choristers. In the elaborate orchestral details of the extracts from the oratorio the fine playing of obbligati passages for the trumpet and the flute—respectively by Mr. T. Harper and Mr. Svendsen—was a prominent feature. The second portion of Wednesday's performances opened with Handel's overture to "Esther" (finely played by the band), which was followed by Spohr's beautiful, but scarcely sublime, setting of the eighty-fourth Psalm, "How lovely are Thy dwellings," the incidental solo passages in which were well sung by Miss A. Williams, Madame Enriquez, Mr. B. McGuckin, and Mr. Thurley Beale. Mozart's choral fugue, "Pignus futuræ" (from his Litany in B flat)—well sung—was followed by an effective performance of Handel's coronation anthem, "Zadoc the Priest," in which the chorus singing was again excellent—and with this the morning's performances terminated.

On Wednesday evening Mendelssohn's ninety-fifth Psalm and his hymn, "Hear my Prayer," were given (in the cathedral), followed by Rossini's "Stabat Mater." The soloists in the first were Misses A. Williams and De Fonblanque and Mr. Cummings, Miss Thursby having sung the soprano solo, of which the hymn chiefly consists, in association with chorus and orchestra. The lady just mentioned succeeded less in this, and in her other performances of sacred music, than in those of the brilliant bravura school for which her voice and style are best suited. The florid music of Rossini, with which Wednesday's programme closed, displayed Miss Thursby's merits to better advantage than the sublime works which preceded it. Her coadjutors in the "Stabat" were Miss de Fonblanque, Mr. B. McGuckin, and Mr. Santley.

The chief portion of Thursday morning's performances consisted of a copious selection from Mr. Arthur Sullivan's oratorio "The Light of the World," conducted by the composer, who had made his first appearance in public—after a long illness—at the Covent Garden Promenade Concert of the previous Monday. Of the oratorio referred to we have more than once spoken, in noticing its first production at the Birmingham Festival of 1873, and subsequently. Again, as previously, the choral and orchestral writing were the most effective features of the work, the solo music being deficient in any marked character and interest. The most impressive solo pieces were the contralto airs, "Weep ye not for the dead" (with chorus) and "The Lord is risen"—both very expressively sung (as heretofore) by Madame Patey. Mr. Santley (also as before) gave the baritone solo music very impressively; that for tenor having been divided between Mr. Cummings and Mr. B. McGuckin—some incidental bass passages having been efficiently rendered by the Rev. J. H. Lambert. Several of the choruses told well, particularly the chorus of Angels (for female voices); the jubilant movement, "The grave cannot praise Thee;" the chorus of children, "Hosanna," and that for full choir at the end of the first part of the oratorio—the solemn chorus, "Men and Brethren," and the movement which closes the oratorio, "Him hath God exalted." The fine orchestral playing gave full effect to the "Andante Pastorale," and to the elaborate overture which opens the second part of the oratorio. Partly owing to the fatigue of the previous performances, and partly, perhaps, to want of sufficient familiarity with the music, the chorus-singing was occasionally scarcely equal to what it had been. The second part of Thursday morning's programme consisted of Haydn's fine mass in D minor, known as the "Imperial" Mass, which was well given, the solo portions by Miss A. Williams, Madame Enriquez, Mr. McGuckin, and Mr. Thurley Beale.

At the Thursday evening's concert, in the Shirehall, Mr. Arthur Sullivan again appeared as conductor. A special feature on this occasion was the fine singing of Madame Albani, who gave Bellini's "Casta Diva," with charming grace in the opening movement and brilliant execution in the concluding portion. In the ballad "Robin Adair" the expression of refined sentiment and pathos produced as great an effect as that which had followed the previous scena, and a persistent encore was replied to by singing Brahms's "Gute nacht." Madame Albani also sang the leading part in the well-known quartet from "Rigoletto," her associates having been Madame Patey, Mr. Cummings, and Mr. Santley. Other vocal pieces—more or less familiar—were rendered by singers already named; the Bradford choir having sung, with much effect, the late Mr. H. Smart's part-song "Ave Maria." The instrumental music consisted of Mendelssohn's overture "The Hebrides," Mr. Weist Hill's graceful "Gavotte" (for stringed instruments only), and Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, all well played, the "Gavotte" having been conducted by its composer. The concert concluded with the national anthem.

"The Messiah"—the usual festival climax—was given in the cathedral yesterday (Friday) week, when the chorus-singing was again remarkable for excellence. Madame Albani gave the soprano recitatives and the airs, "Rejoice greatly," and "Come unto him"—in the first part—and the subsequent air, "I know that my Redeemer liveth," with admirable qualities of voice and style; having also co-operated in the two quartets. The other solo music was distributed between Miss A. Williams, Mesdames Patey and Enriquez, Mr. B. McGuckin, Mr. Cummings, Mr. Santley, and Mr. Thurley Beale. Mr. T. Harper's fine trumpet-playing in the air, "The trumpet shall sound" (well sung by Mr. Beale), was an important incidental feature.

The supplemental concert given in the Shirehall on the Friday evening, calls for no special comment. The programme comprised Haydn's string quartet in D minor, and that by Spohr, op. 43; the three last movements of Beethoven's Septet—and the "Andante" from Spohr's ninth violin concerto, skilfully played by Mr. Weist Hill, who led the first quartet; the other, and the portions of the septet, having been led by Mr. H. C. Cooper. The other instrumentalists were—Mr. G. Palmer, Mr. R. Blagrove, Mr. Lazarus, Mr. C. Harper, Mr. Hutchins, Mr. C. Ould, and Mr. White. Vocal pieces were contributed by Miss de Fonblanque, Madame Patey, and Mr. Cummings.

Mr. Langdon Colborne—organist of Hereford Cathedral—has, with the exceptions specified, conducted the Festival performances with attentive care—this having been his first experience in the office, as successor to the late respected Mr. Townshend Smith. Mr. Done (of Worcester) has presided ably at the organ, as has Mr. Lloyd (of Gloucester) at the pianoforte. The business arrangements have been greatly facilitated and benefited by the zeal and courtesy of the honorary secretary, the Rev. Berkeley L. S. Stanhope, of Byford Rectory.

The money results of the festival will probably not show so great a falling off as was feared in consequence of the depressed state of the times. The total amount at the close of last week was something under £870; but this will certainly be increased (perhaps largely) by donations still to come.

The Covent-Garden Promenade Concerts are still maintaining their interest. Madame Essipoff, whose fine pianoforte-playing has proved so attractive, was replaced on Saturday by Mr. Charles Hallé, who played Mendelssohn's concerto in G minor and two unaccompanied solos with great effect. On Monday the serial (weekly) performance of Beethoven's Symphonies was continued by giving No. 6 ("The Pastoral"). Among the vocalists who have recently appeared are Mdlle. Dyna Beumer, Miss Mary Davies, Mrs. Osgood, Mesdames Sterling and Patey, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. McGuckin, and Mr. Santley. On Wednesday Mr. Hallé was announced to play Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat—the first part of the programme having been otherwise also of a specially classical nature.

THEATRES.

The Vaudeville has revived Mr. Albery's clever comedy of "The Two Roses." It was this drama which first secured Mr. Henry Irving a hearing with the public as a judicious and intelligent actor. It also made the reputation of Miss Amy Fawcitt as Lottie, and of Mr. Montague as Jack Wyatt, of whom at present remembrances only remain. The part of Digby Grant is now worthily filled by Mr. Henry Howe, and Mr. David James sustains the part of Mr. Jenkins, originally realised by Mr. George Honey, while Jack Wyatt is represented by Mr. W. Herbert. Mr. Hargreaves replaces Mr. W. H. Stephens as Mr. Furnival, the solicitor. The existing Lottie is Miss M. Illington. Other changes have taken place in the cast, not needful to mention. The revived piece has been again accepted with all the honours, and the poetic spirit with which much of the dialogue is impregnated met with cordial recognition. Mr. Howe has increased his reputation by his skilful interpretation of the part of Digby Grant. The Caleb of Mr. Thomas Thorne is as successful and pointed as ever, and Miss Sophie Larkin is admirable as Mrs. Jenkins. With the aid of picturesque scenery this pleasing play must be able to renew its lease of popularity.

To-night at the Royal Court Mr. Wilson Barrett begins his management of that fashionable theatre with the production of a new four-act drama by Mr. Sutherland Edwards, entitled "Fernande," derived from Victorien Sardou's comedy.

Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's elegant entertainment is announced to reopen at St. George's Hall on Monday evening, the 29th inst., with "£100 Reward," Mr. Corney Grain's musical sketch, "Our Calico Ball," and "Back from India." Several novelties will shortly be produced.

The Polytechnic now aims at attaining a still higher character as a scientific institution than ever. It will in future prefer scientific lectures to more humorous entertainments, and substitute these by artistic representations. Miss Gertrude Kellogg gives some Readings of great merit, consisting of "Archie Dean," by Gail Hamilton, "Charles Edward at Versailles," by Aytoun, "The One-Horse Shay," by Oliver Wendell Holmes, and "Our Folks," by Ethel Lynn. Miss Kellogg's delivery is marked by great intelligence. We were also much pleased by an instrumental concert, in which Mdlles. and Master Paggi were the performers. The selections from Verdi, Donizetti, and Bellini were excellently rendered. Mdlle. Anita Paggi exhibits rare skill on the flute, and Mdlle. Josephine is a pleasing performer on the violin. Master L. F. Paggi plays the violoncello with great taste. Mr. F. C. Burnand's dyspeptic illusion, entitled "Curried Prawns," is amusing; and Mr. A. J. Carter's lecture on "The Watch and Its History" instructive and interesting. With such attractions the Polytechnic deserves the patronage of an enlightened public.

The Moore and Burgess Minstrels entered last Thursday upon the fifteenth year of their management in St. James's Hall in one continuous season with a new programme, rendered especially attractive, the songs, burlesque sketches, dances, and stories being all new. The length of time that these performances have been continuously before the public is sure proof of their popularity.

At Tussaud's (of which the same remark as to continuance may be made with still greater force) the public are presented with a new arrangement of the Napoleon Family, from Napoleon I. to the late Prince Imperial; also with memorials of the Cabul massacre, consisting of Viceroy Lord Lytton, Nawab Gholam Hassein Khan, Generals Roberts, Sir S. Browne, and great Indian group.

JEWISH POPULATION OF THE WORLD.

The fifty-sixth annual report for 1878 of the Berlin Society for the Promotion of Christianity Among the Jews has been lately published. There is no concealment of the fact that the visible results do not correspond with the wishes of the society. The receipts during the year amounted to only 16,731 marks (about £836), of which 11,951 marks (about £597) were the proceeds of a simultaneous collection on the Tenth Sunday after Trinity in all the Protestant churches of the kingdom of Prussia.

In the appendix some details are given respecting the distribution of the Jews all over the world. The total number of the Hebrew race to-day is about what it was in the days of King David—between six and seven millions. There are in Europe, according to the latest statistical information, about five millions; in Asia, 200,000; in Africa, over 80,000; in America, from a million to a million and a half. More than half of the European Jews (2,621,000) reside in Russia; 1,375,000 in Austria (of whom 575,000 in the Polish province of Galicia); 512,000 in Germany (61,000 in the Polish province of Posen); Roumania is credited with 274,000, and Turkey with 100,000. There are 70,000 in Holland, 50,000 in England, 49,000 in France, 35,000 in Italy; Spain and Portugal have between 2000 and 4000; 1800 in Sweden, 25 in Norway. Nothing is said about Denmark or Switzerland. The number of Jewish residents in Berlin is given at 45,000—nearly as many as in the whole of France, and more than in Italy, Spain, Portugal, and the Scandinavian peninsula altogether. The majority of the African Jews live in the province of Algiers. But they are to be found in Abyssinia and all along the north coast, and even in the Saharan oases, frequently acting as intermediaries between the Mohammedans and Christians. Of the Asiatic Jews, 20,000 are assigned to India and 25,000 to Palestine. The population of Jerusalem is given as 7000 Mohammedans, 5000 Christians, and 13,500 Jews: these last are classified as German, Spanish, or Arabic Jews. The report gives no details concerning America, except that in New York there are thirty synagogues.

NEW BOOKS.

The recent terrible event at Cabul has renewed with tremendous emphasis the demonstration of a perilous mistake which the British Government of India perpetrated in the policy of its Afghan War. We are invited to a fresh perusal of the historical statement drawn up by the Duke of Argyll, Secretary of State for India in Mr. Gladstone's Ministry, and republished by Messrs. Strahan and Co. It formed part originally of his larger work on the "Eastern Question," the main portion of which, relating to Bulgaria and Roumelia, and the case of Turkey in presence of Russia and the European Powers, has ceased to be of immediate public interest. The Afghan Question from 1841 to 1878 comprises a detailed exposition of all the proceedings that led to the declaration of war against the late Ameer, Shere Ali, rather less than a twelvemonth ago. It has the most direct bearing upon the causes and character of that ferocious outbreak at Cabul on the 3rd inst., which has cost the lives of Sir Louis Cavagnari and his companions at the Residency, and has necessarily brought on a fresh military expedition. The inveterate dislike of the Afghans to every arrangement for admitting an English officer to dwell in their country as agent of the Imperial Government of India has always been the real subject of dispute. It has from the first been declared that there would be the greatest danger of such an intrusion, though formally sanctioned by the Ameer, being resented by a strong party of the chiefs and nobles, of the soldiery, the Mussulman clergy, and the people. They would be likely, again and again, to revolt and to kill the devoted Envoy. This is what has actually taken place. The Duke of Argyll's little volume shows that the quarrel between the British Government and the late Afghan ruler was forced on by Lord Salisbury and Lord Lytton insisting upon that fatal arrangement, in violation of previous understandings and assurances of the Indian Viceroys. He charges our Government with a reckless disregard both of equity and prudence. The whole question of our late dealings with Afghanistan is reduced to this simple issue. Was it right and just, or wise and politic, by menaces and violence to thrust upon that independent nation an official representative of British power, in a shape which is dreaded and detested by the Afghans, regarding it as preliminary to their subjugation? They have never yet forgotten the transactions of forty years ago, or the iniquitous conduct of a British Indian Government towards Dost Mohammed, the father of Shere Ali. The revenge which was taken by some of them, in the murder of Burnes and Macnaghten, was an example that naturally suggested itself for the indulgence of their present hostility. It does certainly appear that the treatment of Shere Ali by Lord Lytton, under the direction of the Marquis of Salisbury, as late Secretary of State for India, was not justifiable, either upon grounds of morality or of statesman-like discretion. This is a grave charge, which may still be worth considering. For, if the verdict should go against these distinguished English noblemen, they and their Ministerial colleagues are to be held responsible for the late shocking disaster at Cabul, and for the incalculable difficulties, political and financial, rather than military, which are likely to ensue. The Duke of Argyll's views were supported by Lord Northbrook and the late Lord Lawrence, two of the Viceroys of India, and by several other experienced officials who have borne testimony on the same side, including those in the confidence of Lord Mayo. The opinions of these distinguished persons certainly demand our serious attention. There are special points of administrative expediency and of military geography upon which such men as Sir Bartle Frere and Sir Henry Rawlinson have a right to be heard. But, for a just and true account of the course of British Indian statesmanship with respect to this affair, we should prefer to listen to Lord Northbrook and the Duke of Argyll, because of the great offices they have held, and not because of their party connection. The reader moved by such considerations to peruse his Grace's narrative of The Afghan Question will at least find it clear of superfluous and irrelevant matter, but more like a straightforward indictment and speech for the prosecution than a judicial summing-up and balancing of the case. The Duke writes as one who has from the outset quite made up his mind that Lords Salisbury and Lytton are undeniably guilty of the serious political misdemeanours imputed to them. He has before him their own statements, that of Lord Lytton, dated at Simla, May 10, 1877, and that of Lord Cranbrook, who succeeded Lord Salisbury at the India Office, and whose despatch of Nov. 18 last year was subjected to Parliamentary discussion. The Viceregal and Ministerial assertions concerning matters of fact are severely criticised by the Duke of Argyll in point of veracity, as well as their arguments or assumptions to justify the policy which has been adopted. We do not care to follow his Grace through these disagreeable strictures upon documents which have been some time exposed to free comment. It is more to the purpose that he vindicates the Afghan nation and its late ruler from the imputation of treachery or premeditated hostility to the British Indian Government, while he disperses the vague notions of Russian intrigue in that quarter, which have sadly obscured the perception of what is just and fair dealing on our own part. The great matter is, that we had promised the Ameer, over and over again, in accordance with his earnest entreaties, not to press him to admit a resident British Envoy. He never objected to the presence at Cabul, or in any other Afghan city, of Asiatic and Mussulman diplomatic agents of the Indian Government, who are fully competent to watch and report to the Viceroy all that goes on in that country. But the Marquis of Salisbury, so far back as 1875, had resolved to break the distinct agreement which long subsisted upon this important point; and he and Lord Lytton proceeded, with extreme harshness of manner and with gross unfairness in the making of pretexts and opportunities, to drive Shere Ali towards the concession they desired. It ought to be considered, in all such cases, that the position of a ruler like Shere Ali, who depends on the approval and support of those around him, his councillors and generals and the heads of his religion, may prevent his yielding to foreign demands that we should, perhaps, think reasonable and practicable enough. The same is to be remarked of the Zulu King Cetewayo with reference to the peremptory conditions of Sir Bartle Frere's ultimatum, which the unfortunate monarch was to accept within thirty days. In the one case, as in the other, it was an act of positive cruelty to follow up the demand with an instant military invasion. There was not the slightest occasion for such hot haste to begin the work of bloodshed by declaring war, as no attack on the British dominions had been attempted or threatened. The conditions desired might possibly have been obtained by pacific negotiations at some more favourable time. These considerations lead us to condemn alike the Afghan war and the Zulu war of the last twelvemonth as national crimes of no small magnitude. Their military success is not very glorious; and their results cannot finally be advantageous, if they proceed from dealings at variance with strict equity, which is the same for our transactions with a barbarian as with a civilised foreign nation. It appears even now probable that, both in Central and in South Africa, we shall have to pay the penalty of rash and unjust aggressive wars by future long endurance of the most onerous and vexatious perplexities, which might well have been spared. Yet this may be a less evil than the permanent depravation of the English political conscience, from the safe and easy commission of wrongful acts exempt from their natural consequences of shame and trouble. The Duke of Argyll, indeed, adopts a different view of the Zulu question, which he has not studied as he has the Afghan question. But his remark is, we think, equally applicable to either instance: "A course of action characterised by such conduct will turn out to be as injurious as it has been immoral." It is that sort of wrong which never comes right but by turning to a different course.

A difficult, almost an impossible, subject is handled with rare knowledge and discretion, and probably with as much completeness as was attainable, in Rabelais: by Walter Besant, M.A. (William Blackwood and Sons), one of the charming little volumes belonging to the series of "Foreign Classics for English Readers." Some idea of the difficulties with which the editor had to contend may be obtained from the fact that the warmest friends and admirers of Rabelais have to make apologies for him, and that his own countrymen, the wisest, the most learned, the most critical, and the least squeamish among them, are divided in opinion about him: you may cite the names of many illustrious French writers and critics by whom, though they may have subsequently modified their judgment, he has been pronounced a monstrous buffoon, wallowing in filth, indecency, and profanity; and, on the other hand, as many, or many more, equally illustrious, by whom he is lauded to the skies as a wit, a humourist, a laughing philosopher, a sage, a seer, a comic Solomon, covering himself with obscenity as with a garment, for protective purposes, to mislead the superficial who are impressed by externals, and behaving, in some sort, like David at the court of King Achish, when the son of Jesse assumed the madman, "scrabbled on the doors of the gate, and let his spittle fall down upon his beard." However that may be, the warmest defenders and admirers of Rabelais are obliged to acknowledge that he is unpresentable in mixed society, that he must be studied, if at all, in the closet, far from the eyes of women and the young, "to whom the greatest reverence is due," as one would study what is to be learned from the examination of something shameful and unmentionable. We cannot, therefore, be too grateful when so competent an authority as Mr. Besant undertakes to do all the dirty work, and present to the public in cleanly form the result of his investigations, doing just enough to let his readers understand what manner of man and what sort of literature are set before them, and "by what qualities Rabelais has drawn to himself, and continues to draw, the praise and admiration of those who study him." And that Rabelais cannot be entirely passed over, that some notice of such a "foreign classic" is required for the information of the "English reader," must be evident to everybody who reflects that the writings and the characters of Rabelais are constantly alluded to by our native authors when they seek to point a remark or to employ an apt illustration. Gargantua, Pantagruel, Panurge, Tohu and Bohu, Triboulet, &c., have become quite "household words" among us. As for the life of Rabelais, Mr. Besant, after diligent inquiry, has come to the following conclusions:—That "François Rabelais was born in the town of Chinon, province of Touraine, in the year 1483, the same year in which Luther and Raphael saw the light;" that at a very early, but unascertained, age he was removed from the convent of Seuilly, where he began his education, to that of La Baumette, where he was in the good company of "the illustrious Du Bellay brothers," and whence he emerged only to bury himself as a "Franciscan monk, at Fontenay-le-Comte, in Poitou;" that in 1524 he "was out of the convent," being then "in his forty-first year;" that he thereupon began "six years of uninterrupted freedom, leisurely study, and enjoyment;" that in 1530 he resolved to become a physician; that he received his bachelor's degree at Montpellier "two months after entering," and his doctor's degree in 1537, having been from November, 1532, to February, 1534, "physician at the Hospital of Lyons;" that in 1540 he "entered the Collegiate Chapter of St. Maur des Fossés;" that in 1543 he is to be traced "at Symphorien, near Lyons (where he witnessed the death of Guillaume du Bellay), at Chinon, Ligugé, Angers, and perhaps in Normandy;" that in 1549 he was presented to the living of Meudon, which, for reasons not known, he resigned in 1552, either voluntarily or from pressure; and that within a year or so afterwards, the exact date not being assigned, he "died in his bed from natural causes, not by the efforts of the monks," at Paris, "in the Rue des Jardins, parish of St. Paul," where he was buried "at the foot of a tree which preserved his name at least to 1660." He had the vinosity but not the grace of Anacreon; and it is said that "even in death he made a mock of those who at his death most mourned." As much as it is worth while to know about him, so much, if not more, is likely to be found in Mr. Besant's judicious and instructive little volume.

The Rev. Dr. Porter has been appointed president of Queen's College, Belfast, vice Rev. Dr. Henry, resigned.

The foundation-stone of the new Market Hall at Lancaster was laid on Tuesday by the Mayor, Mr. W. Hall. The structure will cost about £10,000.

The committee of the new college for Ryde, which it is proposed to establish at Apsley House, has bought the property and paid £1000 of the purchase money. The Bishop of Winchester has consented to become a visitor. Lord Rollo has been elected president.

Mr. Bright, in a letter written to a gentleman in New York, says he believes that the present policy of the Canadian Government is inflicting a wound on the union between the colony and England, from which, if it be not speedily reversed, great changes must come.

The Sheffield Independent understands that the total amount promised to the Wesleyan Methodist Thanksgiving Fund is nearly £173,000. The amount already paid has enabled the treasurers to distribute a further sum of £8300 amongst a number of institutions.

Margaret Robertson, or Duncan, said to be the oldest woman in Scotland, died at Cupar Angus on Tuesday. She was born in 1773. Her husband, a weaver, died fifty years ago and left her with a daughter, who is still alive and over sixty. Mrs. Duncan was a heavy smoker, and until recently, when she became blind, was in possession of all her faculties. Her last illness was only of a week's duration.

As a result of recent agitation on the subject of spelling reform, a society has been formed, with an office in the Adelphi, under the name of the English Spelling Reform Association. Among the names of those who have joined the association may be mentioned the Bishop of Exeter, Mr. Lowe, M.P., Dr. Abbott, Mr. Mundella, M.P., Professor Max Müller, and Sir Charles Reed. The objects the society proposes to aim at are the collection and distribution of information on the subject, the carrying on experiments in teaching to read, and promoting lectures and meetings for the purpose of imparting information.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

One of the strangest features of the late St. Leger was the general prejudice that existed against Sir Bevys. With the exception of Blue Blood, he was unquestionably the best-looking horse that ran for the Derby, and he won that race in the most decisive style; yet the public would have nothing to do with him at Doncaster. We were told that he had become a bad roarer, that the Epsom running was all wrong, that Rayon d'Or was sure to reverse his previous position with him; and, though the stable appeared to have unlimited faith in him and kept him at 3 to 1 until the fall of the flag, popular prejudice, as is generally the case, proved correct, and he cut a very poor figure in the race. It is impossible to say how much Rayon d'Or has improved since the spring, for a great race has never been won in more dashing style, the French colt going to the front directly they had fairly settled down to their work, and never again allowing anything to get within two or three lengths of him. Hai Wheel of Fortune come to the post in her best form the contest between the pair would have been wonderfully interesting, and, though we cannot doubt the success of the little mare, she would have been called on to gallop faster than she ever galloped before, and we fancy that the first and second would have weighed in before the third had passed the post. Ruperra ran fairly well, though he is by no means the colt that performed in such brilliant style at Ascot and Newmarket last year; but it is said, in extenuation of Lansdown's wretched display, that he hit his leg in the course of the race, so we suppose that he will come to a short price for the Cesarewitch.

The weather on Thursday was dull and gloomy, and after the wonderful crowd that assembled on the previous day the town moor appeared to be almost deserted. Lord Clive (8 st. 2 lb.) appeared to possess a wonderful chance in the Alexandra Plate, but he has proved an unlucky purchase for Sir George Chetwynd, and Master Kildare (9 st.) actually managed to give him 12 lb. The handicapping would have been all the other way last year, when the son of Lord Clifden was winning race after race and was considered about the best three-year-old in England. The Rous Plate, a new race which has taken the place of the Sweepstakes, in which the running in the Champagne Stakes has been so often reversed, was regarded as a match between Duke of Cumberland and a colt by Brown Bread—Mayoress, who had never previously run, but who brought a great reputation from the Fyfield stable. In Bounds ran well until reaching the distance, where she was passed by "the Duke," who, however, was quite unable to reach the Mayoress colt. Sir Joseph (8 st. 11 lb.) seemed wonderfully well in the Portland Plate, and had not a very heavy commission been thrown into the market for Hackthorpe (9 st.), Mr. Legh's luckless horse would have been a tremendous favourite. As usual, he disappointed his owner, and Hackthorpe won pretty cleverly, though Rowlston (7 st. 12 lb.) came with such a rush from the half-distance that Archer had to call on his mount in earnest. Except for his victory over Kaleidoscope and Placida in the Northamptonshire Cup, Sir Joseph has had a most unfortunate career this season, as a third in the Lincolnshire Handicap, a similar position in the Great Cheshire Handicap, one in the Royal Hunt Cup, and one in the Rous Memorial Stakes represent some of his failures.

A dull morning on the Friday sent everyone to the course fully prepared for rain, but it proved a delightfully fine and warm afternoon. The absence of Wheel of Fortune brought everything to the post for the Park Hill Stakes that could raise a gallop. The quality of the ten fillies that ran may be imagined when Reconciliation, with all her roaring, could carry a 7 lb. penalty into third place over this trying course, and the wretched White Poppy, who, penalised, was only beaten a neck by Peace, who received 11 lb. from her. A capital field of eleven ran for the Prince of Wales's Nursery Plate for two-year-olds, and again Duke of Cumberland (8 st. 7 lb.), who was once more a very hot favourite, had to put up with second place to Prestonpans (8 st.). The latter won in a canter, and is a rare advertisement for Prince Charlie, as he evidently is a thorough stayer, and had previous winners like Eirene (8 st. 12 lb.), May Queen (7 st. 13 lb.), and Bonnie Marden (7 st. 5 lb.) behind him. The Doncaster Cup proved decidedly the sensational race of the meeting. Isonomy was only opposed by Glendale, Jannette, and The Monk, so, of course, such odds as 100 to 15 were laid on him without scruple, and, indeed, the bookmakers did not care to accept any price. For upwards of a mile and a half the pace was wretched, but then the crack took the lead, and it improved a little. Still, they only raced in earnest for about a quarter of a mile, and the agony of the "plungers" may be imagined when Jannette dashed up to Isonomy, pinned him on to the rails, and, after a slashing race home, was only beaten by a head. Of course this form was all wrong, and it transpired after the race that Cannon was driven so close to the rails that his left foot was severely bruised from coming in contact with the heads of the excited Yorkshiremen, who were craning forward to get a good view of the finish. Still the closeness of the affair has made the backers of the champion for the Cesarewitch rather nervous; and it is quite likely that he needs rest, as he has been in constant training since the beginning of the year. A capital meeting wound up with the easy victory of Ruperra in the Doncaster Stakes; and, now that Mr. Houldsworth's colt seems something like his old self again, we hope to see him place many another good stake to the credit of the "green and gold."

Considering the stagnation of the times, the sales of blood stock at Doncaster were fairly successful. Six from the Warealey Stud made the capital average of 361 gs., a colt by Doncaster—Euxine (1000 gs.) heading the list. The Earl of Scarborough also secured about the same average for his ten, eight of whom were by Strathconan; but the top price (1000 gs.) was made by Covenanter, a half-brother to Lowlander, by King Lud—Lufra. Sir Tatton Sykes was by no means so successful as usual with his three on the Thursday; but Mr. James Snarry did capitally, as a colt by Speculum—Lily Agnes, and an own sister to Lily Agnes, made 800 gs. and 780 gs. respectively. It is always understood that Mr. Cookson's stud will make good prices, and even in this wretched season his nine averaged 440 gs. This result was mainly due to a magnificent colt by Hermit—Lady Audley, and therefore half-brother to Pilgrimage, who fell to Mr. Crawfurd's bid of 2200 gs.; a filly by Speculum—Bicycle (850 gs.) was also very promising. Mr. W. I'Anson did not do quite so well as usual with his seven, and has to thank a grand colt by Cremorne—Caller Ou (1500 gs.) for an average of 318 gs.

The first portion of the Cobham Park Stud was disposed of on Wednesday, when the sum realised was £25,425, which showed an average of £339.

Our scullers appear to be recovering a little from the two crushing blows administered to them by Hanlan, the American champion. Several interesting matches have been made, and on Monday week those old opponents, John Higgins and R. W. Boyd, will meet over the Thames champion course. Elliott has also challenged Hanlan for the "Sportsman" Cup; and from America we hear that a match has at last been arranged between the champion and Courtney.

Daft's Eleven, perhaps the best team of cricketers that ever went out to do battle for the old country, are carrying all before them in Canada, where their fine play has excited the greatest admiration.

On Friday and Saturday this week a contest for twenty-six hours on bicycles takes place at the Agricultural Hall, Islington. All the crack long-distance riders have entered, with the important exception of Waller, of Newcastle, the champion.

THE AFGHAN COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

The Ameer Yakoob Khan, in his hurried message of the 3rd inst. to Major Conolly, announcing the insurrection at Cabul and the attack on the British Residency, stated that he had sent Daoud Shah to recall the mutinous regiments to order, and that Daoud Shah was stoned, wounded with a spear, and pulled off his horse. It was next stated that Daoud Shah had been brought back to the Ameer's palace, and had there died of his wounds at a later hour of the day. We are not yet in a position to confirm these statements, which may be reasonably left in doubt, so long as the Ameer's conduct towards the British Government and its agents at Cabul is regarded as questionable; and it is quite possible that Daoud Shah still lives, and holds command at the head of the Afghan army. He accompanied Yakoob Khan to the meeting with the British General and political agent at Gundamuk, where the portrait we now give was drawn by Mr. W. Simpson, our Special Artist, in May last. He wore a black or very dark-coloured uniform, of European cut. Daoud Shah, whose official rank or title, borrowed from Persian language, was that of "Sipah Salar," was a Ghilzai by birth, and is said to have raised himself by his own abilities. Our Special Artist writes of him that "his great stature—over six feet—and his strongly-marked expressive features, would have made him a noticeable person anywhere. When at Gundamuk he took a great interest in everything connected with our army, and no doubt he learned much at that time which would have been valuable to him in his profession. Daoud Shah in his death deserves our sympathy if, according to the account, he fell when sent by his master on a message for the assistance of our people."

COLONEL C. M. MACGREGOR, C.S.I., C.B.

This distinguished officer has been named for a staff appointment of great importance connected with the intended military expedition into Afghanistan. He is a son of the late Major R. G. MacGregor, of the Bengal Artillery, and comes of the old stock of the MacGregors of Glengyle. He obtained his first commission on Oct. 20, 1856, and his service since has been a distinguished record that very few can equal. He served throughout the Mutiny Campaign of 1857, 1858, and 1859 with the 1st Bengal Fusiliers and Hodson's Horse, and in China with Fane's Horse. On his return from the campaign in China, Sir Hugh Rose, with that intuition which marked him, selected Colonel MacGregor for the post of second in command of Hodson's Horse. Thus at the age of twenty-one he was brought into prominent notice. He served throughout the trying campaign in Bhotan as Brigade-Major, and then as D.A.Q.M.G.; and when the Abyssinian war broke out Lord Napier took him to that country as D.A.Q.M.G. of Cavalry. In the long period of peace which followed, Colonel MacGregor was not idle. For five years he was engaged in compiling perhaps the most important work that has ever emanated from the Military Department in India—viz., the "Gazetteer of Central Asia;" and when the famine of 1874 arose, he was selected by Lord Northbrook to undertake the work of directing the transport of supplies to the starving districts. Here, too, as before, he displayed eminent powers of organisation. Untiring as ever, he next undertook at his own expense an extensive exploration in Persia, the account of which is given in his lately published work, "Travels in Khorassan." In 1875 and 1876, he was sent by Lord Salisbury to explore the dangerous tract of country between the Mekran coast and the Helmund. By all this, Colonel MacGregor added to his reputation, and when the Afghan War broke out he was appointed Deputy-Assistant-Quartermaster-General to Sir Samuel Browne's force, an appointment which gave universal satisfaction. Indeed, as a correspondent of an Indian paper received last mail ably puts it:—"The appointment of Colonel MacGregor gives us the security of having a man of well-known abilities at the helm. Probably no officer in India is more fitted for his present post. Hitherto he has been responsible for the line of communication from Peshawur to Gundamuk, and has performed that arduous task as, probably, no one but he could have done it. He is a practical soldier, as well as a most distinguished one; and we venture to say that, if Generals were elected by popular vote, he undoubtedly would be the first favourite."

It may be noted that, though now only thirty-eight years of age, Colonel MacGregor has served in five campaigns, has been six times wounded; and, in addition to the medals for India, China, Bhotan, and Abyssinia, he has received the Star of India, and was one of the first batch of Companions of the new Order of the Indian Empire; so that, if spared, we may yet confidently predict a still more brilliant future for this able and gallant officer.

LIEUTENANT REGINALD HART, V.C., R.E.

It was lately announced that the Queen has bestowed the Victoria Cross upon this officer for the act performed by him during the recent Afghan campaign, in rescuing a mounted sowar of the 13th Bengal Lancers on Jan. 31, 1879, as recorded in the accompanying statement:—Lieutenant Reginald Clare Hart, Royal Engineers, for his gallant conduct in risking his own life in endeavouring to save the life of a private soldier. The Lieutenant-General commanding the Second Division Peshawur Field Force reports that when on convoy duty with that force on Jan. 31, 1879, Lieutenant Hart, of the Royal Engineers, took the initiative in running some 1200 yards to the rescue of a wounded sowar of the 13th Bengal Lancers in a river bed exposed to the fire of the enemy, of unknown strength, from both flanks, and also from a party in the river bed. Lieutenant Hart reached the wounded sowar, drove off the enemy, and brought him under cover with the aid of some soldiers who accompanied him on the way.

The portrait of Lieutenant Hart is from a photograph by Messrs. Maull and Fox, of Piccadilly and Cheapside.

The York Herald states that an influential meeting has been held at Berwick-on-Tweed in connection with the scheme for the establishment of a second-grade school for Northumberland, Durham, and North Yorkshire, principally by the legacy of the late Mr. B. Flounders, of Yarm. Mr. Albert Grey, of Howick, stated that if the three counties raised the £10,000 required for building purposes, St. John's Hospital, Durham, had promised to contribute another £10,000.

AGRICULTURAL.

The Royal Commission on Agricultural Depression has agreed upon the following heads of inquiry:—(1) Condition of Farms; (2) Condition of Farmers; (3) the Labourer; (4) Land Laws; (5) Land Tenancy; (6) Agricultural Education; (7) Condition of Estates; (8) Agricultural Statistics to be furnished by the Board of Trade; (9) Returns of Imports and Exports of Agricultural Produce to be furnished by the Customs; and (10) Importations of Agricultural Produce from Foreign Countries. The York Herald states that the office of Assistant-Commissioner for the counties of York, Durham, Northumberland, Cumberland, Westmoreland, Lancashire, and Cheshire (being the Northern division of the inquiry) has been accepted by Mr. Coleman, of Riccal Hall, near York; and the Scotsman announces the appointment of Mr. James Hope as Assistant-Commissioner. The Commissioners will visit Scotland and Ireland next spring.

The Mark Lane Express says that a large proportion of wheat and barley has been cut and carried in the southern counties. With some reservation in favour of oats, all the spring corn crops may be pronounced to a great extent failures. The wheat trade continues dull, and without change in prices. The average price of British wheat last week was 47s. 11d. per quarter. The weather last week was unfavourable to harvest operations, and even within thirty miles of London numbers of fields are yet untouched by the reaper, while in the North and in Wales a large proportion of the crops are still green. In a few advanced districts, however, it is said that threshing has begun, and that the return is quite disappointing. But it is too early as yet to judge definitely of the character of the crop. In France harvesting is almost completed, but the reports as to the results are very conflicting. In its commercial summary the Débats says that the hopes lately entertained will be disappointed. In Holland the bad harvest is referred to in the King's speech, and generally throughout the Continent the agricultural outlook is gloomy; in Italy, more particularly, actual distress is spoken of.

Mr. Drummond, her Majesty's Secretary of Legation at Washington, contributes to Tuesday morning's Daily News a letter on the prices at which wheat, beef, and pork, produced in the United States, can be profitably sold in this country. Briefly, Mr. Drummond's conclusions are that, from Philadelphia (which, for the present, at any rate, is a cheaper route than either the New York, Boston, or Baltimore), average red winter wheat can be sold in Liverpool at 39s. 8d. per quarter; beef from New York at from 7d. to 7½d. per lb.; and pigs for about 3½d. per lb. These prices, it will be borne in mind, have reference only to the present, when the great trunk railways, through excessive competition, are carrying goods from the west without gain to themselves, and often even at a positive loss.

A number of tenant farmers' delegates sailed last week for Canada, under the auspices of the Canadian Government. They represent Roxburghshire, Berwickshire, Dumfriesshire, Durham, Cumberland, and Yorkshire, and the Eastern and Southern counties of England, as well as several districts of Ireland. Their object is to report to the agricultural classes the advantages which the Dominion presents as a field for settlement.

The Maharajah Dhuleep Singh has announced that three of his farms near Bury St. Edmunds—of 1200, 800, and 350 acres respectively—will be let on advantageous terms, to meet the agricultural depression. The first has been let at £600 a year; it will now be let for four years at £900, on a sliding scale, by which no rent will be paid for the first year. The terms for the other farms are similar. The tenants will be allowed to kill rabbits on the farm nine months in the year, and in the plantations at certain periods, and to snare hares three months in the year. The Maharajah's estates abound with game.

In several cases the notices given by Lord Kilmorey to the tenants on his Cheshire estates has been withdrawn, and in other cases the agent has intimated to the tenants that he will make special representations to the landlord on behalf of the existing tenants. In two or three cases, however, the tenants, who state that they have for four years been living on their capital, have expressed their determination not to accept a farm again under his Lordship.

Sir Geoffrey Palmer has decided to return to his tenants 10 per cent of their rents at Carlton Curlieu, Leicester, on account of the prevailing agricultural distress.

The condition of Irish agriculture was painfully illustrated by the proceedings at Banagher fair on Tuesday. The number of sheep penned was about 17,000, but the sales did not exceed 2000. Last year the number penned was 18,944, and the sales 17,394.

Lord Ventry has made an abatement in rents to the tenants of his Kerry estates. To those whose rents have been recently increased he has allowed 25 per cent, and on the old lettings 15 per cent.

Mr. Mitchell Henry, M.P., has written to his tenants on the Kylemore estate saying he considers it to be the duty of a landlord to share in the unavoidable losses arising from bad years, and he will therefore allow to each of them the remission of the whole of the present half-year's rent.

Mr. St. John T. Blacker has granted an abatement of 25 per cent to the tenants on his property in the north of the county of Kerry, which is extensive. The abatement is to be made both on the March and September rents of the present year.

The thirty-seventh annual show, under the auspices of the Wirral and Birkenhead Agricultural Society, was held last week at Birkenhead. Mr. R. Barton, of Caldy Manor, presided over the dinner which took place in connection with the exhibition

The Great International Potato Exhibition, under the auspices of a number of influential gentlemen interested in the cultivation of this important esculent vegetable, began on Wednesday at the Crystal Palace.

The Earl of Bective, M.P., in proposing the principal toast at the Lonsdale Agricultural Association Show on Tuesday, referred at length to the cause of the depression in agriculture. He attributed the depression to a succession of bad seasons, and to the bad condition of commercial trade generally. Although the times were bad, prices in agricultural produce were yet not lower than they were some years ago, and he was very hopeful that the country would soon see a return to prosperity. As regarded suggested alterations in the land laws, he thought that landlords and tenants could manage their own affairs best themselves, and deprecated any compulsory legislation for regulating the relations between landlord and tenant, although he highly approved of the Agricultural Holdings Act, as it made that a rule which was previously only a custom—namely, that outgoing tenants should receive adequate compensation for unexhausted improvements. A return to protection was by some persons suggested, but that would not meet the exigencies of the situation, and he certainly was of opinion that any system which artificially raised prices of food for the benefit of a special class would not be tolerated for one moment.

Mr. W. S. Stanhope, member for South Yorkshire, speaking at Loxley, near Sheffield, on Monday, referred to the agricultural distress, which, although serious, he thought had been very considerably exaggerated. The only way in which the Government could assist the farmer was by sound legislation to stamp out pleuro-pneumonia and other diseases which affected live stock.

At the annual dinner of the Northamptonshire Agricultural Society, held at the Corn Exchange on the 11th inst., Lord Burghley, president of the society, said:—Societies of that character tended in a great measure to keep up the pre-eminence of British agriculture, which was so absolutely necessary. He only wished there was some society that would keep up the breed of English horses sufficiently well to prevent foreigners coming over and winning such races as the St. Leger, recently run. They had all heard so much about agricultural depression that he scarcely liked to say a word about it. No one had been able to give them any practical remedy. Politicians seemed to throw the blame on one party or the other. There were people who talked of breaking up the large landed property, and substituting what they were pleased to term a peasant proprietorship. He should, however, like to know where the money would come from to purchase these small properties. The present floating capital which was used for cultivation of the soil would be entirely absorbed in their purchase, and the result would be the gradual impoverishment of the entire landed property of this country, both great and small. There was another remedy, which Mr. Grant Duff seemed to start up, which was that the sympathetic combination existing between landlord and tenant should become a purely commercial one, and that the charitable feeling which had shown itself so often lately between landlord and tenant in their straitened circumstances should be done away with. That he could not agree with. They had read lately of a number of farmers who had thrown up the knife and fork in England and had emigrated. But his idea of emigration was—and he submitted it with all humility—that if a man had a shilling in his pocket, let him stay in England. It was the only country where he was able or likely honestly to make two of it, and where, when he had made the odd shilling, he could spend it with satisfaction to himself. He thought that, notwithstanding all the remedies they had heard of, they must still look to the laws of nature for assistance. They must look to the farmers' wives to assist the farmers; not to go about like grand ladies, but to put their shoulders to the wheel. Their daughters must not be brought up to play the piano, but as farmers' wives. They should not be brought up to play lawn-tennis, and speak French and other languages; they were wanted to exist entirely in this country to assist the agricultural interest. That was his opinion of matters.

TRADE OF BRITISH INDIA.

A Parliamentary statement has been issued of the trade of British India with British possessions and foreign countries for the five years 1873-4 to 1877-8. The interchanges of India with other countries are conducted in the main with England and China, which take between them about 75 per cent. of the total trade of the country.

It appears from this review that the total imports of merchandise from the United Kingdom for the last five years show an increase of seven crores of rupees; but the exports have only increased about one crore. The increase in the former is widely distributed over various articles, the most important of which are cotton twist and piece-goods and liquors. In metals, although there was a large increase in quantity, the value declined considerably. The increase in exports to England was due chiefly to rice, wheat, hides, and skins, jute, linseed and rapeseed, and tea. Most of the principal articles imported into India increased considerably during the year 1877-8, which, however, is not considered normal and satisfactory. The great development of the trade is held to be the outcome of the efforts made by traders in England suffering from the consequences of a severe and prolonged commercial crisis to find markets for their goods and obtain a money return enabling them to continue the struggle even at a loss. This was especially the case in the cotton goods, materially helping to continue the unfavourable condition of the exchange. Coal increased largely, from 519,749 tons to 601,257 tons. Coloured piece-goods show a material decline, but white goods have rather increased. Owing to the famine, the imports of grain and pulse show a large development. There is a considerable increase in the import of liquors, but in machinery and mills there has been some diminution. The augmentation in metals is most marked in copper and iron. Provisions increased materially, as was also the case with railway plant and rolling stock. The increase in the item of sugar has been very great, owing to the great rise in the price of Indian sugar. Woollen piece-goods show a slight reduction. As regards exports, the quantity of raw cotton shipped to the United Kingdom has been falling off year after year since 1871-2. England is, in fact, no longer a large customer for Indian cotton, much less than half of the total exports going thither.

The Continental countries, however, maintain their demand on an increasing scale. Austria, during the year, took about 407,000 cwt, France about 611,000 cwt, Germany 109,000, Italy 434,000, and China is also a fairly large consumer, having taken 209,000 cwt. The exports of manufactured cotton would appear by the figures to have doubled in five years.

The following paragraph with reference to Indian cotton-mills is worthy of reproduction:—"The Indian cotton-mills have had much to contend with during the last three or four years. Over-production in Lancashire has caused the Indian markets to be glutted with Manchester goods thrown into the country in reckless profusion, to be disposed of at any loss; the failure of crops caused by drought has most seriously impaired the purchasing power of the people; and, simultaneously with the operation of these two causes of unfavourable trade for the mills, it happened that they had themselves accumulated very large stocks, and that, as a consequence of inefficient, and in some cases dishonest, management, it was absolutely necessary to dispose of these stocks for what they might fetch. Hence the very largely increased exports during the year of review and the year previous to it. But these speculations have not resulted profitably, and most, if not all, of the mills have been compelled to work on short time; some have closed altogether—only temporarily, it may be hoped—and wages have everywhere been reduced. That the mills have been able to survive the crisis through which they have passed is a proof—considering the character of their management generally—that the industry is essentially sound, that it has in it all the elements of permanence, and that it will eventually be prosperous. Nevertheless, the mills have still a bad time before them. The importation of Manchester goods continues on an increased scale, and the Chinese have imitated the example of India, and set up the first native spinning and weaving mill at Shanghai, a mill which if it succeeds—and there seems to be no reason to apprehend failure—will undoubtedly be only the forerunner of many others. Now China is the principal foreign customer for Indian twist. However, events such as these must be looked for; it seems tolerably clear that as the years go by no nation will feel disposed to continue a day longer than can be helped dependent on another nation for the supply of the fabric from which the bulk of the clothing of the population is made. The fabric will, under ordinarily favourable conditions, be made in the country itself, and Manchester and India (so far as India has secured a foreign customer) must alike resign themselves to see consumption of their manufactures more and more limited to the country in which they are made. It is, perhaps, well that India should become aware that China cannot be depended upon as a permanent customer before the trade has so extended and developed as to become an essential resource for the mills."

A statistical abstract relating to British India from 1868-9 to 1877-8, recently issued, gives the area of British India, exclusive of Native States, as 899,341 square miles, the number of inhabited houses, 37,043,524, and the population 191,096,603. The area of the Native States is stated at 575,255 square miles, and the population at 49,161,540. The area of the French possessions is 178 square miles, and the population 271,400; and of the Portuguese possessions, 1086 square miles, the population being 407,712. The total area of all India is thus 1,475,870 square miles, and the total population 240,937,315. Of the population of British India 139,343,820 were Hindoos, 1,174,436 Sikhs, 40,867,125 Mohammedans, 2,832,851 Buddhists and Jains, 897,632 Christians, and 3,417,304 others, and 561,069 whose religion is not known. The total revenue in the year 1878 was £58,969,301, and the total expenditure £62,512,338. In the year 1877 there were 19,695 persons killed by wild beasts and venomous snakes, 46 being killed by elephants, 819 by tigers, 200 by leopards, 85 by bears, 564 by wolves, 24 by hyenas, 1180 by other wild animals, and 16,777 by snakes. The numbers killed in the two preceding years were 19,273 and 21,391 respectively. The sum of £10,301 15s. was paid as rewards for the destruction of wild beasts and snakes during the year, the total number of the former destroyed being 22,851, and of the latter 127,295. During the year 1877 there were 688 persons sentenced to death.

REORGANISATION OF THE CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.

The long-delayed scheme of reorganisation for the clerical branches of the London establishments of the Customs Department has been promulgated by the Treasury, and the classification of work and pay for the various offices of the service are now being arranged by the Board of Customs. The recommendation of the Playfair Commission, that in every department which it was proposed to reorganise there should be a judicious scheme of retirement which, by providing for the removal of the older officials, would conduce to the efficiency of the public service and increase the flow of promotion for the younger members of that service has, according to the Daily News, been entirely ignored in the case of the Customs Department. The old establishments of "principal," "first class," and "second class" clerks have been reorganised into "principal" and "higher division" clerks; whilst provision is made for a large "lower division" class of clerks to be partly formed from selected "writers," and to be recruited afterwards from outside the service. A small number of "writers," as such, will still be attached to each reorganised office. None of the present established clerks form part of the lower division, but the surplus clerks become "redundants" of the "higher division"; when, as in the case of every one of the reorganised offices in the customs, the present number of established clerks exceeds the number fixed for the higher division, and these "redundants" will only be placed on the higher division as vacancies arise. The result of the new arrangements is that considerably over a hundred clerks on the London establishments alone, many of whom have seen service ranging from fifteen to twenty-five years, find themselves "redundant." In the adjustment of the proportion between higher and lower division posts in the different offices and in the distribution of what is called "duty pay," the most extraordinary and unaccountable course has been adopted. As a rule, our contemporary says, to those who had more has been given, whilst to those who had not (including the greatest sufferers from the stagnation in promotion) have been taken away advantages which ought to have accrued to them under any just system of reorganisation. It follows that the offices which are worse treated are those which perform the most important duties—the offices, that is to say, which are brought most directly into contact with the public.

THE WEST OF ENGLAND BANK.

The Bristol magistrates gave their decision yesterday week in the case of the prosecution of the West of England and South Wales District Bank directors. They thought there was no evidence of promoting "T. W. Booker and Co." as a fraudulent company, and that the charges of having issued false balance-sheets in 1873, 1874, 1875, and 1876 were not proved, but that upon the charge of having issued false balance-sheets in 1877 and 1878 the magistrates considered that it was their duty to send all the defendants for trial. The defendants were admitted to bail in their respective recognisances of £1000 and a surety to the same amount. Originally the proceedings embraced seven directors of the bank—namely, Mr. Jerom Murch, chairman, Mr. G. H. Leonard, Mr. J. Coates, Mr. Allen, the Rev. Hereford Brooke George, Mr. C. Lucas, and Mr. J. H. S. Payne, with Mr. J. H. P. Gilbert, the manager; but before the inquiry had gone far it became clear that against one of these gentlemen, Mr. Payne, the evidence would fail to establish the grave charge advanced, and the Bench accordingly pronounced his acquittal. As regards the others there were degrees of liability, according to the theory of the prosecution. The chairman, Mr. Murch, had been a director for twenty-three years, held 400 shares, and had never sold one. Mr. Coates had inherited some shares, had bought more at various periods, and at the time of the bank's failure had a large sum standing to his credit in its books. On the other hand, Mr. Leonard, who became a director in 1860, retired in 1878, and had disposed of all his shares before the stoppage. Mr. Allen joined the board in 1866, and showed his confidence by adding to the number of his shares, until, when the crash came, he was the largest holder in the bank. The Reverend Mr. George resigned his seat at the board last year on the ground of ill-health, but did not sell his shares. Mr. Lucas had been manager of the Cardiff branch, and was an experienced, practical banker, yet, unlike his fellow-directors, he held only the fifty shares which constituted the qualification for a seat on the board. Some of the defendants, Mr. Coates for instance, were in no sense active directors, having scarcely ever attended the board meetings; others, like Mr. Murch, were constant in their supervision of the bank's affairs—a circumstance which, taken in conjunction with their unblemished personal character, was in fact one main cause of the confidence which outsiders had in the institution to the end.

The last call made upon the shareholders of the West of England Bank has met with a much greater response than was generally anticipated, and the deficiency that existed at the time of the stoppage of the bank has been more than met. The expenses of winding up, however, have added between £80,000 and £100,000 to the original deficiency, the shareholders having also to pay this sum. The estimated deficiency when the bank stopped was just over £300,000, but on Saturday the liquidators had received £350,000, and further sums were known to be forthcoming in response to the last call.

A ZULU GUIDE LISTENING FOR SOUNDS OF THE ENEMY.

THE ZULU WAR.

A sketch by Mr. Melton Prior, our Special Artist late with the army in Zululand, represents one of the native guides, accompanying a party in a reconnaissance, in the attitude of listening with his ear close to the ground, for distant sounds of movements of the enemy. There is little fresh intelligence of the military operations under the direction of Sir Garnet Wolseley, which have been almost confined to the pursuit of the fugitive Cetewayo. His capture or surrender on the 28th ult. is reported. This news reached London on Wednesday last, by a telegram which was forwarded to the Colonial Office by Mr. Pender, Chairman of the Telegraph Construction and Maintenance Company. It is stated that the Zulu King was captured "on the north-east of Zululand on Aug. 28." We trust he will be kindly and honourably treated as a prisoner of war or prisoner of State, for he is neither a rebel nor in any way a criminal, and has bravely defended his own country, as he had a right to do, against a foreign invasion. There is now an end of the war; and Sir Garnet Wolseley can proceed with his plan of dividing Zululand into six or seven provinces, each to be ruled by a native chief responsible to the British Government.

Her Majesty the Queen, who last week received Sir Evelyn Wood and Colonel Redvers Buller as her guests at Balmoral, and personally decorated them with the Victoria Cross, for their services in the Zulu War, has also bestowed the Victoria Cross upon several other gallant officers and one private soldier, for signal acts of bravery in the same campaign. Among these are Lord William Beresford, Captain in the 9th Lancers, and Major William Knox Leet, of the 13th Light Infantry.

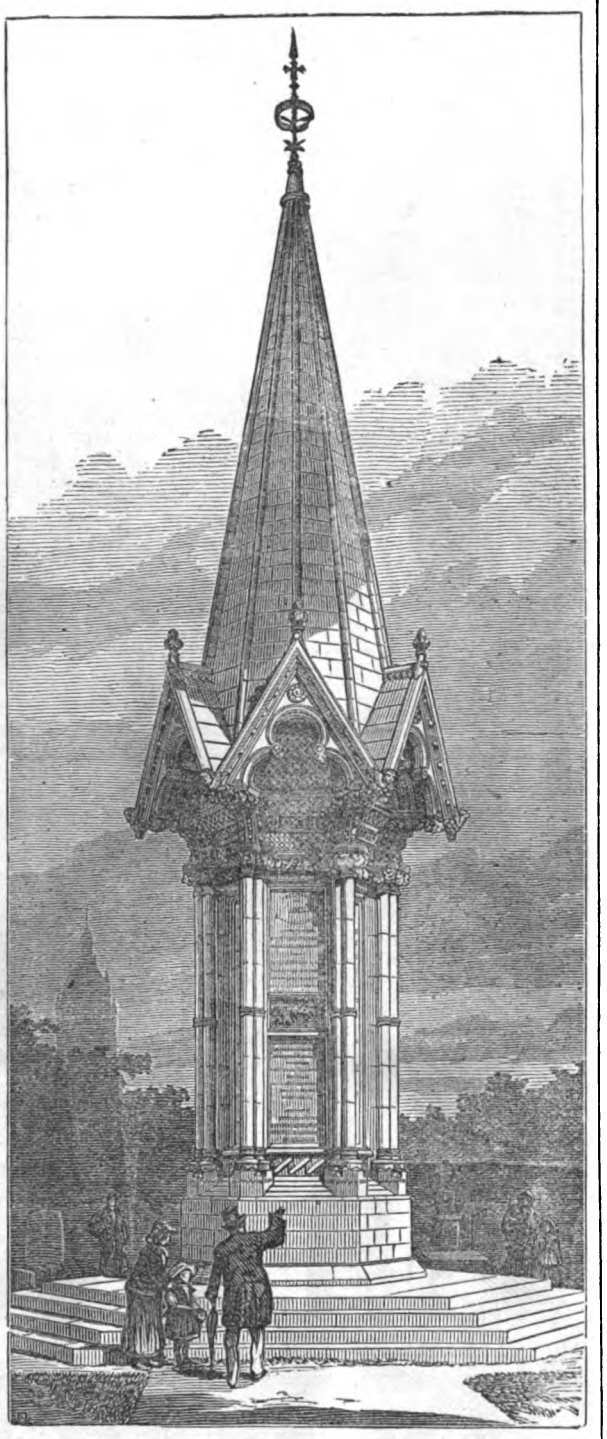
Lord William Beresford is thus distinguished for his gallant conduct in having, at great personal risk, during the retirement of the reconnoitring party across the White Umvolosi River on July 3 last, turned to assist Sergeant Fitzmaurice, 1st Battalion 24th Foot (whose horse had fallen with him), mounted him behind him on his horse, and brought him away in safety under the close fire of the Zulus, who were in great force, and coming on quickly. Lord William Beresford's position was rendered most dangerous from the fact that Sergeant Fitzmaurice twice nearly pulled him from his horse.

Major William Knox Leet, V.C., 13th Light Infantry, who has likewise earned the Victoria Cross by his gallant conduct in the Zulu campaign, is a son of the late Rev. E. S. Leet, Rector of Dalkey, Ireland, and the youngest of five brothers, all of whom have served, or are now serving, in Her Majesty's Army or Navy, and have received medals for war services, his brother, Captain H. Knox Leet, of the Royal Navy, being the fortunate possessor of six, including the Legion of Honour and the Medjidie. Major Leet has been for upwards of twenty-four years in the Army, having been gazetted to the 13th Light Infantry on July 5, 1855. He served with distinction through the Indian Mutiny campaign, and was frequently mentioned in despatches for gallantry in the field. For six years he was adjutant of his regiment, and subsequently Instructor of Musketry to the 10th Dépôt Battalion, Captain Instructor on the Staff at Hythe, and D. A. Adjutant and Quartermaster-General at Cork from June, 1872, until September, 1877, when he proceeded to join his regiment in the Transvaal. He served through the campaign against Sekukuni, and subsequently joined Wood's "fighting column" before it crossed the Blood River. He was then appointed Corps Commandant of the two battalions of "Wood's Irregulars," and Oham's warriors were also placed under his command. The corps was engaged in many dangerous expeditions with the Irregular Cavalry, under Colonel Buller, and that distinguished soldier reported in the strongest terms on the gallant conduct of its Commandant.

In the retreat from the Zlobane Mountain Major Leet's horse was shot under him, and his led horse was also killed. He then mounted a pack-horse, and in descending the mountain with two other officers became separated from the rest of the force, and the Zulus, seeing this, rushed after them. The mountain was very steep and rocky, with occasional precipices; and the little party suddenly found themselves over one of these, with no chance of escape, except by trying back in the direction of their pursuers. This course they promptly adopted; but by the time they cleared the side of the precipice the Zulus were almost on them, firing and throwing their assegais. One of the three, Lieutenant Duncombe, was here struck down, and another, Lieutenant Smith, of the Frontier Light Horse, was so exhausted that he was unable to go on, and would inevitably have been assegaied had not Major Leet waited for him, and, making him hold on by the pack-saddle of his horse, thus helped him along; but in a short time, finding himself incapable of further effort, he generously told Major Leet to save himself as he could go no further. Then, his gallant comrade, with the noble self-sacrifice of a true British soldier, refused to desert him, and, by a great effort, succeeded in dragging him up behind him, though there were no stirrups to the pack-saddle, and Lieutenant Smith was almost helpless from exhaustion. The horse was also much exhausted; but the ground was now less difficult, and at last they succeeded in escaping from the bullets and assegais of their pursuers. For this noble act Major Leet has been awarded the Cross of Valour by the Queen.

Next day, in the battle of Kambula, he commanded the fort which, with wise forethought, had been constructed by Sir Evelyn Wood in front of the position, and which contributed so materially to the overthrow of the King's army. Soon after this battle Major Leet was obliged, on account of a severe injury to his knee which he suffered in the retreat from Zlobane, to resign the command of "Wood's Irregulars" and retire from active service, and ultimately it became necessary to invalid him to England.

The Victoria Cross has also been conferred upon those mentioned below:—



Surgeon-Major James Henry Reynolds, Army Medical Department, for the conspicuous bravery during the attack at Rorke's Drift, on Jan. 22 and 23, 1879, which he exhibited in his constant attention to the wounded under fire, and by his voluntarily conveying ammunition from the store to the defenders of the hospital, whereby he exposed himself to a cross fire from the enemy both in going and returning.

Lieutenant Edward S. Browne, first battalion 24th Regiment, for his gallant conduct, on March 29, 1879, when the mounted infantry were being driven in by the enemy at Inhlobane, in galloping back and twice assisting on his horse (under heavy fire and within a few yards of the enemy) one of the mounted men, who must otherwise have fallen into the enemy's hands.

Private Wassall, 80th Regiment, for his gallant conduct in having, at the imminent risk of his own life, saved that of Private Westwood, of the same regiment. On Jan. 22, 1879, when the camp at Isandhlwana was taken by the enemy, Private Wassall retreated towards the Buffalo River, in which he saw a comrade struggling and apparently drowning. He rode to the bank, dismounted, leaving his horse on the Zulu side, rescued the man from the stream, and again mounted his horse, dragging Private Westwood across the river under a heavy shower of bullets.

THE STRATFORD MARTYRS' MEMORIAL.

An Illustration is here given of the Monument recently erected in front of St. John's Church, Stratford-le-Bow. Having ascertained from historical records that the largest number of Protestants ever burnt together for their religion in this country had occurred in the neighbourhood of Stratford, it came to be felt a duty both to protect the ashes of the dead and to erect over them a Memorial Tomb as a public tribute to their faith and fortitude. The martyrs were for the most part natives of Essex, and all of them belonged to the laity. The result of the efforts of the committee is, that a handsome and substantial Monument has been placed in front of the Stratford Church, engraved on which are the names of the sufferers and also the principal points for which they braved death. There are six sides to the Monument, which is supported by eighteen columns, the whole structure, 65 feet in height, having its spire surmounted by a martyr's crown. The sculpture in the middle of the first panel is a copy of the plate in Foxe's "Martyrology," describing the burning of the thirteen martyrs at Stratford—those thirteen martyrs who were "swept together by Bonner" and burnt as a terror to London and Essex. According to the authorities quoted, they were brought early on Saturday morning, June 27, 1556, in three carts, from London to Stratford, where, local tradition says, they were burnt in the Broadway, on the village green, now St. John's Churchyard. When offered their lives if they would recant, they all refused. Having embraced one another and prayed earnestly to the Lord the men were fastened to three stakes, the women being left untied in the midst, "and so were all burned together in one fire." The chief inscription on tablet No. 1 runs as follows:—"To the glory of God in His suffering Saints. This Monument is erected to perpetuate the principles of the Reformation, and to commemorate the death of eighteen Protestant Martyrs, burned in this neighbourhood for the pure faith of Jesus Christ." Then, following the bas-relief from Foxe, is the inscription—"Erected A.D. 1879 by public subscription, under the direction of the committee. President, the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G.; treasurer, Rev. W. J. Bolton, Vicar; hon. secretary, J. W. Brooks, Esq.; J. T. Newman, architect. Erected by J. Johnson and Co., Terra Cotta Works, Ditching, Sussex." The other tablets record the names, ages, and social standing, as well as the date of their execution, of the martyrs. They are as follows:—Patrick Packingham; Stephen Harwood, "a brewer, associated with Thomas Fust, of Ware;" Elizabeth Warne, "widow and gentlewoman, who was taken at a prayer meeting, and burnt to death at Stratford-le-Bow, Middlesex, A.D. Aug. 23, 1555, for denying the corporeal presence of Christ's body and blood in the Sacrament. Her husband suffered death at Smithfield; as also her daughter Joan; and her son was either burnt or died in prison; a whole family of Martyrs;" Hugh Laverock, a lame man, and John Apprice, a blind man, "who were burnt to death at one stake in this town, A.D. May 15, 1556. When in the flames one said to the other, 'Hold on, John, it won't be for long, remember the text.'" The Rev. Thomas Rose, Chaplain to the Earl of Essex, and Vicar of West Ham, who, though not a martyr, was tortured and exiled for preaching against auricular confession, transubstantiation, purgatory, and images. Lastly, on tablet six, are engraven the following names:—Henry Adlington, Lawrence Parnham, Henry Wye, William Hallywell, Thomas Bowyer, George Searles, Edmund Hurst, Lyon Cawch, Ralph Jackson, John Derifall, John Routh, Elizabeth Pepper, and Agnes George. On Saturday, June 27, 1556, these eleven men and two women were brought pinioned, from Newgate, and suffered death here in the presence of 20,000 people, for their firm adherence to the Word of God. "They were all burned in one fire, with such love to each other, and constancy in our Saviour Christ, that it made all the lookers on to marvel."

THE VOLUNTEERS.

The Volunteer Service Gazette, remarking on the new rule by which all volunteers will in future have to resign on attaining the age of fifty years, says:—"This rule does not, of course, apply to officers who are not 'volunteers,' and who need not retire before the age of sixty. Honorary members who have been 'efficient' at least eight times, and who are willing to re-enrol should occasion require, are to be called 'Reserve Men.' We may, we suppose, presume that men will not be retained on the reserve list after the age of fifty; but there is no distinct statement to that effect.

The members of the 1st Surrey completed their annual regimental meeting at Wimbledon on Saturday last. The prize-list was of the usual good dimensions, and in several cases the contests were of a close and exciting character. The "Pollock" Challenge Cup, the gift of the late Field Marshal Sir George Pollock, Hon. Colonel of the corps, for marksmen or first-class shots, was won by Private Turner; the "Bread-street Ward" Challenge Trophy, silver medal, by Sergeant Lewin; the "Sturdy" Challenge Cup, for marksmen or first-class shots, silver medal, by Private Turner; the "Macdonald Lodge" Challenge Cup, with £5 5s. for the best score, by Corporal Foster. Wimbledon Series: £5, Private W. Spon; £4, Private Sparks; £3 each, Private Marshall, Corporal White, and Private Hancock; £2 10s. each, Private Turner, Armourer-Sergeant Watkin, Lieutenant Neville, and Private Hale; £2 each, Private Lock, Private Gunston, Private Doggett, Colour-Sergeant Lewin, and Corporal Foster; £1 10s. each, Sergeant Cranch, Corporal Messenger, Private Knapp, and Corporal Smith; £1 each, Private Selby, Private Hiscox, Sergeant Branston, Private C. Sandell, Corporal McGowran, and Corporal Macklin. Honorary Members' prizes: Mr. Blackford, Dr. Milne, Mr. Poulter, Mr. Cook, and Mr. Palmer. Recruits' prizes: Privates G. M. White, Nicholes, R. J. Steele, Byrne, W. A. Ewan, and Gray. Two prizes for the highest aggregate scores of the meeting were taken by Colour-Sergeant Lewin and Corporal White. The volley-firing and "Running" prizes were not concluded in consequence of the weather.

A match was fired last Saturday, at the Tottenham ranges, between teams of ten men a side of the 33rd Middlesex and 1st Essex. The Middlesex team won by 28 points.

The St. George's mustered at Euston-square station last Saturday afternoon and proceeded to Pinner by special train, where they were entertained at the residence of Major Bird. The afternoon was spent in sports of various descriptions.

The annual prize-meeting of the 13th Middlesex was held at the Park range, Tottenham, last Saturday, when the Challenge Vase, value 60 guineas, was won by Private Holmes.

At Rainham, on Thursday week, the H company of the London Brigade fired for their challenge cup at Queen's ranges, the result being that Private H. Smith won, beating Private Rothon on a tie by the highest score at the longest range. At the same time the P company held their prize-meeting under similar conditions, when Private Hamerton was fortunate enough to become the final winner (three years in succession) of the challenge cup and £5 5s. The other prize-takers were Lieutenant Towse, Private W. S. Smith, Colour-Sergeant Matthams, Private E. Gower, Private Tolhurst, Private Goldby, Sergeant Bryant, and Private Foster.

At the weekly meeting of the South London Rifle Club at Nunhead, the chief scorers in the Snider competition, under usual conditions, were Private C. Brown, 19th Surrey Lieutenant Baker, 33rd Middlesex; Private Hart, Queen's Westminster; Private Hay, Artists'; and Captain Sweeting, 23rd Surrey. The range prize-winners were Private C. Brown, 19th Surrey; Private Boutcher, Artists'; Lieutenant A. B. Baker, 33rd Middlesex; and Lieutenant Lovibond, 13th Kent

At Wormwood-scrubbs on Monday the Burgesses of Westminster Challenge Cup, value £50, the Broadwood Challenge Cup, value £50, and the Scrubbs Challenge Shield, value 100 guineas, were competed for by the Queen's Westminster. The Burgesses Cup was contested in a thick mist, which at 500 and 600 yards almost obscured the targets. The first contest was for the Broadwood Cup, presented by the firm of Broadwood and Sons, which contributes a large company to the strength of the regiment. The conditions were eight men per company of each which had forty of all ranks on parade at the annual inspection, each individual competitor being efficient. Seven shots at 200, 500, and 600 yards, Wimbledon targets. The following was the result:—C company, 541; I company, 538; F company, 512; B company, 502; K company, 446; A company, 381. C company were, therefore, declared the winners, and take besides a money prize. The shooting for the Burgesses of Westminster Challenge Cup followed at the same ranges, each company entering with squads of not more than five men. The following are the results:—I company, 381; C company, 375; H company, 339; B company, 320; F company, 300; K company, 297; M company, 281; A company, 273. The firing for this cup did not close till half-past six, and the fog and darkness necessitated a postponement of the contest for the shield.

The third annual match between teams of twenty each, representing the Volunteers of Devon and Somerset, was shot at the Dunball Range, Bridgwater, on Tuesday. Although there was a variable breeze blowing, the Devonshire twenty averaged nearly 78 points per man, and finished the match 95 points ahead of the Somerset twenty.

The annual prize-meeting of the 34th Staffordshire took place at the Tame Valley range last week. The aggregate prizes were won by Private J. Gutteridge, Sergeant W. Jones, Private T. Edwards, Colour-Sergeant J. Gutteridge, Corporal C. Pratley, Sergeant O. Hampson, Private T. Chapman, Private J. Stackhouse, Private E. Haddock, Bugler-Major Melbury, and Corporal W. Silk.

One of the 80-ton guns constructed for the Inflexible was recently tried at Woolwich, with a charge of 445 lb. of powder and a projectile weighing over 1760 lb., when the velocity at the muzzle was ascertained to be 1657 ft. per second. The gun is stated to be able to pierce a vessel coated with thirty-two inches of iron. This result has been attained after the enlargement of the gun, ordered in consequence of the performance of the German gun designed by Herr Krupp to surpass the Woolwich ordnance, and the British gun is now alleged to be superior to its German rival.

FINE ARTS.

EIGHTEENTH CENTENARY FESTIVAL AT POMPEII.

On the 25th inst. a large gathering of archæologists are to celebrate at Pompeii the eighteenth centenary of the destruction of the city. The great eruption of Vesuvius which buried Pompeii actually took place on Aug. 24, A.D 79, but the intense heat of August in Italy rendered it advisable to postpone the festival till this month. Several fresh excavations are to be made in the presence of the savants and visitors present. We may remind the reader that nearly two fifths of the area of the ancient city have yet to be exhumed. Under the present dynasty the excavations have been carried on with some activity, and the Parliament has granted an annual sum of 60,000 lire to be devoted to them. The works are under the direction of the able and indefatigable archæologist, Cavaliere G. Fiorelli, who has organised an admirable system—the object of which being to preserve the buildings and objects found in situ as far as possible, or as may appear reasonable, rather than to merely dig out the objects of value for the local museum or that of Naples. With the best intentions, however, it is found impracticable to preserve the wall-paintings or even the floor or other mosaics after any lengthened exposure to the atmosphere. Little pent-houses or sheets of plate-glass are inserted in the walls over many of the principal paintings to protect them from rain, and in some instances a complete roofing is provided, yet the pictures gradually fade, and, to save any trace of those worth preserving, it becomes necessary in a few years to detach them from the walls and transfer them to the Naples Museum. To detach the paintings from the walls an ingenious method is employed analogous to that adopted in transferring frescoes to canvas. The mosaics are scarcely more long lived. So soon as they are exposed to the air vegetable germs lodge in the interstices of the cement, and these, swelling, rend or blister large or small portions, which, becoming detached from their bed, soon crumble into the constituent tesseræ, and are thus scattered and lost, or smuggled away by pilfering visitors, despite the general watchfulness of the guides, custodi, and Signor Fiorelli's staff. By-the-way, the guides are a remarkably civil and highly respectable body of men. For obvious reasons, they are not allowed to receive any gratuity from visitors, and, so far as came within the writer's knowledge during a stay of six weeks last year at Pompeii, they are incorruptible. A guide is provided for each visitor or party of visitors, and the only way in which that visitor or those visitors can testify to the civilities and attentions uniformly received is to purchase some of the photographs of Pompeii which are on sale, the profits on the sales going to the guides. Similar regulations might be made with advantage at many show-places in England. It is but fair that the intelligent, conservative spirit manifested by the Government at Pompeii and many other parts of Italy should be set against the cases of Vandalism, real or apparent, lately cited by "Ouida" and others. Nor must we forget that, whatever the mistakes made by the Government and the municipalities in the rage for "modern improvements," an incalculable amount of mischief was previously perpetrated by the ignorant priests—witness the wreck of the interior of Sta Maria Novella at Florence.

It is hardly to be expected that any great discovery of architectural interest or of artistic or other treasures will be made during the excavations to be undertaken on Thursday next; nor, indeed, from the future examination of the still buried portion of the city. The Forum with all its surrounding temples and civic edifices has long been laid bare; so have the great and small Theatres and Gladiators' Barracks, two great and one small bathing establishments, the great Amphitheatre, and what was doubtless the principal "Street of Tombs." It is probable also that the uncovered streets near the Forum, particularly those north of the Strada della Fortuna, contain the houses and villas of the richest citizens. The houses now being excavated to the north of the Strada Stabiana are generally of smaller area than those just mentioned westward. Pompeii itself was but a third or fourth rate and, we suspect, rather a vulgar, so to say, cockney "watering-place," not more important than our Margate, and not to be compared to the fashionable and aristocratic resorts about Baiæ and Pozzuoli, or the neighbouring buried city, Herculaneum. This is proved as regards Herculaneum by the superior character of the bronzes, sculptures, and other works of art recovered therefrom, although the excavations there have been very limited, owing to the great depth it is necessary to descend, and other difficulties. The largest and finest bronzes of antiquity are those found at Herculaneum, now in the Museo Nazionale, Naples.

If, however, the search yet to be made at Pompeii should yield no great wealth of artistic objects, we may still hope that some literary treasures may be brought to light—some library like that discovered so long ago as 1752 in the villa at Herculaneum. The famous collection of papyri found in that villa (now in the National Museum, Naples) was entirely charred by the heat, each little roll of manuscript exactly resembling a stick of charcoal. Many years passed before the means were discovered of unrolling and deciphering the manuscripts; and the ingenious machinery now employed to unrol the thin and crumbling laminæ is but slow in its operation. Out of a total of 1750 papyri only about 500 have been successfully deciphered, and many years must elapse before the whole will have been operated upon. Already, however, the results obtained are extremely interesting. The finding of this library was one of the earliest discoveries made at Herculaneum; and it is very singular that no library, public or private, has hitherto been turned up at Pompeii—that nothing has been found to throw light on the literary culture or intellectual occupations of its inhabitants. The only manuscript fragment discovered is a piece of papyrus impressed on a portion of volcanic ashes, which was transferred to the Naples Museum a few years back; and this appears only to be part of a legal document relative to a transfer of property. The inscriptions that have been met with are exclusively of a dedicatory nature; and except a few lines from Ovid scratched on the walls of the Basilica, and a verse of the Æneid in a house in the street of Stabiæ, no trace of ancient literature has been found. As, however, it is difficult to believe that so large a city as Pompeii was altogether destitute of literary collections, it is reasonable to hope that some great library may yet be unearthed, and with it some of the long-lost works of the classic authors.

Within the precincts of the ancient city a modest building has been constructed, which contains a library comprising (or intended to comprise) all books, reports, pamphlets, maps, plans, &c., relating to Pompeii, published in the various European languages, together with a selection of classic authors, and of works on general classic archæology—all, in short, that relates to Pompeii directly, and much that elucidates the life of its inhabitants indirectly. The most important recent work illustrative of the remains of Pompeii is the splendid series of chromolithographs issued by Richter and Co., of Naples, the publication of which is now near completion. Of the works on Pompeii in the local Biblioteca by far the largest proportion are by German authors; and the English student can hardly fail to observe, with some sense of national humiliation, how largely since the days of Gell and Hamilton, Stuart and Hope, the initiative, as regards classical archæology and art, has passed from this country, and how much more learning and patient research is brought to the subject in Germany. While the present writer was at the neighbouring Albergo del Sole, or Hotel du Soleil—where "Messieurs les Artistes" can have a clean bed (stuffed with dry maize husks) and board, and live well, too (the landlady having been a French cook), for 4½ lire a day, vin et tout compris—nearly all the visitors were German students, who "did" their Pompeii after a very different fashion from your Cook's tourist. Among the students, also, were two young Russian architects, who were sent and maintained there by their Government upon a much more liberal allowance than our wealthy Royal Academy affords to its travelling students.

In conclusion, we should recommend the ascent of Vesuvius from Pompeii, in preference to the side from Resina, as more picturesque, though longer, and presenting, perhaps, a rather steeper acclivity at the cone. The ride—it should be before dawn—to the foot of the cone is not fatiguing; and the return through the vineyards that yield the lagrime Christi is most enjoyable. Ladies, we may add, can stay at the hotel we have named, with the utmost propriety, and they may make this ascent with as much comfort as from the other side, a horse or ass, guides, and portantini (or chairmen) being procurable by giving a day's notice.

SCIENCE AND ART AT SOUTH KENSINGTON.

Great interest will be felt in the plans and projects which are disclosed by the sixth report of the Commissioners for the Exhibition of 1851. In this document it is stated that her Majesty's Government have taken steps to utilise the site of the Exhibition of 1862, which the Commissioners sold at less than half its value, on condition that it should be permanently devoted to science and art. They give an account of the series of annual international exhibitions, and show that this experiment was carried out at a comparatively small cost; they narrate their transactions with the Royal Horticultural Society, and show that the lease of the gardens terminated at the end of last year; and they give an account of the completion of the Royal Albert Hall, of the assistance which they rendered to it, and of the means by which provision has been made for its permanent maintenance.

Their proposals for the future are, firstly, to erect, with the concurrence of the Government, a building to be used for purposes of scientific and technical instruction, to contain laboratories for study and research, a collection of scientific instruments, and a library of works on science, and to transfer it to the Government on the condition that it shall be used for those purposes; secondly, to place the Government in possession, on very favourable terms, of their permanent galleries; thirdly, to lease to the Government, free of rent, the greater portion of the present Horticultural Gardens as a place of recreation for the public; and, finally, to establish a number of scholarships for the purpose of aiding the development of scientific culture and technical training in the manufacturing districts of the country.

The commissioners add that the foresight and wise counsels of the Prince Consort, their first president, may be chiefly attributed the improvement in the artistic cultivation of the present generation, as compared with those which preceded the Exhibition of 1851. The provision now made by the Government for instruction in art may fairly be considered to be commensurate with the wants of the country. For science, however, there is no adequate provision, and they believe it to be their duty to promote its study and diffusion, in a manner calculated to benefit all parts of the country. It is with this object that they have determined to found science scholarships, and have made the proposal to the Government to establish on their estate institutions calculated to promote those studies in science which are essential to the progress of industry. Amid the growing competition of the world, England can only expect to maintain her high position among manufacturing nations by a thorough training of the people in science and art.

We are glad to learn that the School of Art for Ladies, at 6, William-street, Knightsbridge, established by Mrs. E. M. Ward, the well-known artist, widow of the late Royal Academician, has been in very successful operation during the summer, and reopened on Monday last for the winter season. The school is visited by members of the Royal Academy, and has received the patronage of nearly all the Royal family.

Admiral Chaloner has employed men to remove the rubbish from the site of Guisborough Abbey—only the beautiful decorated east end having been hitherto visible. The dimensions of the church, and the positions of the walls, pillars, &c., are now shown so that the plan of the minster is traceable, as well as that of some of its dependent buildings. A portion of the end of the tomb of the founder (erected long after his time) has been recovered from Hardwicke, whither it had been removed.

A statue of Bruce was unveiled last Saturday at Lochmaben, his birthplace, by Miss Alice Hope Johnstone, sister of Mr. Hope Johnstone, M.P. for Dumfriesshire. The statue, which is by Mr. John Hutchison, R.S.A., stands 8 ft. high, and represents the King as presiding over the Great Convention of Estates of Scotland, held at Arbroath, 1320.

The Sotheron-Estcourt Memorial was unveiled by Earl Nelson in Devizes on Tuesday, the occasion being celebrated by a general holiday.

A picture-gallery and a museum, which have been added to the Wedgwood Institute at Burslem, were opened on the 11th inst., when an address was given by Mr. Colvin, Slade Professor at Cambridge University.

The picture by Mr. Ernest Crofts, "The Evening of the Battle of Waterloo," which was in the Royal Academy Exhibition this year, has been bought by the Liverpool Corporation for the Walker Art Gallery for 600 guineas.

The recent proposal to place a memorial bust of the late Earl Russell in the City Liberal Club has been warmly taken up by the members; the list being headed, among others, by Earls Granville, Rosebery, and Northbrook; the Duke of Westminster, the Marquis of Hartington, Lord Wolverton, Baron Alfred de Rothschild, and the Right Hon. G. J. Goschen, M.P. The bust will be reproduced from the model now on view in the reading-room, which was executed from life by Mr. C. B. Birch some years ago, being the last bust for which his Lordship sat.

The Royal Commissioners for the Exhibition of 1851 have placed an excellent room in the Royal Albert Hall at the disposal of the National School of Art Wood-Carving, and the Drapers' Company have given a further grant, with which the committee are enabled to provide for the instruction of twelve free students.

An historical picture was presented on Tuesday afternoon to the borough of Newport by Mr. Vivian Webber, who has just retired from the candidature of the county constituency of the Isle of Wight. The picture, which was painted by Mr. Arthur Forbes, measures 8 ft. by 5 ft., and represents the Royal Charles man-of-war arriving in Cowes Roads with the last charter granted to the borough, in 1683. Mr. Webber had previously presented the town with four pictures as a nucleus of an art-gallery.

The Earl of Glasgow, Sir Coutts-Lindsay, Bart., of the Grosvenor Gallery, with Mr. Oswald, of Deennikier, visited Kirkcaldy Fine-Art Exhibition on Tuesday. Sir Coutts, who is the president of the association this year, said the collection was one of which any provincial town might well feel proud. The exhibition is well patronised.

The proposal of opening a subscription in Paris to erect a memorial to "Cham" which was made by M. Dalloz has not been acted upon, owing to the opposition of the Countess de Noë, his wife, who has written that such a step would be in direct antagonism to the wishes of the deceased.

A monument is to be erected in Brussels in honour of the French soldiers who died in 1870 and 1871 on Belgian soil in the Franco-German war. The project has been started by the Cercle Français of Brussels, who are receiving subscriptions.

Measures are at length being taken to secure the Louvre from fire. Under the floors and along the walls of the galleries pipes have been placed to convey water from a reservoir in the building and distribute it under considerable pressure.

A grand historical picture by Paul Delaroche, representing the conquerors of the Bastille carrying its keys to the Hôtel de Ville, is to be placed in the new Hôtel de Ville, Paris, when the building is finished. The picture has always belonged to the city, but has never yet been suitably exhibited.

Rosa Bonheur has presented to the Spanish Government a lifesize painting of a lion, which is to be placed in the Madrid Gallery, despite the rule prohibiting the exhibition of the works of living artists.

The Borghese Gallery, at Rome, is about to be enlarged by the addition of new rooms on the first floor of the palace. Into these new rooms many works will be removed from other apartments, where they have been injured by damp.

The French painter Théodore Valerie died on Sunday last, aged sixty. He is best known by sketches made in the Turkish campaign of 1854.

M. Louis Dorcière, the Swiss sculptor, died recently at Geneva, at the age of seventy-four.

An international exhibition is to be held in Berlin in 1885.

WORK AND WAGES.

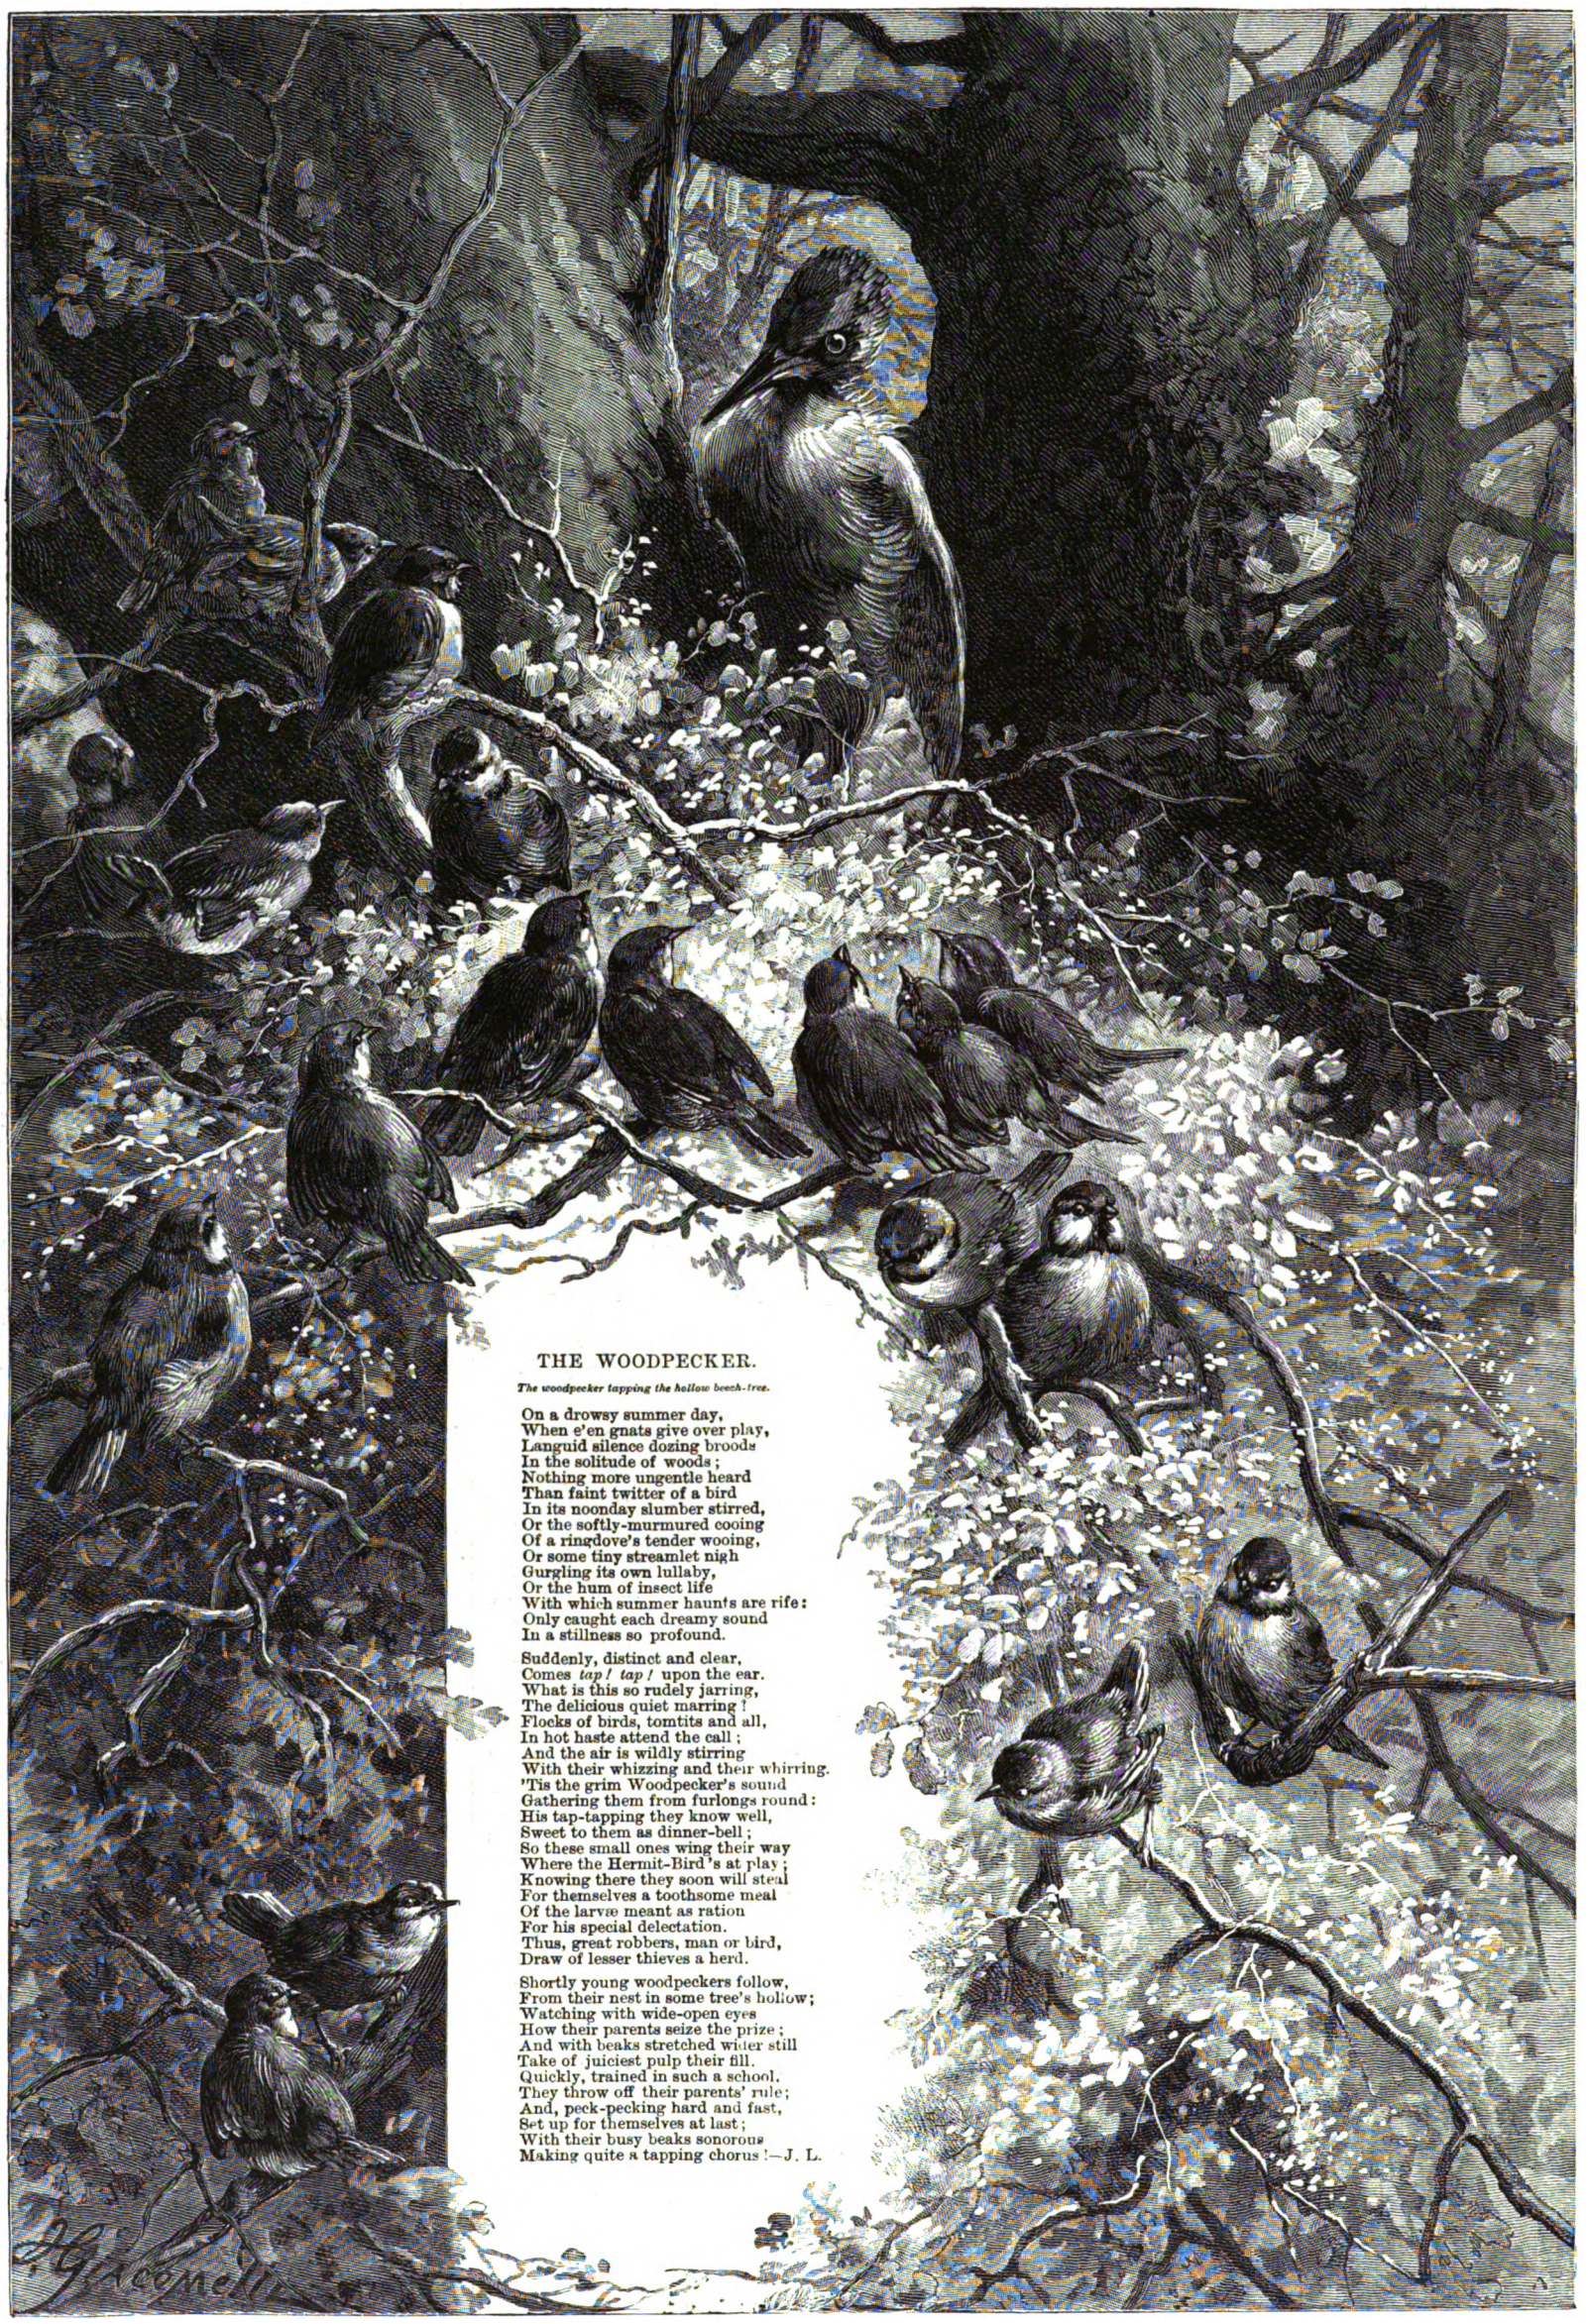
About 115 delegates, representing over seventy trades union organisations, were present on Monday at the opening of the twelfth annual congress, held in accordance with the resolution adopted last year at Bristol, in the Odd Fellows' Hall, Edinburgh. The chair was occupied by Mr. J D. Prior, chairman of the Parliamentary committee, who, in a brief opening address, referred to some of the questions which would be considered; and Mr. Broadhurst having read the Parliamentary committee's annual report, the congress adjourned. On Tuesday the president, Mr. Gibson, gave the opening address, in which he observed that the employers during the year had used to the full the opportunities afforded for reducing wages, that in many cases they had increased the hours of work, and that they had forgotten their old love for arbitration. He also commented on the Government's foreign policy, and on the withdrawal of the money from industrial pursuits, as the causes of trade depression. It was resolved that the Summary Jurisdiction Act of last Session was a satisfactory measure of reform as far as it went, but that the Government be urged to complete the work by making a codification of offences under summary jurisdiction, as had been done with indictable offences, and that similar reforms were also required for Scotland.

The committee appointed by the War Office to inquire whether the wages given to women employed in the Royal Army Clothing Factory were fair in comparison with those paid by the trade, and whether the complaints made by certain of the operatives as to harsh treatment on discharge had any foundation in fact, have made their report. The committee express regret that it should have been found necessary to discharge any of the indoor hands; and a belief that much of the excitement and dissatisfaction caused by the stoppage of the factory might have been avoided if by some less formal method of procedure than that of discharge and re-engagement the operatives could have learned the terms and conditions of their future employment.

The operatives employed by Messrs. Crewdson, Cross, and Co., Limited, at Bolton and Moses Gate, were on Monday informed that the manager was firm in his determination to enforce a reduction of 10 per cent. A motion in favour of returning to work at the reduction was rejected, a large proportion of the female workers voting against it.

At a mass meeting of the North Staffordshire ironworkers, held at Tunstall on Monday—at which Mr. Capper, Organising Secretary of the Arbitration Board, was present—a resolution was passed that the time had now arrived when the ironworkers of South Staffordshire and East Worcestershire connected with the Board of Arbitration should at once give the requisite notice for a reconsideration of the wages question, with a view of obtaining an advance. It was explained that many local firms were full of orders.

Following up the resolutions of the Scotch ironmasters last week, twelve of the thirty-six furnaces were blown out on Monday in the Coatbridge district, rendering 2000 men idle; and eighteen furnaces were blown out in other parts of Scotland. Thirteen thousand tons of coal extra are thus thrown weekly into the market.



Mr. Macdonald, M.P., addressing a meeting of miners' delegates of Scotland in Glasgow on Tuesday, advised the miners to restrict their work by 10 cwt. daily, to checkmate the ironmasters for having blown out a third of their furnaces. This would, he said, withdraw more coal from the market than the ironmasters could throw in. A recommendation to that effect was made by the meeting.

The master cotton spinners of Oldham have decided upon reducing the wages of the operative spinners. They have also decided to recommend the adoption of short time.

A public meeting was held in the Townhall, Middlesbrough, on Tuesday evening, in aid of the sufferers by the prevailing distress. The Mayor presided. Subscriptions amounting to nearly £300 were announced. A committee was appointed to take steps for the immediate relief of the distress.

The first brick of the College for Women, to be erected at a cost of £257,000, by Mr. Thomas Holloway, at Mount Lee, Egham, Surrey, was laid yesterday week by Mr. George Martin, brother-in-law of the founder. The building, which will be in the French style of the time of Francis I., is to be constructed of red brick, with Portland stone dressings. It will have four points; the extreme length by north and south will be 96 ft. The time for completing the work allowed by the contract is four years.

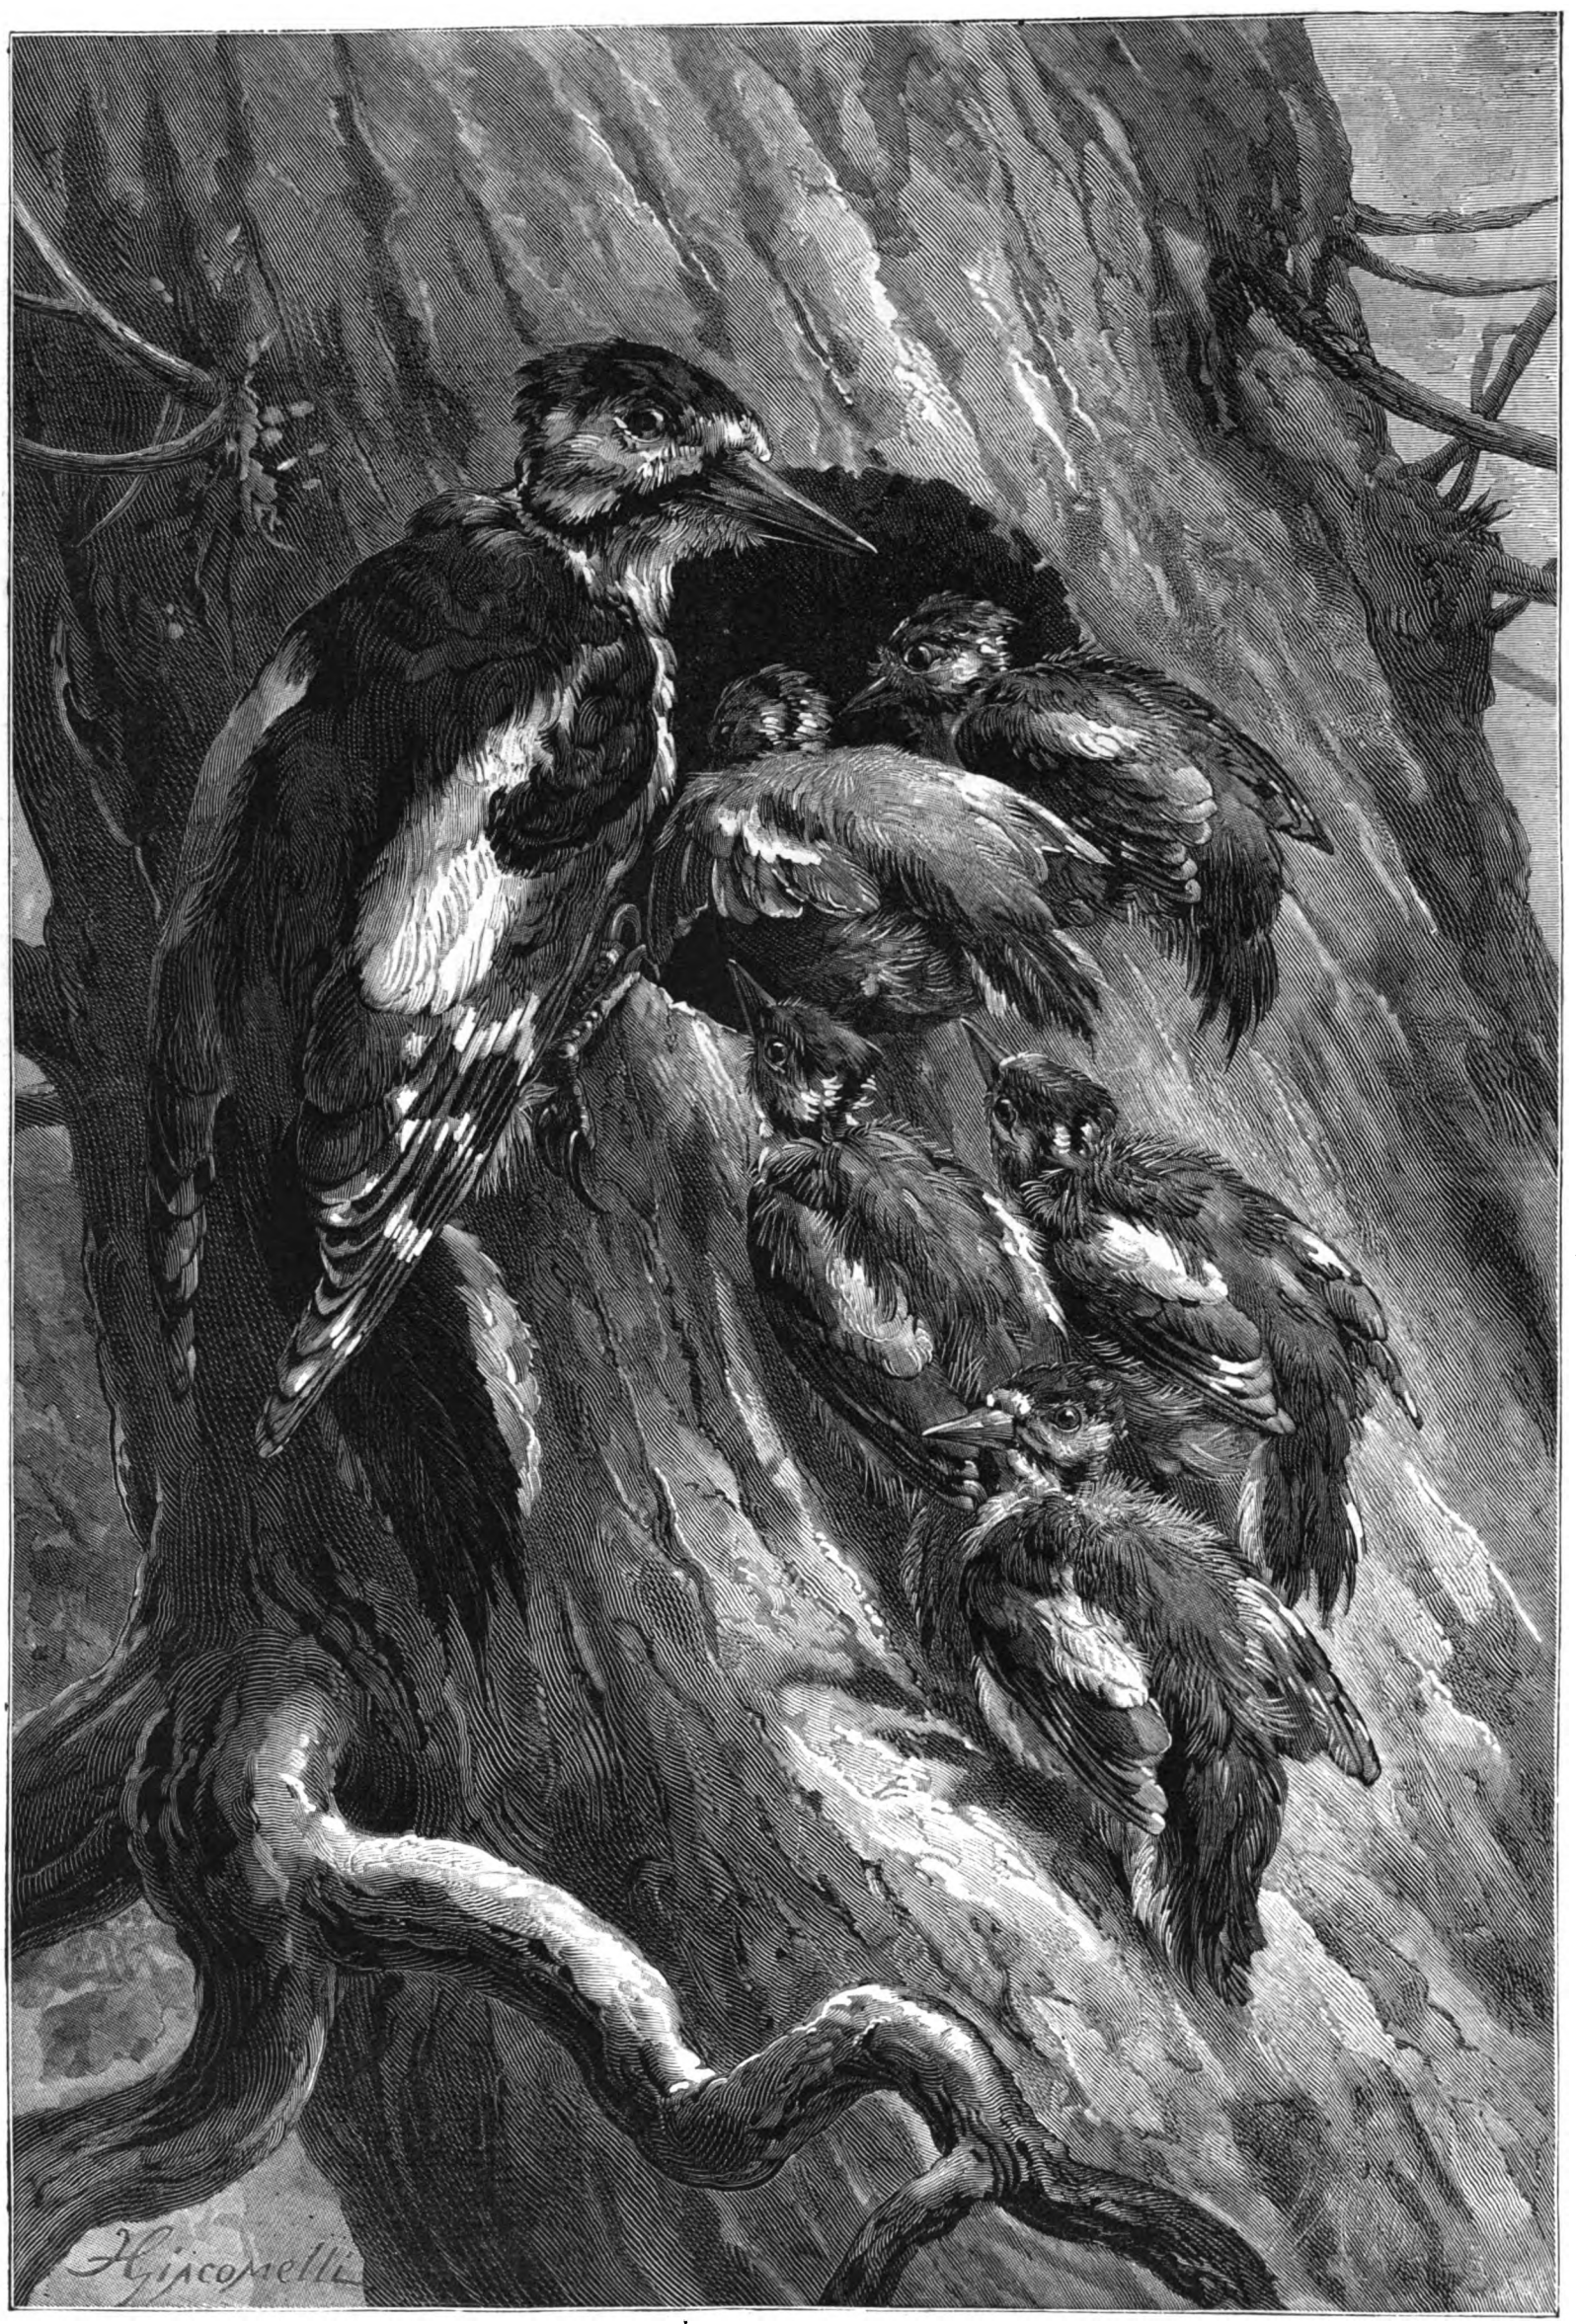
THE WOODPECKER.

The woodpecker tapping the hollow beech-tree.

On a drowsy summer day,
When e'en gnats give over play,
Languid silence dozing broods
In the solitude of woods;
Nothing more ungentle heard
Than faint twitter of a bird
In its noonday slumber stirred,
Or the softly-murmured cooing
Of a ringdove's tender wooing,
Or some tiny streamlet nigh
Gurgling its own lullaby,
Or the hum of insect life
With which summer haunts are rife:
Only caught each dreamy sound
In a stillness so profound.



Suddenly, distinct and clear,
Comes tap! tap! upon the ear.
What is this so rudely jarring,
The delicious quiet marring?
Flocks of birds, tomtits and all,
In hot haste attend the call;
And the air is wildly stirring
With their whizzing and their whirring.
'Tis the grim Woodpecker's sound
Gathering them from furlongs round:
His tap-tapping they know well,
Sweet to them as dinner-bell;
So these small ones wing their way
Where the Hermit-Bird's at play;
Knowing there they soon will steal
For themselves a toothsome meal
Of the larvæ meant as ration
For his special delectation.
Thus, great robbers, man or bird,
Draw of lesser thieves a herd.

Shortly young woodpeckers follow,
From their nest in some tree's hollow;
Watching with wide-open eyes
How their parents seize the prize;
And with beaks stretched wider still
Take of juiciest pulp their fill.
Quickly, trained in such a school,
They throw off their parents' rule;
And, peck-pecking hard and fast,
Set up for themselves at last;
With their busy beaks sonorous
Making quite a tapping chorus!—J. L.

FLOCKS OF BIRDS, TOMTITS AND ALL,
IN HOT HASTE ATTEND THE CALL;

AND THE AIR IS WILDLY STIRRING
WITH THEIR WHIZZING AND THEIR WHIRRING.

The Extra Supplement.

"FRESH LAVENDER."

Pleasant as are the sights and sounds of the country, its scents are perhaps even more delightful. At least this is so to a Londoner, if his olfactory nerves are not blunted or wholly destroyed by the sooty stench vomitted eternally from a million chimneys; by the sulphurous and diabolical fumes of gas, by the musty, fusty, smell of ancient bricks-and-mortar, and the thousand other bad odours which offend the nostrils in this huge laboratory of all impurities. Well we remember visiting in some old-fashioned country houses, where every apartment seemed redolent with freshest fragrance. If you went into the parlour a lovely nosegay greeted you in 'silence eloquent," and quaint jars full of a pot-pourri of rose-leaves, cloves, and orris-root, yielded a perfume sweet as—

Sabean odours from the spicy shore
Of Araby the Blest;

while through the open door stole fresher perfume from the trim parterre or the gay blooms of the conservatory. If you went into your bed-chamber still flowers ministered to your senses, and if, unseen, like guardian angels, you found every cupboard or drawer fragrant with their presence or recollection, and the breath of jasmine, eglantine, or climbing rose, sweet as the sigh of Love, creeping through the casement. In every such house the still-room was a receptacle for aromatic herbs or leaves from which were distilled essences, held in watery suspension, of the queenly rose, the modest lavender, the salutary elder-flower and what not. Some such house had the artist—Mr. C. E. Perugini—in view, we wager, when he painted this pretty picture, of a girl placing fresh lavender in a wardrobe, which we have engraved from the late Exhibition of the Royal Academy. And to realise more fully the pleasant associations of such a place he has given her the mob-cap, and flowered chintz gown of the last century. Is she still-room maid or daughter of the house? We cannot say. The costume of that time is so charming, that a handsome peasant girl may have looked as well almost as a grande dame of the present day—for indeed does not the latter now try to imitate the former? On the other hand, the young ladies of that good old time were trained to perform little housewifely services, to which their great-granddaughters would hardly stoop. But, be she who she may, to freight so sweet a damsel with sweet lavender—by your leave, Mr. Perugini, it is always called "sweet" lavender, is verily adding "sweets to the sweet."

Most people like lavender, "sweet blooming lavender;" and we know that old Isaac Walton loved it, for does he not take his friend Venator to an honest ale-house, where was a "cleanly room and lavender in the windows;" and do we not read why that friend was willing to stay the night there with them, "for the linen looks white and smells of lavender, and I long to lie in a pair of sheets that smells so;" and why Coridon, too, was pleased with the place—"for here are fresh sheets that smell of lavender?" Truly, has lavender had many advocates, and it still is valued for its charming scent. Few plants, indeed, have a sweeter scent than lavender; but there is one kind of it, the "sea-lavender," which, notwithstanding its similarity of appearance to the garden lavender, is wholly without it. In June we always look for "the lavender-girls," who, with their musical cry, come selling; but this time they have missed their season, for, though there was some lavender last month in Covent-garden—from Hitchin, in Hertfordshire, and from Henley-on-Thames, where it blossoms very early—it is only now that it is offered in the streets, the growth being late in Kent and Surrey, and the crop almost a failure. The usual time for "the cutting" is when July comes in, and in August they collect it for distillery purposes; the test for each being its colour.

Time was when townsfolk always went to Mitcham Fair—the three days pleasure fair upon the green—to wander by the church into "the fields" to see "the cutting," that fair being held in August; but now, about ten acres only of that sweet-smelling crop are grown in once famed Mitcham. Formerly, "the lavender country" extended from Croydon to Battersea—hill, road, and "sweep" at Clapham-junction has there the term of "Lavender"—but the great glut of the crop, which occurred five years ago, seems to have nearly exhausted the ground; and Beddington, Banstead, Carshalton, and Wallington grow less and less now each year. "Mitcham Oil of Lavender"—Mitcham being the generic term for the whole of that quarter—has always commanded, with other oils made there, the very best price in the market—the lavender from Germany being so far inferior; and that price per pound has now increased from 34s. to 100s.; and it will be higher still, unless new grounds are planted—as lavender, like clover grounds, at times get "sick," and will no longer grow their crop. The best fields used to grow it for some years, without fresh planting; for four or five years have some good grounds grown it; but now a fresh planting each year is almost the rule. In planting lavender the ground selected should be dry, light soil, full in the sun, and open—as it will not grow in shade—and the higher it lies the better; and it must not be too good or rich, or it will grow leaf instead of blossom. Cuttings are best, not roots, and they take six weeks to strike; and they are grown in rows that are struck with a plough and that are from a foot and a half to three feet apart, the ground being worked afterwards with hoe and spade, and the soil thrown up against them. Then, when ready for "bunching," they are reaped with a sickle, in just the same way as wheat, only the stems are held straight and are cut close to the root; and two men are engaged in the work, as one ties while the other one "sickles;" three handfuls forming one bunch, and six bunches one bundle, which must be of the weight of quite 24 lb.; and practice will hit it exactly. The price for these bunches has rapidly risen from 2s. 6d. to 8s. per dozen, and this year it is higher still, 10s. and 12s. being asked and given. This cutting for bunching lasts a month, and the work in the field then stops till the second week in August, when that breadth of the plant which has been reserved for the still is cut and laid loose in mats, which, when filled and skewered up and carted, are taken to the distillery and the lavender placed in the copper, where it is trodden—as a man treads hops—and damped, 120 gallons of water being used to a still that will hold 1100, so that the whole of it shall be kept from burning; and with a good still, practised hands, and proper fires, it will begin to run in an hour, and when the water has been expressed from the bloom the oil on the top is skimmed off, filtered, and bottled, and the "water" is poured into cans or jars and sold on the spot at a very low rate, at even 8d. or 10d. per gallon. The finest samples of the oil, however, are made from the blossoms only; and it takes 69 lb. weight of them to yield one pound of oil, for which the price will soon be £6 or more. There are usually three distillings, and this quotation is, of course, for the first.

Most persons suppose that the perfume called "lavender" which is sold in the shops, is the "water" that runs from the still; but it is not so, as in that state it is but on a par with that which is made from the rose and the elder. The sweet fragrant scent sold as "Lavender water" is in fact a compound composed of the oil of lavender, mixed with the rectified spirit of wine, with essences added to it, as rosemary, jessamine, otto of roses, orange-flowers, musk, and bergamot. But as most chemists make a speciality of it, each one has his own pet formula, in the preparation of which he has always to bring to bear much chemical knowledge. In the country, a lavender water is "made" by the cottagers, who each season send their cuttings—mixed with rosemary, red rose-leaves, musk, and thyme—to be distilled in their market-town, where it is duly made and bottled; the old dames, by the sale of it, helping out their "posies" to make their rent. This year, though, has been a bad one for them. Let us hope, however, that this first time will be the last time that we shall have to wait till September before our ears are greeted with the cry of "Lavender, fresh lavender, sweet blooming lavender."

THE CROPS IN CANADA.

A great and bitter cry is coming up from our English farmers about agriculture being paralysed by the present "universal" depression. But the fact is, England is overstocked with farmers and farm-labourers. Let them emigrate in greater numbers and see whether there is depression in our colonies. Why, there is no time for it; at any rate, not in Canada.

The sub-tropical summers of the Dominion bring on the crops apace. What though the snows and frosts of winter hover over the land until April, and the spring ploughings be detained until May. There have been months of ice and snow, when—presto! all is changed, and it is summer. Up spring the young wheat and barley and oats as if by magic. Directly the cereals are in the ground, all hands turn to the maize-fields, and then, when the "planting" is over, the farmers give a hasty glance at their cereals. But there is no time for hoeing the wheat and barley, as in England; or, if there be, no hands can be spared—besides, the fields of clover and timothy-grass are all but ready for the mowing-machines. The hay-harvest over, the Indian corn wants "cultivating," and that done, the cereals are too far advanced for working amongst.

Indian Corn is very largely grown in Canada. The maize-fields are always beautiful: they present a highly picturesque appearance while still young; but when the stalks, with their great waving leaves, get nine or ten feet high, then do the maize-fields make the handsomest show of any mundane crop. Canadians, it is well known, are an intensely loyal people, and as all fears of a night-frost are over by the Queen's birthday, May 24 is generally recognised as the day for planting. The field, having been reduced to the proper friability, is marked out into four-feet squares, and then, at a distance of four feet every way, the corn is planted, five or six seeds to a "hill." By the way, in Canada and the States "corn" is applied only to maize—never to wheat, barley, &c., as in the Old Country. We said the cereals spring up as if by magic. But so rapidly does the corn come on, you can positively hear it growing.

Go out into one of the maize-fields on a warm still evening in July, and listen; a night when there is not wind enough to stir an aspen leaf. Perchance the stillness of the sultry summer evening is being broken by the "Canadian nightingales," as the batrachian denizens of the forest swamps are called. Myriads of frogs are perhaps making the woods ring with their melody. But presently there is a lull in the concert, the whistling dies away, and you stoop and listen. Yes, unquestionably the corn is growing; you can hear the joints in the corn-stalks crackling all over the field. If it be a moonlight night, you will be tempted to linger there, for Dian's soft light gives a charming effect to the maize-fields—especially in September, when the corn-tassels and leaves are fully developed. In September, there will be no frog-concerts to disturb your train of thought—the hibernators having by this time grown so accustomed to life as to cease trilling out their raptures. But animal life will not be altogether wanting; for if the corn-field be near some "bush"—and there are few farms quite destitute of bush—it is sure to be invaded by the racoons that come forth by night to feast on the ripening maize: pretty little animals, somewhat larger than our English foxes. But though engaging and amusing creatures to the stranger and the tourist, these beautiful little furry mammals are regarded with extreme aversion by the farmer. The farmers might forgive the marauders if they would content themselves with eating the corn "clean;" but the mischievous things pull down ear after ear, tear apart the husks, and, taking a nibble here and a nibble there, leave woful waste behind them. The farmers, however, have their revenge. No sooner have the shades of night stolen over the land than out come the 'coons into the maize-fields for their supper; and out come the farmer and his men, with their dogs. The hounds are sent into the standing crop to drive away the intruders. A deep baying from the dogs soon ensues, and, after a short chase, the 'coons make for the bush to "tree," if possible. The tree containing the refugees is soon cut down, and then follows an exciting scrimmage between 'coons, dogs, and men; and capital fun it is, this 'coon-hunting. Of the larger game that are apt to prowl out of their legitimate domains we say nothing, since it is not of the backwoods we are speaking, but of the "cleared" settlements.

Maize is rarely ripe before the end of September, and this year will not be cut until October, the season being a backward one.

Very fine wheat is grown in the Dominion; and where the land is new there are immense yields, eighty bushels to the acre being nothing uncommon; but Canadians have a sad habit of impoverishing their land by growing wheat several years in succession. At the Paris Exhibition of 1862 Canadian wheat took the first prize, and again at New York in 1876. The other cereals are also largely cultivated.

In Canada, far more than in England, the romance of haymaking and harvesting is a thing of the past. Harvest homes are only heard of in poetry and some benighted shires in England. The whetting of scythes and sickles has given place to the sharp click of machinery. Down goes the corn before the scissor-like knives of the reaping-machines like a continuous fall of rain. Time was when each field took more than a week to cut. But what find we now? In the morning a golden mass of waving grain; in the evening the crops not only cut and bound into sheaves, but stooked and the fields swept. The scarcity of hands has sharpened the wit of the colonists, for necessity is the mother of invention. It is to Canada and the States that the English yeomen owe nearly all the recent improvements in machinery. As with the grain, so with the hay. It is all over in a few days. The farmers of Ontario and Quebec have little time for tedding; and, indeed, the warm skies of the Dominion suck up the moisture from the hay after a single "turning." When the crop is not a very heavy one, the hay is cut one day and hauled the next; at other times tedding machines come into play.

In storing their hay the Canadian farmers are much wiser in their generation than their English brethren. Notwithstanding the proverbial fickleness of our climate, Englishmen persist in stacking; whereas in the Dominion they take every waggon-load into a capacious barn. The loads are pitched alternately into separate "mows" on either side of the gangway, to give additional time for the hay to dry. The barn-doors are at each extremity of the building, so as to allow the waggons being driven in on one side and out at the other: the doors are left open day and night, thus affording a free current of air. If rain be apprehended an extra load can be left standing inside the barn; and, in case of damp weather, the hay can be pitched into the mows in a loose state and be trampled down afterwards; whereas in England the loads must be brought up to the ricks perfectly dry to allow for the "building" and trampling down. No wonder so much of our hay is little better than straw. Nor is the folly of rick-building evinced only at harvest-time, for whenever the hay is cut into there is a fresh exposure to the weather.

In noticing the crops of the Dominion we must not forget its fruit. No country in the world produces finer apples and pears, especially the parts bordered by Lakes Erie, Ontario, and South Huron. Almost every farm in this district—the garden of Canada—has its orchard or orchards; and so profitable are the pomaceous harvests that the planting of fresh orchards has become almost a mania in these parts. Great care is taken of the young trees, which are generally planted forty feet apart. In order that the ground may not be unproductive while the young trees are growing—they take about ten years to come into regular bearing—peach-trees are planted between the apple-trees. These commence bearing in the second or third year, and, having exhausted themselves by the time the apples are ready, are cut down after standing the ten years; but in the meantime they have been very productive and profitable—indeed, so profitable are they that peach orchards are being planted out quite independently of apples. The peaches are very large and luscious, some of the varieties attaining the proportions of a fair-sized apple.

There is scarcely a pleasanter phase of Canadian farm-life than the time of the apple harvest. The hurry and skurry of the summer work is over, and the October days are delightfully clear and cool. The orchards are a sight worth seeing. On the ground, dotted in amongst the trees, are tempting heaps of "Baldwins," "Spitzenbergs," "American Golden Russets," "Bartlett" pears, and other choice varieties; and at each pile are barrels, some packed, others in course of packing. The ring of the hammers, that send home the nails into the barrel-heads, sound pleasantly in the tranquil air; and the flitting to and fro of the apple-pickers with their baskets, gives one an idea of comparative rest—so different is the peaceful scene to the helter-skelter of the more important harvests of July and August. To have some idea of the quantities of apples and pears grown in the district under notice, one should see the storehouses at the various ports on the shores of Lakes Erie and Ontario, waiting to disgorge their stock of barrels into the steamers bound for Montreal and Quebec.

Editors are chary of their space, else we should have liked to say a word or two on the vineyards of South-Western Ontario.

OBITUARY.

COUNTESS GREY.

The Right Hon. Maria, Countess Grey, died on the 14th inst. at Howick, Earl Grey's seat in Northumberland. She was the younger daughter of the late Sir Joseph Copley, Bart., of Sprotborough, Yorkshire, by the Lady Cecil Hamilton, his wife, youngest daughter of the Hon. and Rev. George Hamilton, Canon of Windsor, and granddaughter of James, seventh Earl of Abercorn. Her Ladyship was married, Aug. 9, 1832, to Henry George, present Earl Grey, K.G., G.C.M.G., P.C., but had no issue. The Countess was seventy-six years of age.

SIR BOURCHIER P. WREY, BART.

Sir Bourchier Palk Wrey, eighth Baronet, of Trebitch, in the county of Cornwall, D.C.L., barrister-at-law, died at Ilfracombe on the 11th inst., aged ninety. He was born Dec. 10, 1788, the elder son of Sir Bourchier Wrey, Bart., by Anne, his wife, daughter of Sir Robert Palk, Bart., of Halden, Devon, and succeeded his father Nov. 20, 1826. He was the representative of a very ancient Cornish family, and was one of the coheirs to the barony of Fitzwarine, which title has been in abeyance since 1636. He married, first, 1818, Mrs. Ellen Riddle, by whom (who died 1842) he had three daughters, all now deceased; the eldest, Ellen Caroline, was married to Edward Joseph Weld, Esq., of Lulworth Castle, in the county of Dorset. Sir Bourchier married secondly, 1843, Miss Eliza Coles, by whom (who died 1875) he had no child. The baronetcy (created in 1628) consequently devolves on his half brother, now the Rev. Sir Henry Bourchier Wrey, M.A., ninth Baronet, Rector of Tawstock.

He afterwards contributed to the reduction of the newspaper duty by starting the Weekly Chronicle He was the original proprietor of the Iron Times, established about 1845, and was also the originator of a variety of other publications which attained a large circulation.

The Italian Government have given orders to Sir W. G. Armstrong and Co. for the construction of eight 100-ton breech-loading guns, according to designs prepared by that firm. These guns are intended to form the armament of the Italia and Lepanto, the two ironclads which were commenced subsequently to the Duilio and the Dandolo.

The use of telephonic communication is gradually being extended; and, although we have not yet obtained telephonic exchanges for commercial purposes, the system is becoming more and more popular. Quite recently, as we learn from the Electrician, the Children's Hospital at Pendlebury, near Manchester, has been fitted with a system of telephones. The lady superintendent's room is thus connected with each of the six wards, the kitchen, and the pantry. As the hospital consists of six pavilions opening into a long corridor, the most distant pavilion being about 120 yards from the administrative block, it is obvious that much time and labour in running to and fro are saved by this convenient method of communication. It is especially convenient in communicating with the fever ward, thus avoiding the risk of conveying infection to other parts of the hospital. The instruments were the gift of Mr. W. P. Henderson, jun., and Mr. G. P. Dewhurst, of Manchester. They are in constant use, and give great satisfaction.

Mr. Rothery, Wreck Commissioner, gave judgment last Saturday at the close of the inquiry into the circumstances attending the collision in the Thames between the City of London and the Vesta. The Commissioner said that in the opinion of the Court there was a good look-out on board the City of London, and on rounding Tripcock Point she took proper steps by porting her helm and going to the south shore. As regarded the Vesta, although they did not think the look-out was what it ought to have been, yet they thought the whole blame of the collision rested upon the pilot of the Vesta for having taken a wrong manœuvre.—At a Board of Trade inquiry at Middlesborough into the stranding and wreck of the steam-ship Malveston on Cabelos Shoal, the sentence was that Captain Hasker's certificate be suspended for six months, and that of the chief mate, Macpherson, three months. The stipendiary said the assessors were agreed that it was a case showing neglect on the part of the captain in not ascertaining his exact position.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications relating to this department of the Paper should be addressed to the Editor, and have the word "Chess" written on the envelope.

J S R (Vienna).—We are obliged for the trouble you have taken, but the subject has no interest for the public. Shall we return the MS., or destroy it?

M L (Paris).—We should be pleased to oblige you if possible, but cannot undertake to forward letters addressed to our care. Such communications are returned to the postal authorities, and that was the case with yours.

N R (Freckenham).—After 1. P takes R. B to Kt 5th: 2. Q takes Kt. If Black play 2. Kt to K 2nd there is no mate on the third move. Look again.

Hereward (Oxford).—We regret to hear you have been ill. Solutions correct as usual.

D W K (Birmingham).—If you will send a diagram of the position you shall have an opinion. Although the Queen usually wins against a Bishop and Knight in practice, there are some positions in which the superior force can only draw, and yours may be one of these.

S F (Eastbourne).—Too simple, but not destitute of promise.

S C and H S.—In your proposed solution of No. 1852 you have overlooked that when the Black King is moved to Q B 3rd, check is discovered to the adversary.

F O'N H (Liverpool).—A very neat problem, and if found correct it shall be published. It is amusing that positions so closely resembling each other should present such different combinations in the solution.

Lorna (Clapham).—The problem is the composition of the late T. Smith, but we cannot inform you of the date or place of publication. The key move of the solution is 1. R to R 6th; the rest is easy to discover.

BLACK.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in two moves.

A Game occurring in the Tournament now progressing at Mephisto's Chess-Rooms, No. 9, Strand, between Messrs. Lord and Vyse.

WHITE (Mr. L.)	BLACK (Mr. V.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 3rd
2. P to Q 4th	P to Q 4th
3. P takes P	P takes P
4. Kt to K B 3rd	Kt to K B 3rd
5. B to Q 3rd	B to Q 3rd
6. Castles	Castles
7. Kt to Q B 3rd	P to B 3rd
8. Kt to K 2nd	B to K Kt 5th
9. Kt to Kt 3rd	Q to B 2nd
10. P to K R 3rd	B to R 4th

He should have taken the Kt with this Bishop, instead of retreating it. The move made loses valuable time.

11. B takes P (ch)	K to R sq

Black dare not attempt to win the piece by 11. K takes B, for then follows—12. Kt to Kt 5th (ch), K to Kt 3rd; 13. Q to Q 3rd (ch), Kt to K 5th; 14. Q Kt takes Kt, &c.; and if—

11.	Kt takes B
12. Kt takes B	P to K Kt 3rd
13. Kt to Kt 3rd	B takes Kt
14. P takes B	Q takes P

WHITE (Mr. L.)	BLACK (Mr. V.)
15. B to R 6th	R to K sq
16. Kt to K 5th, with the better game.
12. Kt takes B	Kt takes Kt
13. B to Q 3rd	Kt to B 5th
14 Kt to Kt 5th	P to K Kt 3rd
15. Q to Kt 4th	Kt takes B

15. K to Kt 2nd seems to offer more chances, but there is no really satisfactory move for him in this position.

16. Q to R 4th (ch)	K to Kt 2nd
17. Q to R 7th (ch)	K to B 3rd
18. P takes Kt	K to Q 2nd

If 18. K to K 2nd, then 19. Kt takes P and wins.

19. R to K sq	B to B 5th
20. Q to R 6th	B to R 7th (ch)
21. K to R sq	Kt to K 4th
22. P takes Kt (ch)	B takes P
23. Kt to R 7th (ch)	K to K 8rd
24 Kt takes R (ch), and wins.

Played some years ago between Messrs. Blackburne and an Amateur, the former giving the odds of his Q R in exchange for the adversary's Q Kt.

(Remove White's Q R and Black's Q Kt.—French Opening.)

WHITE (Mr. B.)	BLACK (Mr. P.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 3rd
2. P to Q 4th	P to Q 4th
3. Kt to Q B 3rd

The best continuation at these odds.

3.	P takes P
4. Kt takes P	Kt to B 3rd
5. B to Q 3rd	Kt takes Kt
6. B takes Kt	P to Q B 3rd
7. Kt to B 3rd	B to K 2nd
8. Castles	Castles
9. P to B 4th	B to Q 2nd
10. R to K sq	R to Q B sq
11. B to B 2nd	P to K B 4th

This shuts out one of the adverse Bishops, but leaves him with a weak centre Pawn.

12 Kt to K 5th	B to K B 3rd
13. B to B 4th	B to K sq
14. P to B 5th	P to K Kt 4th

WHITE (Mr. B.)	BLACK (Mr. P.)
A very short-lived attack, as the sequel shows.
15. B to B sq	B takes Kt
16. R takes B	B to B 2nd
17. P to K Kt 4th	P to B 5th
18. P to K R 4th	P takes P
19. Q B takes P	B to Kt 3rd
20. B to R 6th	B takes B
21. Q takes B	R to K B 2nd
22. P to K 5th

Of course, he might have won the Pawn at once by 22. Q to K 4th; but the move in the text is a finer stroke.

22.	B P takes P
23. Q to K 2nd

The same move would have followed if Black had played the other Pawn.

23.	R to Q B 3rd
24. R to Kt 5th (ch)	K to R sq
25. Q to K 5th (ch)	Resigns.

The following reminiscence of old chess heroes is contributed by the veteran chessplayer Delta:—"I met with Deschapelles more than once at the old Café de la Régence, and remember that on one occasion De la Bourdonnais proposed a game with him, which set us neophytes all on the qui vive. Deschapelles declined to play on that occasion. The general idea at the Café among the habitués was that Deschapelles was a Gascon at chess. Although undoubtedly one of the very best players of our time, I do not think that he was really any stronger than our own John Cochrane, and certainly not stronger than my old friend De la Bourdonnais, after the latter had imbibed a quantum sufficit of Chambertin. The amazing thing to me and to others, who could not play correctly at all even after half a bottle of vin ordinaire, was how the old champion played always better and better the more he imbibed. The 'lucidus ordo,' so useful in all things, and especially at chess, grew ever more distinct as the bottles were emptied. Wine gladdeneth man's heart. It certainly had that effect on my old friend, and clarified his chess-vision. All honour to the gallant old De la Bourdonnais, who from noon to midnight (there being no Forbes Mackenzie Act in France) was always ready for the fray! The story told of Deschapelles, that he learned not merely the moves (that anyone could do), but to play chess well in one night, was a 'crammer,' which no one then at the Café believed. No true chessplayer should brag, as in Deschapelles' case with Cochrane. Pride goeth before a fall: let all my young chess friends lay this to heart."

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated Jan. 7, 1876) with a codicil (dated May 24, 1878) of the Right Hon. Charlotte Augusta Annabella, Lady Carington, late of No. 39, Berkeley-square, who died on July 26 last, was proved on the 8th inst. by the Right Hon. The testatrix bequeaths all her jewels (except diamonds), the Carington plate, her Sèvres, Worcester, and Crown Derby china, and some other articles of virtû and works of art, to her son Lord Carington, and her diamonds she settles so that they shall go and be held with the title. There are pecuniary legacies of considerable amount to her other children, and also to her executor, Mr. Smith, and maid; and the residue of her property she gives to her sons the Hon. William Peregrine Carington and the Hon. Rupert Clement George Carington.

The will (dated March 16, 1868) of the Right Hon. Carnegie Robert John, Viscount St. Vincent, formerly of Godmersham Park, but late of Court Lees, Kent, who died on July 19 last, was proved on the 10th inst. by the Right Hon. Charlotte Lucy, Viscountess St. Vincent, and Charles James Graham, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £12,000. The residue of his real and personal estate he gives to his said son.

The will (dated July 5, 1879) with two codicils (dated July 5 and 13, in the same year) of Mr. John Jefferies Stone, J.P., late of Scyborwen, in the parish of Llantrissent, Monmouthshire, of Ashton Villa, Wickham-road, Deptford, and of No. 16, George-street, Mansion House, who died on the 6th ult., was proved on the 4th inst. by Edward Mulready Stone, the son, and Frederick William Stone, the nephew, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £140,000. The testator, after giving legacies to a daughter, his executor Mr. F. W. Stone, sisters, nephews, nieces, clerks, and others, directs all his real estate to be sold, and the net proceeds, together with the residue of his personalty, to be held upon trust for his four sons and his two daughters. Special provision is made that the option of purchasing the portrait-drawing of himself by the late William Mulready, R.A., being his first attempt in that style of drawing, and which afterwards led to the production of the numerous beautiful Academy figures by him; and also the two female Academy figures left to him (the testator) by Mr. Mulready at his death, and considered his finest productions in that style of drawing, be first given to the Royal Academy, the National Gallery, or the South Kensington Museum.

The will (dated Jan. 13, 1879) of Mr. Thomas Whaley, formerly of Orrell Mount, Pemberton, Lancashire, and late of Taplow Lodge, Maidenhead, Bucks, who died on July 15 last, has been proved by James Eckersley, William Scott Barrett, and Richard Wright, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £120,000. The testator bequeaths to his executors £300 each; to his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Whaley, his furniture, plate, horses, carriages, goods, chattels, and effects, and £500, and Taplow Lodge and estate for life if she shall so long remain his widow. He also leaves her £3000 per annum for life, to be reduced in the event of her marrying again. To Mary Morris, £100; to his nephew, Cecil Whaley, £2000; upon trust for his daughter, Alice Maud, such capital sum as will produce £500 per annum, and a further sum of £10,000 upon the death or second marriage of his widow. The residue of his real and personal estate he leaves upon various trusts for his son Herbert.

The will (dated July 23, 1855) with a codicil (dated July 15, 1879) of Mr. Francis Vere Hopegood, formerly of Cantray House, Inverness, N.B., but late of No. 19, Chesham-place, Brighton, who died on July 24 last, was proved on the 29th ult. by Mrs. Charlotte Hopegood, the widow, the acting executrix, the personal estate being sworn under £45,000. Subject to these bequests he leaves all his real and personal estate upon trust for his children.

An explosion of fire-damp occurred yesterday week in the Lady pit of the Crewe Coal and Iron Company, at Lycett, near Burslem, and resulted in the death of five men and injury to several others.

The Committee for promoting the presentation to Brigadier-General Sir Evelyn Wood, K.C.B., V.C., have ordered a sword of honour, of handsome design, with a suitable belt. The sword and belt are to be ready by Oct. 12.

An address was given on Monday evening by Cardinal Manning, in the Public Hall, Warrington, on temperance. Mr. Rylands, M.P., was on the platform, and spoke on the same subject. In his address the Cardinal urged that the depression in trade was principally owing to the drinking habits of the country. Temptations to drink were thrown in the way of people by the Legislature. If working men had saved their money during good times, the present depression would have been easily tided over.

THE PHYSICAL BASIS OF LIFE.

GOOD FOOD.

HOW to assimilate or enjoy good food, that would otherwise cause constipation, bilious headache, disordered stomach, and other disasters, use ENO'S FRUIT SALT; being a genuine product of nature, it is a true or natural way of preserving and restoring health. It removes effete matter or poison from the blood, thus preventing and throwing off fevers, boils, and other morbid conditions of the blood. On that account you cannot overstate its great value in keeping the blood pure and free from disease; without such a simple precaution the jeopardy of life is immensely increased. 4s. 6d.

"ROUND THE WORLD IN SIX MONTHS."

By Lieutenant-Colonel E. S. BRIDGES, Grenadier Guards. In a list of what to take with you is given ENO'S FRUIT SALT. See page 298.

DON'T go to Sea without a Bottle of ENO'S FRUIT SALT.

ENO'S FRUIT SALT.

"From a Town in British Guiana, South America, Dec. 5, 1878.

"J. C. Eno, Esq., London.

"Sir,—After two years' trial of your excellent FRUIT SALT, I can safely say that it has saved me much misery from colonial fevers, indigestion, and impaired appetite, to which I have been subject during eleven years' residence in the tropics.

"It is invaluable to travellers as a preventive of seasickness, and a relief from the other ailments of life aboard ship; and, for myself, I could as soon think of going a voyage without my tooth-brush as my bottle of FRUIT SALT. With ordinary care, it does not get hard and caked, as other effervescent preparations do in warm and humid climates, and this is greatly in its favour.

"I am, Sir, yours respectfully, "W. J. B."

"SUCCESS IN LIFE."—A new invention is brought before the public, and commands success. A score of ABOMINABLE IMITATIONS are immediately introduced by the unscrupulous, who, in copying the original closely enough to deceive the public, and yet not so exactly as to infringe upon legal rights, exercise an ingenuity that employed in an original channel could not fail to secure reputation and profit.—ADAMS. CAUTION.—Examine each Bottle, and see the capsule is marked "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without it you have been imposed on by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists. Price 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d. Prepared only at ENO'S FRUIT SALT WORKS, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. Eno's Patent.

TESTIMONIALS.

THOMAS FAIRBANK, M.D., of Windsor, referring to Anti-Fat in the "British Medical Journal" of June 7, 1879, says:—
"I gave some of this extract (Fucus Vesiculosus) to a very corpulent lady, who in three months lost three stones in weight without any change of diet. Since then I have frequently given it for reducing weight, depending on the accumulation of adipose tissue, and have never found it fail. I may state that a patient who has been lately taking it as an anti-fat, and who always suffered very much from rheumatic pains about the body, has been entirely free from such trouble while she has been taking the extract, a fact which she quite independently noted."

EDWARD PARRETT, Esq., Chemist, of Market-square, Winslow, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 12, 1879:—
"One lady to whom I have sold Allan's Anti-Fat has decreased 9lb. in four weeks."

THOMAS NEWBOULD, Esq., Chemist, of Bradford, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 11, 1879:—
"The gentleman for whom I obtained four bottles of Allan's Anti-Fat has derived great benefit from the same, and has recommended it to a friend. Please send me one dozen at once."

C. J. ARBLASTER, Esq., Chemist, of Birmingham, writes, under date of June 4, 1879:—
"Have just received a capital account of the effects of Anti-Fat in reducing corpulency."

"22, Redcliffe-street, South Kensington, S.W., June 2, 1879.
"To the Proprietors of Allan's Anti-Fat.
"Gentlemen,—I have tried your wonderful medicine Anti-Fat both in America and this country. Through its use I can thin down at command, closing on an average five pounds per week.—Yours respectfully, "HARRY BRAHAM."

T. L. REEVE, Esq., of Birmingham, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of July 1, 1879:—
"A gentleman having used one dozen bottles of Allan's Anti-Fat, reports a satisfactory reduction."

J. A. STEWARD, Esq., of Worcester, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 18, 1879:—
"Three bottles of Anti-Fat have produced a wonderful effect."

Herr F. ARNOTT, of the Elbe, Prussia, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of July 15, 1879:—
"I have much pleasure to inform you that by taking six bottles of your Allan's Anti-Fat I am ten pounds lighter."

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER.

Happy Days! There is something of regret and gloom in the first appearance of grey hairs; our prospects are often blighted by their premature appearance. Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER happily affords a safe and sure means for restoring hem again to the freshness and beauty of youth. Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER is no new low-priced article.

It is the old-established standard and reliable article known and spoken most highly of in every civilised country. Every good thing for the hair that the most scientific men of the Old and New World can suggest are combined in Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER. It requires only a few applications to restore grey hair to its youthful colour and lustrous beauty, and induce luxuriant growth, and its occasional use is all that is needed to preserve it in its highest perfection and beauty. Dandriff is quickly and permanently removed. Sold by all Chemists and Perfumers.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER.

There are two special qualities which determine and fix the superiority and excellence of Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER:—First—Its prompt, quick action, and the new growth, life, and vigour that it is sure to give to the hair never failing by a few applications TO RESTORE GREY OR WHITE HAIR TO ITS YOUTHFUL COLOUR, imparting to the hair a delightful aroma, fresh, delicate, and unchangeable in any climate. FLORAL BELL,

FRAGRANT ELIXIR OR

LIQUID DENTIFRICE.

The admiration of the world, "THE FLORAL BELL. FRAGRANT ELIXIR or LIQUID DENTIFRICE." Language fails to give expression to the beauty or the utility of a beautiful set of white teeth. With no other charm the possessor may well feel proud. Dentists, chemists, and physicians all recommend and use the FLORAL BELL FRAGRANT ELIXIR or LIQUID DENTIFRICE. It is truly unequalled for cleansing, preserving, and beautifying the teeth, giving them a pearl-like whiteness and hardening the gums. It removes all tartar hardens the enamel, arrests decay, and imparts to the breath at all times a most delightful fragrance.

A few drops on the brush night and morning is all sufficient. Tooth pastes and powders are discarded after a trial of FLORAL BELL FRAGRANT ELIXIR or LIQUID DENTIFRICE. It is purely vegetable, which may account for the absence of froth in your mouth during its use. A chemical that produces froth may be necessary in soap to cleanse the skin, but all chemicals are certain destruction to the teeth. The enormous and constantly increasing sale for this article enables the proprietor to offer it at the very low price of Two Shillings and Sixpence in large Bottles. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers. Wholesale Dépôt, 114 and 116, Southampton-row, London.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1879.

Such of our readers as have travelled on the Continent can hardly fail to have been struck with the arrangement which prevails in France and Germany, and, we believe, elsewhere, by which the connection between a passenger by railway and the luggage which he carries is established. He pays a trifling fee, has his impedimenta labelled, and receives a check authorising the delivery to the holder of it only of the labelled luggage at the prescribed destination. A plan something analogous to this has been proposed for giving official proof of posting letters to those persons, and in such cases, as may seem desirable to the senders. Stamped labels (if we may so describe them) resembling very much Bankers' cheques in form, but much smaller, it is suggested, may be sold at every Post Office at the rate of one farthing each. Upon these forms the sender is to copy the addresses of such letters as they desire to have acknowledged. The clerk of the Post Office has simply to compare the name and address written on the Form with that of the letter to which it is slightly attached, and, if they agree, to stamp the Form with the Office Stamp of the day and return it to the person by whom it was presented. Such, in bare outline, is the plan proposed as an annex to our Post-Office machinery. The object of it is simple. It is to give to a sender of a letter, if he desires it, at the cost of the smallest coin of the realm, official proof that it has been handed in to the Post Office on such a date, and has been thereby committed to the trust of the Postmaster-General for delivery. It will be observed that resource to this facility is not compulsory. It would be adopted, probably, in the case of hardly one letter in a thousand. It would entail a very slight increase of expense, of time, or of trouble, upon Post Office subordinates. It would disturb no existing arrangements. It would help to make the penny postage scheme more perfect, and it would probably, besides answering other departmental purposes, bring some accession of revenue to the General Post Office. They who desire to see a lucid exposition of the entire scheme may obtain for themselves a tractate published by Simpkin, Marshall and Co., entitled "Posting-Proofs, a simple and inexpensive scheme for the verification of the posting of letters with profit to the Government."

The Postmaster-General announced in his last report that the system under which "senders of ordinary letters could obtain, upon application, a certificate of the posting of such letters has been proved to meet no demand on the part of the public, and has now been abandoned. In other words, the Post Office is alleged to have given the system a trial, and to have failed in eliciting any encouraging response. In form this is true; in substance it is misleading. Three Provincial Towns—Liverpool, Birmingham, and Bath—were selected for the experiment. A short paragraph in the Times and in the local papers made an announcement that the system was about to be tried. A few placards, intimating that "certificates of posting unregistered letters could be obtained," were put up at the respective selected offices. No other steps were taken for making the public acquainted with the privilege proffered to it. Nothing more was heard of it in the newspapers. No explanation of the system was given. No information of the advantages to be secured by it was vouchsafed. The charge made for the accommodation granted was preposterously heavy, as compared with the expense to be incurred; and it was not surprising, therefore, that what was not made known, or what, if made known, was scarcely worth the sum demanded, should have failed to secure the support of the public. We hope the experiment will be repeated under conditions more promising of success. If it be deemed impolitic to launch it at first in application to the kingdom at large, the trial may be restricted to London, the centre of commercial and professional activity, and due publicity must be given to the precise object, nature, and scope of the experiment.

The advantages to be derived from a simple and inexpensive provision for verifying the posting of letters would probably be far more numerous, as well as far better appreciated, through facts growing out of it than they appear in speculations on the moral probabilities of the case. Supposing the machinery suggested by the pamphlet we have already mentioned to be adopted—and it seems to us to leave little room for its improvement—it will put into the hands of the sender of a letter, at his own option, unquestionable evidence that such letter had been posted. It would thereby furnish a complete check upon the possible dishonesty or unpunctuality of messengers. It would afford facilities for the detection (whether in posting or delivery) of delay of letters, and for tracing the cause of it to the proper quarter. It would be accepted in Courts of Justice as sufficient evidence of a letter having been put into the post, and would thereby dispense with witnesses, clerks, books, and so on. It would tend to promote greater care as to the legibility and accuracy of the addresses of letters, and would at once put an end to the evil adverted to in the Postmaster-General's Report for the year, in which he informs the public that 25,000 letters were posted without any address at all. It would facilitate inquiries after lost letters, rendering investigation further back than at the post-office where the letter was proved to have been posted superfluous. There are very few persons indeed who would not, under some circumstances, highly value the possibility of producing instant proof that certain letters had been posted at a certain time, whether for social, commercial, or legal reasons. Men in business, and especially those of the legal profession, would be relieved of no end of anxiety by being able to assure themselves, at a very trifling cost, of the actual postage of letters which they may deem of more than ordinary importance, an assurance which cannot always be obtained except by carrying their own correspondence to the Post. In these days of high-pressure upon one's time and labour, it is no mere fanciful want which can thus without detriment, at least to the public revenue, be easily and amply supplied by the Government. But, as we have already said, the benefit to be rendered by a complete system of "posting-proof" will probably be developed in its full extent by practice only. Its latent advantages may prove to be greater than those which are obvious. The graft of it upon the penny postage system, whilst it can entail no mischief, may be productive of fruit the full value of which it is impossible to estimate.

The authorities at the General Post Office will need some pressure from without to make a second and a fairer trial of the system. Official reluctance to undertake novel schemes we are neither surprised at nor disposed to censure with severity. Everyone, upon reflection, must admit that he would himself exhibit the same tendency if he were placed in the same circumstances. But this is an obstruction which, in the present instance, may, we trust, be surmounted with comparatively little labour. Indeed, looking at the certain proximity of a general election, we think it not unlikely that a common and prompt attention to the subject by the Newspaper press would alone suffice to persuade the Post-Office authorities to give the scheme a fair chance of displaying its real merits.

THE LATE MR. EDWARD BLORE, F.R.S.

This gentleman, who died on the 4th inst, within a few days of completing his ninetieth year, was eldest son of Thomas Blore, F.S.A., author of the "History of Rutland," and was born at Derby, Sept. 13, 1789. His early days were spent at Stamford, where he showed that love of architecture which characterised his whole life. While still a boy he was in the habit of walking about the country and sketching all such objects of interest in the neighbourhood. Before he was twenty years of age he had executed the drawings for the plates in Blore's "History of Rutland," the second part of which was published in 1811. He was soon afterwards employed by Mr. Surtees, of Mainsforth, to execute the drawings for the illustration of the "History and Antiquities of Durham." For Britten he drew the sketches of York and Peterborough in the series of "English Cathedrals;" and for Clutterbuck several of the architectural drawings in the "History of Hertfordshire." He soon became acquainted with many eminent men who composed the leading society of Edinburgh at that time. In 1816 he was introduced to Sir Walter Scott, with whom he contracted a friendship which lasted till Sir Walter's death. One of Mr. Blore's earliest works as an architect was the building of the exterior of Abbotsford. He also associated with Scott in the "Antiquities and Picturesque Scenery of Scotland," a work in the illustration of which, Turner, Calcott, Nasmyth, the Rev. J. Thomson, and other eminent artists were employed. Most of the architectural drawings were from the hand of Mr. Blore. Only the two first volumes of this work were published in 1826, and it had to be abandoned. In the same year Mr. Blore brought out a handsome illustrated work on the "Monumental Remains of Noble and Eminent Persons." He was among the first to stimulate the revival of taste for Gothic architecture, and was called in as consulting architect by several of the governing bodies of our cathedrals. At those of Peterborough and Glasgow he carried out considerable works. He soon acquired a most extensive practice, and was engaged in building or reconstructing many of the finest houses in England and elsewhere. Among his works may be specially mentioned Lambeth Palace, the residential portion of which he rebuilt for Archbishop Howley; and the Palace of Aloupka, in the Crimea, which was entirely constructed after his designs. He was appointed special architect to King William IV., and this honour was continued to him by Queen Victoria during the early part of her reign. He completed Buckingham Palace, which had been begun by Nash. It was done within the estimated cost, and so well satisfied was the Government with the result of his labours that he was offered the honour of knighthood, which, however, he thought fit to decline. He was for many years architect to Westminster Abbey, a post which he only resigned when he finally retired from the profession. He has left behind him an unrivalled collection of admirably executed drawings of churches and other objects of architectural interest, chiefly in England, the result of more than seventy years' labours. Many have acquired a special interest as being the only memorials of buildings long since swept away or spoilt by injudicious restoration. Upon several occasions he travelled long distances to obtain sketches of buildings which he had heard were about to be destroyed. He was a member of several of the great London societies and an honorary member of some of the provincial architectural societies. The University of Oxford made him D.C.L. in 1834. He married, in 1819, Sarah, daughter of the Rev. W. Hodges, Vicar of Mattersey, Nottinghamshire. He has left two sons, the Rev. E. W. Blore, Senior Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, and the Rev. G. J. Blore, D.D., Head Master of the King's School, Canterbury. His two daughters were Harriet, married to the late Dr. Cureton, Canon of Westminster, and Margaret, married to Charles Keyser, Esq., of Stanmore. His remains were interred at the City of London Cemetery, Highgate.

The Portrait of Mr. Blore is from a photograph by Messrs. Hennah and Kent, of Brighton.

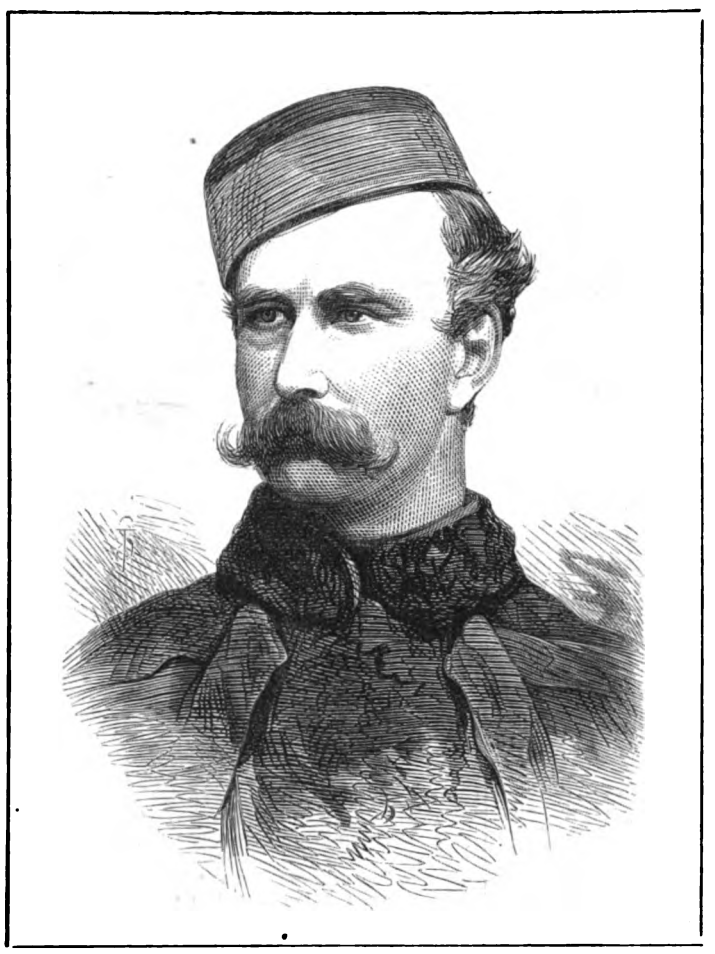
THE CAPTURE OF CETEWAYO.

We announced last week that the defeated and deposed King of the Zulus had been taken prisoner, or had surrendered, in the Ngome forest, in the north-east part of Zululand. Some ten days before, on the 18th ult., a force under Lord Gifford having been dispatched by Sir Garnet Wolseley in pursuit of the King, his speedy capture was predicted. A week later the pursuers ascertained that Cetewayo was hiding in the kraal of his Prime Minister, having become a fugitive from the time of the defeat of his army at Ulundi. Meanwhile Lord Gifford had kept up a hot pursuit, and, having on Aug. 21 captured a native, he was promised information as to Cetewayo's hiding-place in the Umvolosi bush. Acting on this statement, Lord Gifford detailed Colonel Clarke, with 300 men, to surround this locality, while the pursuing party was divided into several detachments. One was commanded by Major R. J. C. Marter, of the 1st King's Dragoon Guards. These parties traversed the country in all directions. Major Marter, who came into camp with a troop on Aug. 22, had to report that he had lost during his march three horses, which had been killed by lions. Soon after this date the Major again started in quest of the defeated monarch, and on Thursday, the 28th ult., when in the north-east of Zululand, he overtook and secured the fugitive. Major Marter entered the King's Dragoon Guards in January, 1851, and has served with considerable distinction abroad. He was at one time Assistant-Quartermaster-General in Ireland. We give the portrait of this officer, who was accompanied by a detachment of his own regiment and a troop of Lonsdale's colonial volunteer horsemen. The following account of the manner of the King's capture has been published:—

"The kraal in which the King was captured lies eighteen miles north of Brigadier Clarke's camp on the Black Umvolosi. Lord Gifford marched from near there through Tuesday night, arriving within four miles of the kraal at daybreak with the white cavalry and natives. They lay in ambush, fearing to advance across the open ground, and waiting for the night to make the attack, lest the King should see and escape into the bush, which borders the kraal within a hundred yards on the north side. Lord Gifford was on the south-east side. In the mean time Major Marter, with his force, appeared on the north-east and was seen by the King, but was not feared, the King thinking the cavalry in the bad ground could not approach quietly or without warning. Major Marter, however, had stripped the saddles and left the scabbards behind. Disappearing from view, he stole up noiselessly through the bush. The Native Contingent, whom he had concealed, were put in advance, and were able to move more rapidly than the horses. These men dashed out of the bush and surrounded the kraal, saying, 'The white man is coming; you are caught.' Major Marter then rode up and dismounted, entered the kraal, and coming straight to the hut in which the King was, called on him to come forth and surrender. The King feared, and said, 'No, you come in, to me;' but Marter was inflexible, and the King, creeping out, stood up among the soldiers with stately composure. One of them sought to lay his hands upon him, but he waved the man back disdainfully, saying, 'White soldier, let me be.' He then asked to be shot. Lord Gifford's dismounted men, posted in concealment to watch the kraal, had seen Major Marter's ruse, and ran with the news to Lord Gifford, who then galloped in. The King's bearing on the march, and passing between the lines of the 60th Regiment into his tent, was dignified and calm. Wearing a red blanket over his breast in the manner of a Roman toga, he stepped slowly, looking round with head thrown back and haughty gaze at the soldiers around him. When captured, he asked the rank of the officer who had taken him. He treated the Native Contingent contemptuously. The King's servant fired one shot. The King seems to have suffered his capture partly through weariness and exhaustion, partly because he felt himself hemmed in, and partly through one of the fits of morose and sullen resignation which have lately come upon him at intervals."

Cetewayo was brought a prisoner to the head-quarters of General Sir Garnet Wolseley at Ulundi on the 31st, with a guard of the King's Dragoon Guards, the 60th Rifles, and the Native Contingent. Eleven of his people escaped from custody during the two days' march, and five of them were shot because they would not allow themselves to be recaptured. The fallen King was to be sent down to the coast, and to be removed by sea. It was not yet known what place of residence would be assigned to him, but he was to be brought to Cape-town for the present, to await further instructions from the Imperial Government.

There is no reason to apprehend that he will be harshly treated by those acting under the direct authority of her Majesty's Government in South Africa. But we regret to observe that grossly mistaken notions of the past conduct of Cetewayo, as King of the Zulus, have become current, and that much undeserved obloquy has been cast upon him. Even a leading article in the Times of last Tuesday contains summary accusations which, though repeatedly put forward, in general terms, by Sir Bartle Frere and other officials seeking to justify the late war, remain utterly devoid of proof; and it is reasonable to believe that, if they had been founded in fact, some evidence of a substantial kind would ere this have been produced to support them. It is alleged, without stating when or where, or by what agency, or under what circumstances, that Cetewayo used to send out his "impis," or bands of soldiery, "to kill Zulus suspected of conversion to Christianity;" that old men were killed by his orders because they would not attend his Court; and that girls were killed because they would not marry old men. "These facts," says the writer in the Times, "are well authenticated and beyond dispute." We will undertake to deny the authenticity and veracity of such assertions, if they are supposed to stand or fall by any evidence to be founded in the documents hitherto printed for the information of Parliament. No distinct evidence has yet been furnished, and neither Sir Bartle Frere nor any other official person has claimed to be in possession of reserved evidence, fixing these charges of extreme cruelty upon the deposed Zulu King. Neither by Sir Theophilus Shepstone, nor by Mr. Dunn, who are personally acquainted with Cetewayo and his kingdom, have these charges been expressly confirmed; while Bishop Colenso, having had constant and intimate communication with the Zulus during a quarter of a century, indignantly repels such charges as malicious fictions. With regard, more particularly, to the rumoured massacre of some girls and young women, in 1876, for refusing to marry the soldiers of certain regiments, the whole story has no other foundation than what may be found in the Parliamentary Bluebook C—1748, at pages 198 and 216. It comes only to this, that the magistrate resident at Newcastle, in Natal, a long way from the frontier of Zululand, chanced to hear this horrible rumour from some of the natives about him, and mentioned it, unofficially, in a private letter. This reached the Lieutenant-Governor of Natal, who thereupon did not make any proper inquiry into the facts, but having got the same story, in a vague and uncertain manner, from mere hearsay of two other native informants, forthwith sent a message of remonstrance to Cetewayo. The messengers sent upon this occasion were Zulus, who were personally obnoxious to the King. We have only their report of the interview, at which nobody else was present; and it may well be doubted whether Cetewayo understood the precise nature of the charges brought against him, or had any opportunity of denying their truth. It was upon this occasion that Cetewayo is reported to have said that he must and would "go on killing;" and "my people will not listen to me unless they are killed;" which seems to have been merely his way of claiming the judicial power to inflict capital punishment. It has never been shown that such punishment was inflicted by him with greater frequency, or with less regard to the formalities of a legal trial, than by other native rulers in South Africa. No missionary in Zululand appears to have ever been molested by order of Cetewayo or any convert put to death for embracing Christianity, though several converts have been killed or ill-treated by the local chiefs on account of other transactions. It is true that many persons, from time to time, have been made victims of the heathen superstition concerning witchcraft or sorcery. They have been "smelt out" by the professional witch-doctors, or denounced by malicious neighbours, and have then been put to death, without the King's order, by the people of their own district or village. This dreadful system prevails in most parts of Africa under native rule. It will be found, on reference to Sir T. Shepstone's report of the coronation of the Zulu King in 1873, that Cetewayo's Councillors of State then expressly told him it would be necessary to reserve the case of witchcraft. But Cetewayo has denied that he put to death any of his subjects except those convicted of treason and other grave crimes. In a list of twenty-five homicides or murders, supplied by the Rev. R. Robertson, occurring in a period of some years, there is not one case brought home to the King's order or consent. The reader who cares further to investigate this question may refer to Macmillan's Magazine of August, 1877, for the report of a Christian Zulu whom Bishop Colenso sent into Zululand. The appendix to Captain T. J. Lucas's volume, "The Zulus and the British Frontiers," also contains an examination of the subject. It is of some importance, now that Cetewayo has become a captive in our hands, to disabuse the popular imagination of false ideas concerning his character and the former acts of his reign. He is an ignorant barbarian, with all the mental and moral disadvantages of his race, but neither bloodthirsty, vindictive, nor perfidious; and his good qualities were attested, in happier times, by Sir T. Shepstone and others, who had serious dealings with him. The famous boastful phrase of "washing his spears," which only signified going to war, as a European in the age of chivalry might talk of "fleshing his sword," never bore reference to hostilities against his colonial neighbours of Natal, but against the Swazies, who are savages by far more turbulent and ferocious than the Zulus. In short, whatever may be thought of the policy of the late war, and whatever benefits may be hoped from Sir Garnet Wolseley's scheme for the subdivision of Zululand, with twelve dependent rulers, under the supervision of British Residents, Cetewayo is not to be held personally responsible for the great social evils that existed under his reign. "These are," says Captain Lucas, "chiefly the universal military conscription, the custom of polygamy, with the buying and selling of women, and the hideous superstition of witchcraft, to which hundreds of lives are yearly sacrificed." It was long before the time of Cetewayo that these deplorable evils came into existence, and it is scarcely his fault that they could only be terminated by a revolution, consequent upon the intervention of British power.



With regard, likewise, to the alleged hostile designs of Cetewayo against the British colonial provinces, Sir Henry Bulwer, the Lieutenant-Governor of Natal, in his memorandum dated Jan. 9, two days before our actual invasion of Zululand, in pursuance of Sir Bartle Frere's policy, shows that there were no signs of an impending attack by the Zulus. On the contrary, the Zulus along the frontier had been disquieted only by Lord Chelmsford's military preparations, since the arrival of Sir Bartle Frere in September, as they feared we were about to attack them. It is Sir Henry Bulwer, at the outbreak of the war, who makes this statement, which is entirely borne out, if we peruse all the official correspondence, by the detailed reports of civil officials on the Natal and Transvaal borders. The Earl of Pembroke has this week sent to the Aborigines Protection Society a letter which has been addressed to him by Mr. C. F. Barker, of Little Umhlanga, Natal. The following extract from it conclusively shows how grossly Cetewayo was calumniated at the time when the public, both in South Africa and in this country, were led to believe that he meditated an attack on the colony of Natal. Mr. Barker writes:—

"When Sir Bartle Frere visited Natal, I happened to be in Zululand, and was at the Royal kraal, accompanied by two traders, whose waggon I was more or less occupying. At that time fearful reports were circulated about the doings in Zululand. Colonists said that it was unsafe for any white man to go into the country—death would be sure to be the consequence. I went in at that time and made a walking tour, accompanied by a black servant to the Emhlabalini (Ulundi), the Royal kraal. I was treated very kindly at each and every kraal I passed. I could not speak the Zulu language, but understood a little. When I arrived at the King's, I was still more hospitably treated. Everything was as peaceful as could be, while all the warlike preparations were going on in Natal. Cetewayo could not understand the movements of the English. He inquired what they meant, who they were going to fight with, and was told that he was not to feel uneasy, as our stationing troops all round him was for no purpose of war. It was done in order to make the colonists feel themselves secure. Then came the ultimatum, and greater indignity could not have been offered than was offered to Cetewayo's great men. They were spoken to like dogs and insulted by the colonists present. About this time a shell was fired from the fort on this side of the Tugela into Zululand. The King was informed of this, and said that, 'had one of his young men, even in a boyish way, fired his gun across the Tugela, the Colonial Government would have required a very heavy fine from him' (the King); but, added he, 'they want to force me into war. I do not want to fight, and my people shall certainly not strike the first blow or give the first shot.' A day before the ultimatum was up the troops fired shells several times across at some unoffending Zulus, who had come near the river either to watch or look at their mealie-gardens. By this little act our troops killed one Kaffir. I was present and saw it all."

Baron Ferdinand de Rothschild had a severe fall from his horse while riding with some friends in Cheddington-fields on Sunday. He was conveyed to Leighton House, where it was discovered that his left arm was dislocated, and that he was otherwise severely shaken.

The Trinity authorities have fixed a new lightship at the Seven Stones, Scilly, in place of the one which has been doing temporary duty. The new ship is fitted with recent improvements in fog-warning machinery, and instead of the two fixed white lights formerly exhibited at night, a revolving light will now be exhibited.

THE AFGHAN WAR.

Our Illustrations of this subject, which continues to excite great interest, include another view of the Bala Hissar or fortified precinct at the city of Cabul, where Major Sir Louis Cavagnari, with his companions, Mr. Jenkyns, Lieutenant Hamilton, and Dr. Kelly, were massacred on the 3rd inst.; two Sketches, by Mr. W. Simpson, our Special Artist, of the writing and signing of the Treaty of Gundamuk, on May 26; a view of the Citadel at Herat, where a fresh insurrection against the Ameer Yakoob Khan has just broken out; and the figures of two Heratee soldiers, drawn by Mr. Simpson.

There is not a great deal of political or military news, since our last week's Paper was made up, concerning the progress or the prospects of the renewed conflict between the British Indian Empire and the hostile tribes or chiefs, whoever they are, in Afghanistan; but the utmost exertions are made, from day to day, for the advance of General Sir Frederick Roberts in force from the Shutargardan Pass, which was expected to begin on Wednesday last. He would first descend upon Khushi, a place at the foot of the mountain range, and on the road between Ghuzni and Cabul, about forty miles from the last-named city. A convoy of his stores was attacked on Monday by the tribes on the eastern side of the Pass, and lost in the skirmish twenty-six men, of whom a few were Sepoys, and seventy mules were carried off. There is a rumour also of a night attack on some pickets of the 72nd Regiment. The tribes of the Khyber Pass have promised, it is said, not to oppose or molest the column under Major-General Bright, which is to advance immediately, and lend support to General Roberts. Two envoys from the Ameer at Cabul, named Mustaufi Habibulla and the Wuzeer Shah Mohammed, sent to General Roberts at his request, have reached his head-quarters at Ali Kheyl.

Strong reinforcements have been ordered to join the division under General Roberts, which is to advance on Cabul viâ the Shutargardan Pass. These reinforcements will consist of two regiments of Native Cavalry and three of Native Infantry. The cavalry corps are the 13th Bengal Lancers, formerly known as the 4th Sikh Horse, and the 5th Punjab Cavalry, a corps which did yeoman's service at Delhi and at the relief and capture of Lucknow. The infantry battalions are the 13th Bengal Native Infantry, or Shekhawattee Battalion, one of the corps which was brought to Malta by last year's Jingo agitation; the 20th Bengal Infantry, a Punjabee regiment, which distinguished itself in the Chinese War of 1860; and the 21st Native Infantry, another regiment of Punjabees, which formed a portion of the British forces in Abyssinia. While Roberts's column advances over the Shutargardan (or Camel's Neck) Pass, another body of British troops will advance through the Khyber Pass on the north, and a third from Candahar on the south. From this last a column has been detailed to occupy Khelat-i-Ghilzai under Brigadier-General Hughes. This column consists of a detachment of the 8th battery 4th Brigade of Royal Artillery, with two field guns, a mountain battery with three guns; the 2nd Punjaub Cavalry, whose fidelity to the British Raj was shown at Delhi and at Lucknow; a wing of the 59th (2nd Nottinghamshire) Regiment; a wing of the 3rd Goorkhas, or Kumaon battalion; a wing of the 29th Bombay (or 2nd Belooch) Regiment, who distinguished themselves in the Persian campaign; and a company of Sappers and Miners. Khelat-i-Ghilzai is on the road from Candahar to Cabul, viâ Ghuznee; so that General Roberts, who holds the Shutargardan, only fifty miles from Cabul, will be supported on his left by General Stewart with the force from Candahar, and on his right by the Northern, or Khyber, Army under General Bright.

FRANCE.

M. Jules Ferry arrived at Toulouse on Thursday week, and, as he passed through the streets on his way to the Prefecture, was greeted with shouts of "Vive la République!" "Vive les Lois Ferry!" and "Vive l'Article VII.!". At a banquet which was given in the evening by the Rector of the University, M. Ferry said that he and his colleagues would pursue with firmness the work they had undertaken, because they believed that the majority of the nation was with them, and that Parliament would lend them its support.

Upwards of 100,000 persons greeted the arrival of M. Louis Blanc at Marseilles on Sunday, the enthusiasm of the crowd leading it to unhorse his carriage and drag it to the Hôtel de Marseille, from the balcony of which he addressed the multitude.

The unveiling at Perpignan of the statue of François Arago took place on Sunday. Vast crowds of people were present at the ceremony, and among the guests of the Mayor were M. Jules Ferry and a number of senators and deputies.

In honour of the anniversary of Sept. 21 a number of banquets were given on Sunday last in Paris and the provinces. At Bordeaux there was a Socialist gathering, and at Nice a dinner, at which a hymn to Garibaldi was sung immediately after the "Marseillaise."

The Rev. Cunningham Geikie, D.D., author of "The Life and Works of Christ," entered last Sunday on the incumbency of Christ Church, Boulevard Bineau, the new church connected with Miss Leigh's mission homes and orphanage. The treasurer's account for the seven months ending Aug. 31 shows a total of 2134f. receipts and 3955f. disbursements.

A duel was fought on Tuesday morning between M. Victor de Carniers and M. Charles Simon, a son of M. Jules Simon, the latter being charged with having published in the Petit Nord an article insulting M. de Carniers, President of the Court of Cassation, father of the first-named gentleman. Two pistol-shots were exchanged, but without effect.

ITALY.

Saturday last being the anniversary of the entry of the Italian troops into Rome, a popular demonstration was made outside the Porta Pia.

At the Consistory held yesterday week the Pope pronounced a short allocution, after which the Nuncios at Paris, Vienna, Madrid, and Lisbon were created Cardinals. Eight Bishops were subsequently appointed—six for Italy and two for Mexico. The Pope on Monday held a secret consistory for the purpose of conferring three Cardinals' hats; also for the purpose of nominating eighteen Bishops, the sees of seven being in partibus infidelium.

After the death of King Victor Emmanuel a subscription was opened in Italy with a view to the erection of a national memorial on the spot where the Italian troops fought on June 23, 1859, the desperate battle of San Martino, at the same time that the French were fighting the battle of Solferino. The sum of 160,000 lire (a little over £6500) has been already collected, and it has been thought well to make a beginning with the erection of the memorial. It will be a tower, and will be erected on the summit of the Rocolo hill, where fiercest fighting was. The foundations of the memorial have been laid; they are 19 feet 8 inches deep. The tower will be externally round, but inside it will have a quadrangular form. Its height will be 246 feet, and its width at the bottom will be 65 feet 7 inches. The summit will be occupied by either a statue of the King or by the "Star of Italy," which will be so richly gilt that when lit up by the sun it will be visible at a great distance. At night some species of light will be maintained, so that the tower will serve as a beacon for the district.

HOLLAND.

M. Vissering, the Minister of Finance, presented his Budget for the year 1880 to the Chambers yesterday week. The revenue is estimated at 108,000,000 fl., and the expenditure at 115,000,000 fl., showing a deficit of 7,000,000 fl, which it is intended to cover by an issue of Treasury bonds or bills. The Minister expressed his opinion that the financial prospects were fairly satisfactory, but said that, to meet future deficits and expenses on account of public instruction and canal communication with Rotterdam, he should recommend an increase of taxation, to be followed by a loan, should the increase prove insufficient.

The Minister of the Colonies presented the Budget for the Dutch Indies to the Second Chamber on Tuesday. The revenue for the year 1880 is estimated at 140,000,000 fl., and the expenditure at 146,000,000 fl., the deficit of 6,000,000 fl. being due partly to the prosecution of public works, and partly to the cost of the war in Acheen. The sum required for the latter undertaking during 1880 is set down at 9,000,000 fl.

The Evangelican section of the Dutch Reformed Church has resolved upon establishing an exclusively Protestant University, where theology is to be taught in accordance with the tenets of the Synod of Dort. The site for this new University has not yet been determined upon, but it is known that the most important chair of orthodox divinity will be offered Dr. A. Kuyper, the eloquent opponent in the Second Chamber of all undenominational education. The four Universities in the Netherlands already existing are Leyden (1575), Groningen (1614), Utrecht (1636), Amsterdam (1877).

GERMANY.

The Emperor and Empress of Germany, accompanied by Prince William, the eldest son of the Crown Prince, Prince Charles, and Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia, and attended by a brilliant suite, arrived at Strasburg on the 18th inst., and were received at the railway station by the generals in command of the troops which took part in the manœuvres, and by the chief provincial and municipal authorities. Their Majesties, after a short delay, entered the carriage which was awaiting them, and drove off to the prefecture, after first receiving a salute from a body of the Kriegerverein, or association of veteran soldiers, who were marshalled in order opposite the station. The streets, which were very generally and elaborately decorated, were filled with dense crowds of spectators, who cheered the Emperor and Empress and the other members of the Royal family with great enthusiasm. After the carriage in which were their Majesties followed the Crown Prince with the Crown Prince of Sweden, the Grand Duke and Duchess of Baden, Prince William, and the other Royal personages. The Emperor William gave a banquet in the evening, to which, besides the Imperial suite, all the persons of distinction who had come to witness the manœuvres were invited. At nine o'clock a tattoo was beaten, after which a grand procession was formed consisting of the united bands of the 15th Army Corps. The procession passed through the town, and, on arriving at the Prefecture, the Emperor was serenaded. His Majesty appeared repeatedly on the balcony. The parade of the 15th Army Corps before the Emperor William, the Crown Prince, and the other Royal personages who have accompanied his Majesty to Strasburg is reported to have passed off yesterday week in the most brilliant manner, the attractions of the military spectacle being enhanced by beautitul weather. The Emperor was everywhere enthusiastically cheered, particularly by the numerous warrior associations, of which some seventy were represented. His Majesty afterwards attended the parade dinner, when he proposed "The health of the 15th Army Corps." On Saturday the German Emperor and Empress were present at the manœuvres at Wiwersheim. On the way back to Strasburg their Majesties passed through Wiwersheim, where they were respectfully greeted by the Burgomaster, the clergy, and the combined staff of all the educational establishments belonging to the district. On Sunday morning the Emperor and Empress, accompanied by most of the Royal personages at present in Strasburg and their suite, attended Divine service in the Church of St. Thomas, and their Majesties afterwards proceeded to the Prefecture to witness a procession of the rural inhabitants of Erstein and the surrounding neighbourhood. The procession was composed of about one hundred young men of the farm-labourer class on horseback, followed by forty carriages filled with peasant girls, picturesquely dressed. The Emperor afterwards cordially shook hands with the members of a deputation of peasants who were standing near him. A deputation, headed by the Burgomaster, waited on the Emperor to present him with a medal struck in commemoration of his Majesty's first visit to Strasburg, in May, 1877.

The Emperor left Strasburg at twenty minutes past four on Tuesday afternoon for Metz. Large crowds collected before the Prefecture, in the streets, and at the railway station to witness his Majesty's departure, and as the Royal carriage drove through the streets the Emperor was saluted with cries of "Hoch!" and "Auf Wiedersehen!" At the station, where were assembled the chief authorities, the Emperor again expressed his deep satisfaction at the reception he had met with in Strasburg and its neighbourhood. His Majesty arrived at Metz about eight in the evening, and was received at the railway station by Prince Charles of Prussia and the chief civil and military authorities, his arrival being signalled by a salute from the guns of the fortress. He drove in an open carriage, through streets decorated with triumphal arches, to the Prefecture, the route thither being lined by members of German societies bearing lanterns. The town was brilliantly illuminated.

The Crown Princess of Germany continues her visits to the leading industrial establishments in Styria. The Neue Freie Presse reports her inspection of the Schutz Earthenware Factory at Liboje. She minutely examined everything, made several purchases, took tea in Herr Schutz's park, and after a stay of three hours and a half took leave in the most gracious manner.

The Central Society of German Manufactures opened its third Congress at Augsburg on Monday. According to the Cologne Gazette 300 persons from all parts of the empire attended it, and a telegram was dispatched to Prince Bismarck thanking him for his energetic and successful defence of the interests of native industry.

The jury of the Munich International Art Exhibition awarded the prizes on Tuesday. They gave a medal of the second class to an English artist, Mr. H. Herkomer. There are in all eighteen medals of first and twenty-four of second class for distribution.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

Prince Bismarck, accompanied by his family, arrived at Vienna at ten o'clock on Sunday evening. The Chancellor was received at the railway station by Count Andrassy, Prince Reuss, the German Ambassador to the Court of Vienna, and the staff of the Embassy. The telegram says that the meeting between Prince Bismarck and Count Andrassy was of the most cordial description. The distinguished visitors were loudly cheered by the crowd at the station, and on the way to the Hotel Imperial, to which they drove in four of the Royal carriages. The semi-official papers, both at Berlin and Vienna, attach great importance to the visit of the German Chancellor to the Austrian capital. The Prince was visited on Monday morning by Prince Reuss, the German Ambassador, and at twelve o'clock drove in an Imperial carriage and pair to the Ministry for Foreign Affairs. Count Andrassy arrived at same time to welcome the Prince, after having had a private audience of the Emperor. Prince Bismarck was also met at the Foreign Office by Baron Haymerle. During his drive the Prince, who wore the uniform of a General in the German army, was warmly greeted by the spectators who lined the route. The conference with Count Andrassy and Baron Haymerle lasted from noon until half-past one, and Prince Bismarck afterwards drove to the palace, where he had an audience of the Emperor, which lasted three quarters of an hour. At half-past two the Prince, in company with Count Andrassy, paid a visit to Count Taafe, the Minister-President, and afterwards, for a short time, to Baroness Haymerle. He subsequently, still accompanied by Count Andrassy, drove back to his hotel, where, at three o'clock, the Emperor arrived. Prince Bismarck received his Majesty in the vestibule. The Emperor shook hands with the Prince, and then proceeded to the apartments occupied by his family. The visit lasted about half an hour. At half-past four Prince Bismarck drove in uniform to the Castle of Schönbrunn to attend the banquet given by the Emperor in his honour. For an hour after dinner the Emperor held a reception, and afterwards took leave of Prince Bismarck before leaving Vienna for his hunting seat in Styria. Princess Bismarck dined on Monday with Princess Reuss, the wife of the Ambassador, and went in the evening to the Court Theatre. The Prince remained in his hotel after his return from Schönbrunn. Prince Bismarck on Tuesday paid visits to the Archduke William, the Turkish and French Ambassadors, the Papal Nuncio, and the Hungarian Minister-President, M. Tisza. The Prince received a visit from the Duke of Oldenburg. In the evening Prince Bismarck and family dined with Count Andrassy.

The Club of Bohemian Deputies have resolved by sixty-seven votes against five to take their seats in the Austrian Reichsrath, the present Government, with the approval of the Emperor, having proclaimed its intention of respecting alike the rights of all the peoples within the Monarchy, and endeavouring to establish union between them.

The Austrian Reichsrath is summoned to meet on Oct. 7.

The Vienna correspondent of the Daily News telegraphs that, the peaceful occupation of Novi-Bazar having been accomplished, the Minister for War intends to reduce the occupation troops. Eight thousand men out of 40,000 near Serajevo have been recalled home. The small garrisons are to be given up in the winter, but marches will be made through distant valleys to keep the population orderly.

Herr Tisza, the Hungarian Minister President, left Pesth on Monday for Vienna, where he will remain for some days.

It is reported that the health of the Empress is in an unsatisfactory state, and she has been recommended by the Imperial physicians to reside in Sweden.

In addition to his office of temporary Governor of Odessa, General Todleben has been appointed commander-in-chief of the troops in the military district of Odessa.

An official telegram received at St. Petersburg states that the advance guard of the expeditionary force under Prince Dolgoroukoff exchanged shots on Aug. 18 with a body of Tekke Turkomans between Terkasan and Khodjalkali. Prince Dolgoroukoff dispatched two squadrons of cavalry and one company of infantry, which on the 23rd successfully engaged the enemy, and captured from them 6000 sheep and 1200 camels. The casualties on both sides were trifling. The Turkestan Gazette states that at the beginning of July Noorberdy Khan, a chief of the Tekke Turkomans, arrived at Merv in order to request the assistance of the inhabitants against the Russians. Half the Turkomans in the Merv district promised to co-operate with Noorberdy Khan; but others, considering the maintenance of friendship with Russia more politic, refused. This news is up to July 28. Intelligence has been received at Simla, viâ Persia, and confirmed by news from two other sources, that the advance column of the Russian expedition against the Tekke Turcomans has been defeated at Geuk Tepe, with a loss of 700 killed. The force was falling back on Beurma.

TURKEY.

The official version of the recent attempt to assassinate the Sultan, forwarded by the Turkish Minister for Foreign Affairs to the representatives of the Porte abroad, is as follows:—"An individual, named Constantin Karayanopulo, of Greek origin, but a Roumanian subject, made an attempt to enter the Palace of Yeldiz at the moment when his Majesty was preparing to proceed to the Mosque on the occasion of the Feast of Bairam. The sentinels having stopped him, he stabbed two soldiers and an officer with a dagger, but soon being wounded himself he was arrested. The man died during the night of Wednesday from the injuries he had received. The examination of the prisoner proved that he was suffering from mental derangement." A despatch from Constantinople says that the Roumanian representative there has declined to deliver up Karayanopulo's brother.

AMERICA.

President Hayes, speaking on the 17th inst. at a soldiers' gathering at Ohio city, argued strongly against the doctrine of the sovereignty of individual States, quoting and indorsing the opinion expressed by Abraham Lincoln that none of the States had ever possessed sovereign rights, and declaring that the late war had decided the question in favour of the supremacy of the national Government. In a speech delivered by him at Detroit on the 18th the President adduced statistics to prove that there was a great revival of industry and commerce in the United States, which he attributed to the energy of the people, aided by the resumption of specie payments, and he expressed hopes that the prosperity would be permanent. President Hayes warned the country against plunging into speculation and debt, which would only bring on a reaction. He also urged the necessity for the payment of the national debt, which would, he said, be possible within thirty-three years without increasing the burden of the people.

The President, accompanied by Generals Sherman and Sheridan, is at present making a tour through Illinois, and is everywhere received with cordial greetings by large crowds of people. In various speeches the President has dwelt upon the revival of prosperity in the United States, and urged the maintenance of the paper, silver, and gold currency on a par with that of other countries. He further insisted that equal justice was the right of all sections of the country and all classes of the people.

CANADA.

A statement of the business done by the Post-Office Savings' Banks in the Dominion of Canada shows that on June 30, 1879, there were 267 post-offices receiving deposits, the total number of depositors being 27,445, and the gross amount standing to their credit being 2,925,290 dols., including interest, which is allowed at 4 per cent. The average amount due to individual depositors is, therefore, a fraction over 113 dols. The system of post-office savings' banks was only established in Canada in April, 1868, and at the end of the first fifteen months of their existence—viz, on June 30, 1869, or ten years ago—the total deposits amounted to 503,614 dols., or little more than one-sixth of the total accumulation at the end of June this year.

Rumours of impending trouble between China and Japan are gaining ground. Both countries, it is reported, are making warlike preparations.

Intelligence received at New York from Panama states that a decree has been published by the Columbian Government strictly prohibiting the shipment of contraband of war.

Mr. Vivian, late her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Cairo, has been appointed British Minister at Berne, where he will proceed in November.

The London Gazette contains a number of regulations issued by the Postmaster-General fixing the sums to be paid for the transmission of telegrams within the United Kingdom, and relating to the general conduct of telegraphic business.

The Agent-General for New South Wales has been informed by telegram of the arrival in Sydney of the ship La Hogue, which sailed from Plymouth with emigrants in June last; and information has been received of the arrival at Canterbury, New Zealand, of Messrs. Shaw, Saville, and Co.'s ship Glenlora, Captain Scotland, which was dispatched from Plymouth on June 5, with 231 emigrants, 120 of whom were English, 38 Scotch, 72 Irish, and one foreigner.

Mr. Richard A. Proctor, the astronomer, writes as follows to an American paper in reference to an announcement published in Boston, in which he was mentioned as a lecturer now dead:—"As to my being dead, I cannot but think this is a mistake. The study of science suggests extreme caution about matters of fact. But, so far as my own observations extend, I find reason to believe that I am alive. My friends seem also to think so. You must not think me dogmatic if—failing stronger evidence than I yet possess to the contrary—I decline to accept unhesitatingly the theory that I am no longer living."

Regarding affairs in Burmah, the correspondent of the Times at Rangoon, telegraphing on Sunday, says:—"It is generally believed that orders have been sent to the acting Resident at Mandalay to leave with his party as soon as he can without betraying an undignified haste or an appearance of fear. This measure will give general satisfaction, as no intercourse now exists between the Residency and the Court worth running any risk for. The acting Resident has not been treated with more courtesy than was shown to the Resident; but the ordinary civilities and attentions due to the representative of the British Government have been studiously withheld, and his presence had no effect in checking the cruelties still practised by the Court."

News of the war in South America comes by way of Lisbon to Aug. 29 from Valparaiso. The Chilian ironclad Blanco Encalada left that port on the 23rd in search of the Huascar and Rimac, which were reported to have been seen off Tacna. On the 26th the Huascar and Rimac visited Autofagasta without attacking it. On the 28th, however, the Huascar returned and bombarded the town for five hours. The Chilian gun-boats Magellanes and Abtao and the forts replied. The Abtao was thrice hulled, and suffered some loss in killed and wounded, but the town is reported as having sustained little damage. The Huascar left at seven o'clock in the evening. The Chilian ironclad Encalada arrived four hours afterwards. A German packet reported that the Peruvian corvette Union was cruising in the Straits of Magellan, seeking to intercept the Chilian transports, and the Chilian corvettes O'Higgins and Covadonga had gone in search of her.

The Ecclesiastical Commissioners, who are the owners of several farms in Sussex, have allowed their tenants an abatement of 20 per cent in their rents.

St. George's Chapel, Windsor, was reopened on Sunday for Divine service, after being closed for two months in order that the interior might be cleansed and renovated.

After being restored, at a cost of £9000, from plans prepared by the late Sir Gilbert Scott, Tewkesbury Abbey was re-opened on Tuesday, the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol delivering an address, in which he spoke hopefully of the present prospects of the Church.

The Rev. the Earl of Mulgrave, Vicar of Worsley, will preach the sermon in St. Paul's Cathedral on the occasion of the consecration of the Rev. A. W. Sillitoe, the Bishop-elect of New Westminster. The consecration will take place on the Feast of St. Simon and St. Jude, Oct. 28.

During the Church Congress, which is to take place at Swansea early next month, an Exhibition of Ecclesiastical Art will be held on a somewhat extended scale. Church needlework and embroidery will form an important feature, and there will be shown a collection of ancient vestments from Bruges of great beauty and of the highest archæological interest.

The Bishop of Bedford, who was rector of Whittington, has been presented with a testimonial by the clergy of Oswestry Rural Deanery. The gift consists of an oaken table and desk combined, of admirable workmanship. On the top is a carved oak mitre, resting on a cushion, with a plate bearing the following inscription:—"Presented to the Right Rev. Walsham How, D.D., sixteen years Rural Dean of Oswestry, as a token of love and respect from the clergy of his deanery."

The Church of St. Patrick, Hove, Brighton, which has undergone renovation, has been much improved by the insertion of a fine painted window in the Decorated style, by Messrs. Clayton and Bell. It is divided into five lights, with elaborate tracery above. The design of the new glass is wholly in reference to the life of St. Patrick.—A beautiful three-light Munich window, the seventh of a series, has been erected by Messrs. Mayer and Co. in the parish church of Stoke-on-Trent.—Sir Philip and Lady Rose have presented two windows, by Mayer and Co., to St. Margaret's Church, Penn, Bucks.

The chancel of the picturesque little church of Harpsden, Oxfordshire, which had been closed for some weeks, was reopened on Sunday, the 14th inst., by the Bishop. Mr. Woodyer was the architect under whom the decorations were effected. The east wall is lined with Devonshire marbles, as is also the edge of the step on which the new altar stands, which surrounds a design by Minton in encaustic tiles and mosaic. A well-executed mural painting of the legend of St. Margaret in prison trampling on the dragon, symbolising the triumph of faith, is by Harland and Fisher, by whom also is the stencilled diaper of the walls and painting of the roof. The stone panels on the sides and in the splay of the window are relieved with glass mosaics; and the stonework of the reredos, with its white marble cross, was erected by Wheeler, of Reading. The chancel is restored by the Rector as a memorial to his father, the Hon. and Right Rev. Richard Bagot, who for sixteen years was Bishop of Oxford, and had also been a Fellow of All Souls' College, who are the patrons of the living. The new candlesticks, vases, and altar frontals, a new altar desk and Litany desk, were all of them offerings of friends to the good work; and the new east window, by Hardman, was the joint offering of relations of the late Bishop Bagot.

The first half-yearly meeting of the English Congregational Churches of Merionethshire was held on Tuesday at Corwen. The Rev. E. Williams, of Dinasmawddy, chairman of the district union, presided, and there was a large attendance. The secretary and treasurer, the Rev. Burford Hooke, of Mold, and Alderman Thomas Minchall, of Oswestry, represented the executive of the North Wales Congregational Union. Reports were presented from the churches at Corwen, Dolgelly, Barmouth, and Dinasmawddy, and it was resolved to secure a brief history of each church with a view to its publication. A resolution was passed approving of the Union joining the Church Aid Society. The Rev. E. Williams gave an address from the chair on the relationship which should exist between the Welsh Church and the English movement in Wales. He believed that the work of the North Wales English Congregational Union was rapidly commending itself to the judgment and sympathy of the Welsh Church. At night the Revs. E. Williams, David Griffith, Messrs. John Edwards, William Jones, Hugh Lewis, John Adams, and Charles Roberts addressed a public meeting in the Baptist Chapel. The Rev. H. C. Williams, of Corwen, presided. The meeting was large and enthusiastic. The next session is to be held at Barmouth.

The annual conference of the London Baptist Association was held on Tuesday night at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, the subject being the Work of Church Members, the Rev. J. Clifford, LL.B., president, delivered an address.

A fountain presented to Leicester by the High Bailiff, Mr. Israel Hart, was inaugurated on Wednesday afternoon. It cost about £2000.

The Exeter correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette writes that the Chancellor of the Exchequer, with two of his sons—the Rev. A. F. Northcote and Mr. H. Northcote—have within the past few days been making archæological researches on the right hon. Baronet's estate at Pynes. The results have been of an interesting character, and will probably lead to the exploration of a number of other undisturbed barrows in the immediate neighbourhood.

The annual conference of the Library Association of the United Kingdom was opened at the Manchester Townhall on Tuesday morning. The chair was occupied by Mr. Alderman Baker, chairman of the Free Libraries Committee of the Manchester Corporation, who delivered the opening address. Papers on subjects relating to the objects of the association were afterwards read and discussed.—At a meeting of the Preston Free Library Committee on Wednesday afternoon a letter was read from the trustees of the late Mr. E. R. Harris, solicitor, of Preston, stating that, with the consent of the Court of Chancery, they would grant £70,000 towards the establishment of a free library. The committee unanimously decided to obtain powers to purchase a site.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

A glance at the very strong programme that had been issued for the Newmarket First October Meeting showed that nothing but fine weather was required to make it a brilliant success. There appeared every prospect of this on Monday, but during the night a complete change took place, and rain fell heavily all the following morning, while there were constant heavy showers during the afternoon, so that a card containing no less than nine events was run through under very unpleasant circumstances. Attalus had nothing but Carillon and Allegra to beat for a Triennial over the D. I.; but, nevertheless, he did not at all relish the severe course, and only got home by half a length in very scrambling fashion. The Great Foal Stakes, to which £1000 is added, is a new race, and had attracted no less than 410 entries. Yet though Rayon d'Or had incurred a 7 lb. penalty, his brilliant running at Doncaster seemed to completely paralyse the opposition, and the field dwindled down to six. Ruperra is so notoriously uncertain that he had not so many friends as Discord, who was backed heavily for the Cesarewitch during the morning. Ruperra seemed unable to gallop almost from the fall of the flag, and from the Abingdon Bottom the Leger winner and Discord came right away from the others and ran a fine race home, Rayon d'Or winning rather cleverly by a neck. Of course this form is a vast improvement on anything that Discord has previously exhibited, and if he can only stay as well as his friends assert, he must be very dangerous indeed in the Cesarewitch, in which he has only 7 st. 4 lb. to carry. In Bounds made a great bid for the Hopeful Stakes, in which she fairly had the speed of Prestonpans at first, but he just managed to catch her in the last few strides, and win by a head; the son of Prince Charlie had a 6 lb. penalty, and is evidently a fine stayer. Mask and The Song, two stable companions, had the Buckenham Stakes to themselves; and though the former is still a little above himself, he landed the odds laid upon him without much difficulty. Mr. Houldsworth pulled Ruperra out again in the Grand Duke Michael Stakes, in which he performed little better than he had done earlier in the day; for, though he managed to get second, Bute won as he liked, and gave Lord Rosebery's colours a much-needed turn. Reveller figured so ingloriously that he is scarcely likely to repeat his own brother's—Hilarious—performance in the Cesarewitch. On Wednesday Lucetta (who started a strong favourite at 2 to 1) won the Great Eastern Handicap easily by three lengths; Typhoon being second, and Master Kildare, a bad third, pulling up; Bute fourth. The other runners were Warrior, Gunnersbury, Tower and Sword, Mowerina, Speculation, Gourmand, and Bowness.

At a time of such general depression it was generally feared that the great Cobham Stud would be dispersed at a terrible sacrifice. Happily, however, such fears proved groundless, and the result of Mr. Rymill's efforts for the two days must have far exceeded the hopes of the most sanguine shareholder. It is most gratifying to learn that a Stud Company will continue to exist on a smaller scale, and Mr. Wolfe laid out nearly £30,000 on behalf of the new association, Blair Athol being his chief purchase; and, though the magnificent son of Stockwell and Blink Bouny is now eighteen years old, he is wonderfully fresh and well, and must be put down as a very cheap horse at 4500 gs. The best of the mares sold wonderfully well. Bella (1200 gs.), Crinon (1400 gs.), Eva (1650 gs.), Jocosa (1750 gs.), Maid of Perth (1000 gs.), Ortolan (1100 gs.), and Queen of the Chase (1200 gs.) all running into four figures, and five of them falling to Mr. Wolfe's nod. The prices obtained for the foals were, however, the most remarkable. The Duke of Westminster gave 1100 gs.—the highest price on record—for a son of Scottish Chief and Masquerade, and the average for the "babies" was considerably in excess of that obtained for the yearlings in June last. When we mention that Wild Oats, with St. Augustine, Evasion, and Co. to advertise him, was cheap enough at 2500 gs., we fancy that we have touched upon all the salient features of what must always be an historical sale.

Messrs. Tattersall officiated at the third annual sale of the Belhus hunters on Saturday last. Sir T. B. Lennard had, as usual, collected a wonderfully good-looking lot, and the twenty-eight averaged 173 gs. Kingswear (320 gs.), who was bought by Lord Pembroke, proved the premier of the sale.

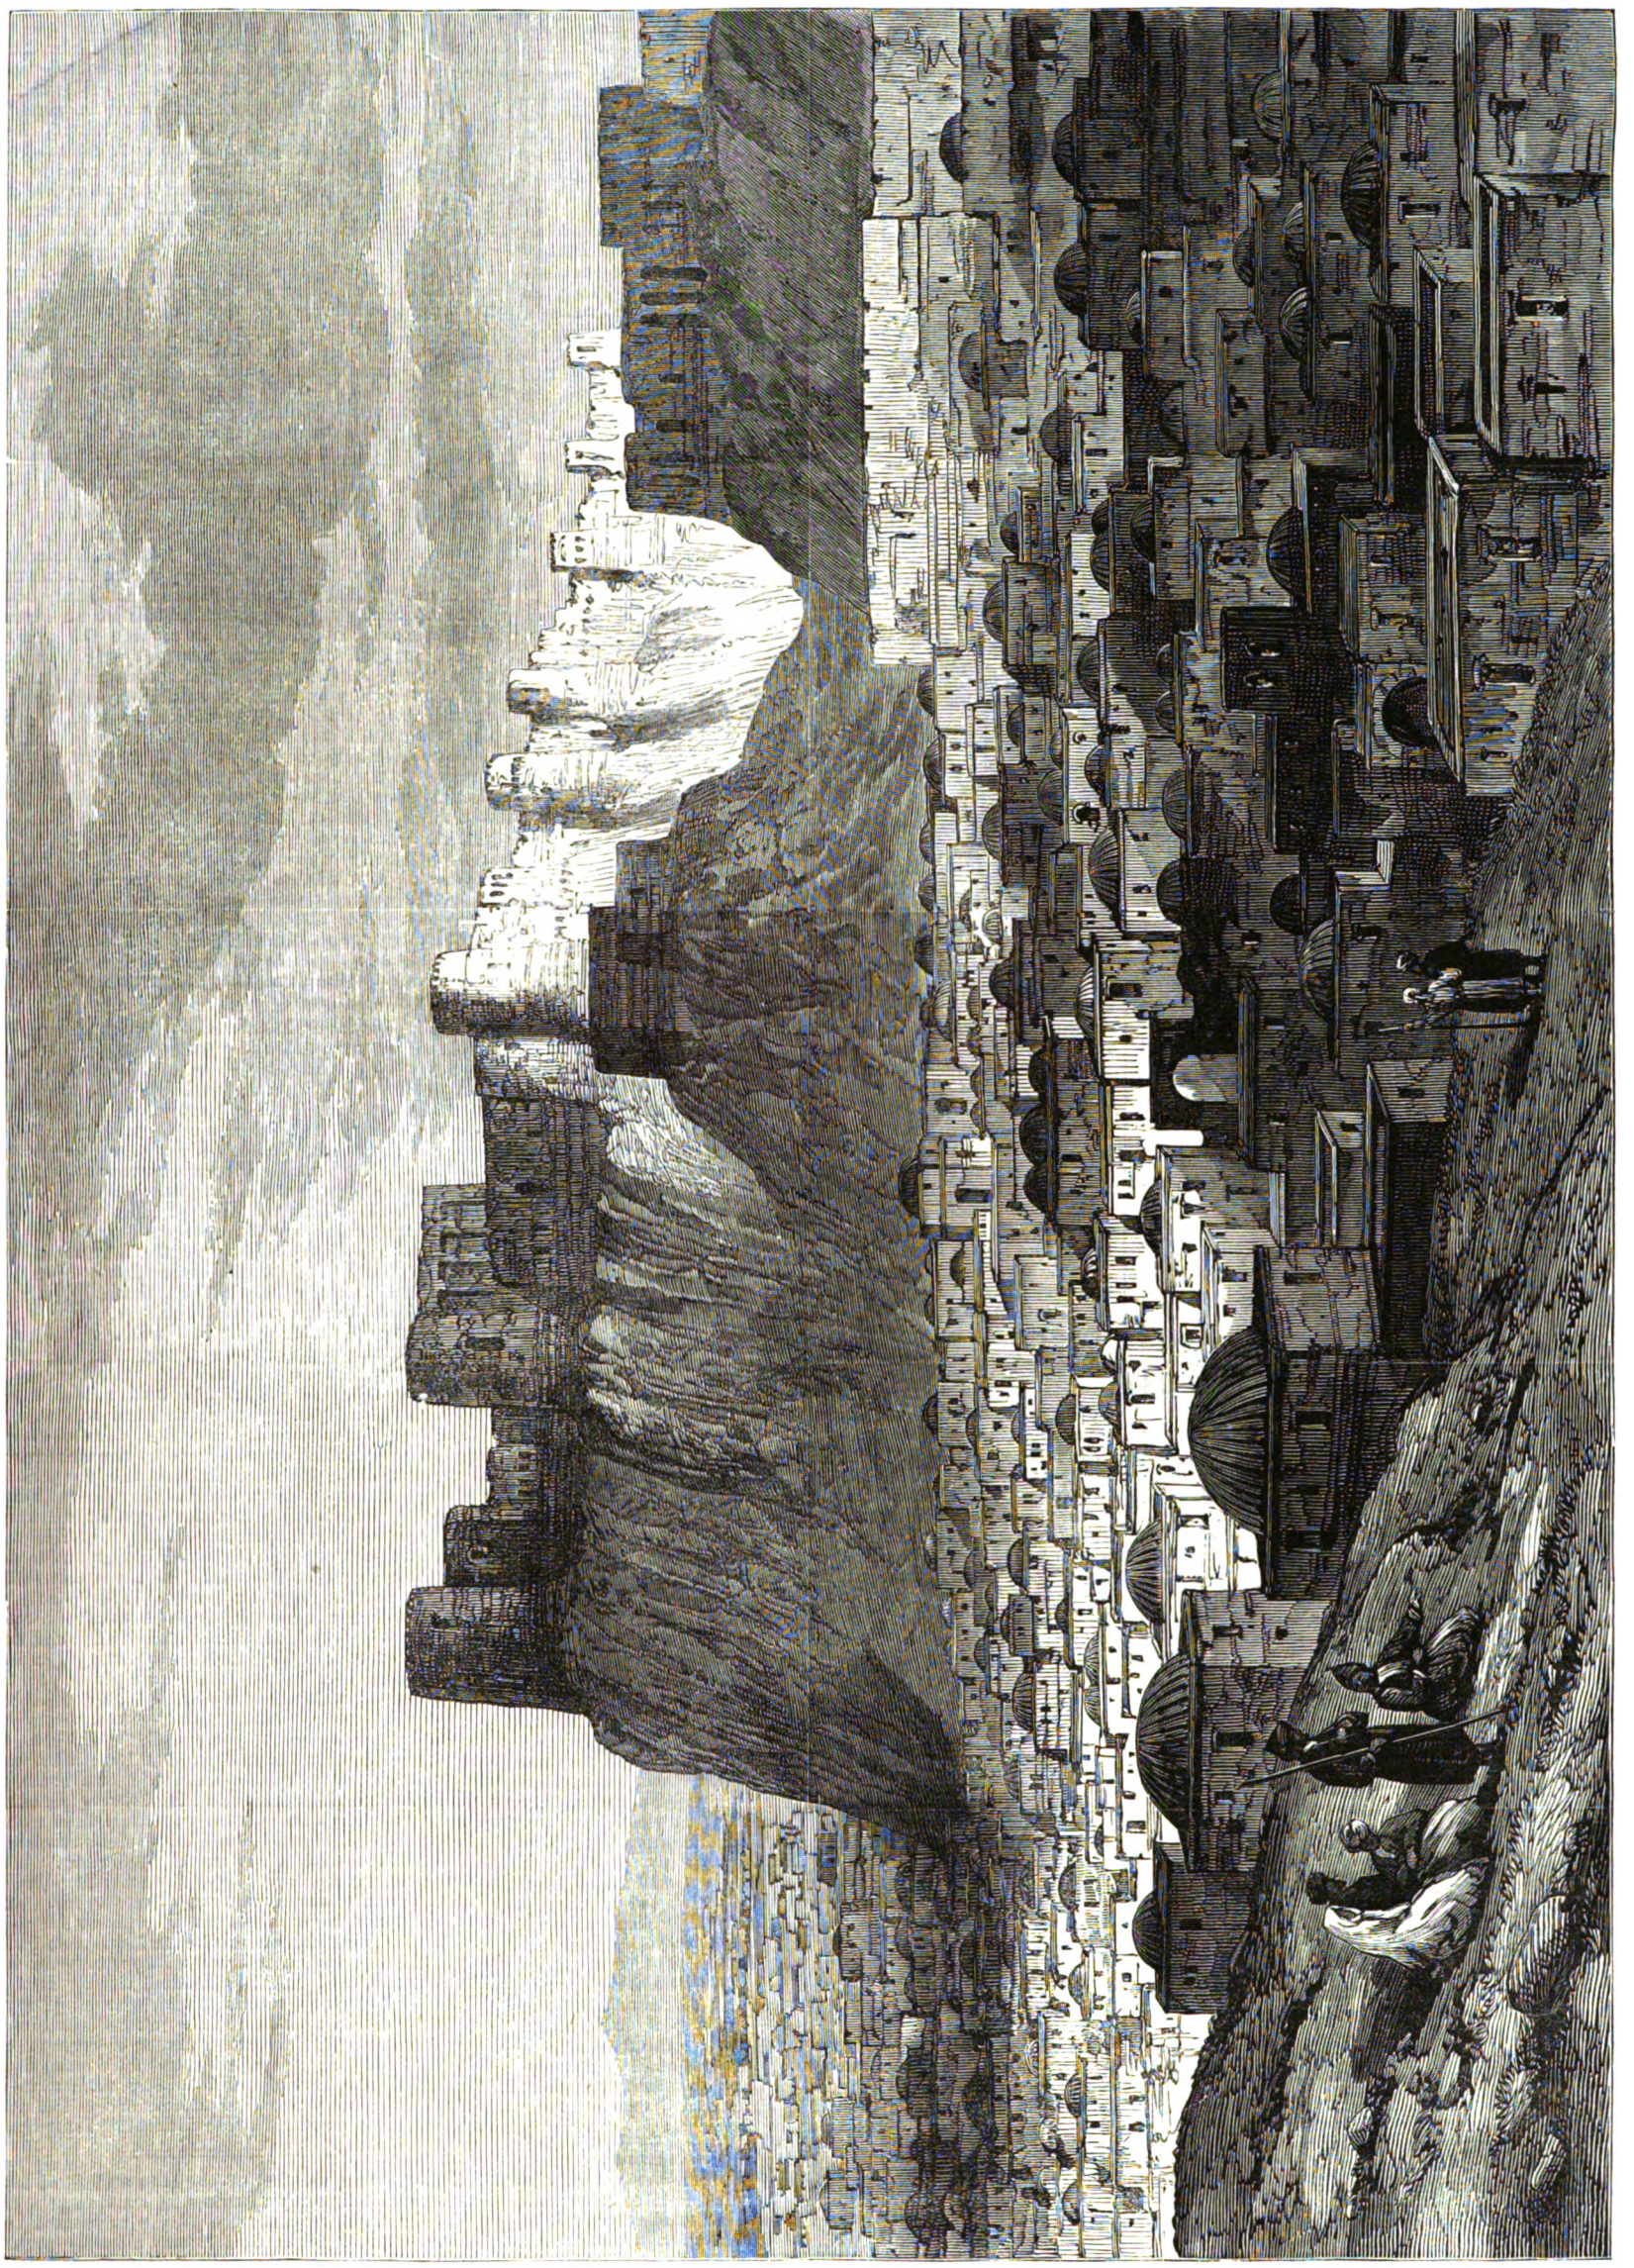
The most successful sale of thoroughbred yearlings ever held in France was that of fourteen colts and fillies belonging to M. Delâtre, which were disposed of in Paris last Saturday. They realised £5756, or over £411 each, being more than double the average obtained by yearlings from the same stud last year.

Keen and Cooper rode their eighteenth mile-race at Lillie-bridge on Monday afternoon last. Keen led for three quarters of a mile, when Cooper went by him and won with something in hand by ten yards, in the very fast time of 2 min. 54 1-5 sec.—The twenty-six hours' bicycling championship, which was decided at the Agricultural Hall, Islington, at the end of last week, was a decided failure. The only redeeming feature of the exhibition was the fine riding of Terront, the French champion, who covered 363 miles in the given time.

Those old opponents, John Higgins and Robert Watson Boyd, will scull over the Thames course on Monday next for £200 a side.

A correspondent of the Scotsman says that two gold rings, as well preserved as if new made, have been picked up in the vicinity of Maeshowe, at Loch Stennis, Orkney. The pattern on one of the rings is three-plait, and that of the other is a plain double cord, both being united into one ornament by cross-bars. Some of the local antiquaries have decided that the rings must be about 1000 years old. They are now in custody of the county clerk.

The institution for the blind which has been erected in a suburb of Sheffield was opened on Wednesday. Some years ago Mr. Daniel Holy bequeathed £25,000 for the endowment of such an institution, if it was erected and furnished within a given time. The conditions of the bequest have been complied with, and the building, which will accommodate one hundred inmates, has been erected and furnished at a cost of £15,000, the whole of which has been subscribed in the town and neighbourhood.



At Windsor Castle various improvements are being carried out during the residence of the Queen and Court in Scotland. The level of the approach to the Norman Gate, between the wall of the moat near the Round Tower and the North Terrace, has been slightly altered, making the ascent easier for horses and vehicles. On the castle hill the palisading has been painted a deep olive colour, and a number of decorators are engaged in gilding the spear-heads of the railings at the foot of the incline and those near Edward III.'s Tower which separate the private grounds of her Majesty from the roadway leading up the hill to the Grand Quadrangle. The steps within Henry VIII.'s Gateway, at the commencement of the terraced part in front of the houses of the Military Knights of Windsor, are being relaid, granite being substituted in places for the softer stone, which has been greatly worn by the constant traffic at this point. The lamps about the approaches are being gilt and decorated, and other work is in hand within the palace.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

Mr. Lionel Lawson, one of the principal proprietors of the Daily Telegraph, died at his residence in Brook-street, Hanover-square, on Saturday morning last. The suddenness of his death must be the cause of infinite distress to his numerous and affectionate kindred; while it has shocked a host of friends. As Mr. Yates has remarked in a graceful paragraph in the World, Mr. Lionel Lawson will be missed in many and various circles in London, in Paris, and in Brighton. In metropolitan society his death will cause a distinct and mournful void.

We are not long remembered in Vanity Fair, be we statesmen, millionaires, soldiers, painters, poets, or what not; but the deceased gentleman of whom I am speaking possessed exceptional claims to the kindly remembrance of that section of the world in which he mingled. Without the slightest pretensions to literary or to artistic culture, he could hold his own conversationally in every coterie, and say something sensible and to the point on most subjects. I have seldom conversed with a shrewder, clearer-headed man than he, or one who showed more tact and finesse in avoiding argumentative "friction." And I knew him during two-and-twenty years. It was his lot to bear that which I have always held to be a very sore and grievous burden—the possession of great wealth; and I think that all who knew Mr. Lawson will agree with me that he bore his fardel very simply, modestly, and unassumingly, and that he was neither purseproud nor vainglorious. I have been told of many kind actions of his doing; and I never heard him speak an unkind word about anybody.

A polite correspondent, whose letter I have mislaid, doubts whether I am right in stating that the savage profligate, Lord Mohun, had anything to do with the slaughter of "poor Will Mountfort (or Mountford) the player. If my correspondent will turn to Hargrave's "State Trials," vol. i., p. 510, he will find that on Jan. 31, 1692, Charles Lord Mohun was put upon his trial before his peers in Westminster Hall for the murder of William Mountford. His Lordship was acquitted, by sixty-nine to fourteen votes. I find that the illustrious John Churchill, Earl (afterwards Duke) of Marlborough voted Mohun "not guilty." The actual sword thrust by which Mountford was slain was probably dealt by one Captain Hill, Lord Mohun's "convenient man;" but his Lordship, who was present when the deed was done, was clearly an accessory before the fact. The chief point in his favour was that his sword was in his scabbard when he surrendered to the watch. It was, however, generally believed that, on the principle of qui facit per alium facit per se, he was Mountford's murderer. Mr. Thackeray, in "Esmond," makes one of his characters charge my Lord to his face with stabbing "poor Will Mountford the player."

Mem: The trials of Lord Mohun (he was also tried in 1699 for the murder of Captain Coote in a duel) are wonderfully dramatic in their details. They are only surpassed in social interest by the trial of Beau Fielding for bigamy, and by that of Ford, Lord Grey of Wark, for the abduction of Lady Henrietta Berkeley. I have to thank my correspondent in re Lord Mohun for keeping me up until three in the morning poring over Hargrave's elephantine folios. But I have also to thank him for something else. There is a superb index to Hargrave, comprising a lengthy collection of wise saws in Latin and English, under the head of "Maxims." Among these I find that which to me is a new proverb, "A Grumbletonian in the stirrup is generally a tyrant in the saddle." This is quoted (vol. iii. p. 577) in some voluminous remarks on the trial of William Lord Russell, written by Sir Bartholomew Shower. Many of my readers may be quite familiar with this proverbial locution; but I confess that I never heard of it—nor even of a "Grumbletonian" instead of a "grumbler"—before.

Mem: The self-complacent gentleman who presented his book to Queen Elizabeth, asserting that it contained all the proverbs extant, met with a very telling rebuke from her sagacious Majesty. "Nay; but," said the Queen, "'bate me an ace, quoth Bolton.'" The self-complacent gentleman had not got that locution in his collection.

"Fernande" has been produced with great care and elaborate stage mounting at the Court Theatre, just reopened under the management of Mr. Wilson Barrett. The dramatic critics are at loggerheads touching the merits of Mr. Sutherland Edwards's version of M. Sardou's play. I am not a dramatic critic. I am glad. Still; I may notice that the accomplished critic of the Pall Mall Gazette, speaking of the charming and sympathetic young actress who plays the part of the heroine, remarks that "of Miss Rose Kennedy's Fernande it is not possible to say anything at this moment. On Saturday night it was with plenty of good intention, too formless and unfinished to be taken into consideration. . . . Miss Kennedy may end by making a good deal of it." By the time that the pretty and talented young lady in question succeeds in "making a good deal of it" the accomplished critic of the Pall Mall may arrive at the discovery that her name is not Miss Rose Kennedy, but Miss Rose Kenney, and that she is the daughter of the well-known journalist, dramatist, and critic, Mr. Charles Lamb Kenney.

In the matter of "Death and his Brother Sleep." Obviously, as several correspondents have pointed out, the line stands 278 in the sixth book of the Æneid. Dryden's translation of the passage stands at line 388. One of my correspondents mildly reproaches me for expecting the English poet to compress 278 lines of Latin into as many lines of English. That is very true; but my object in raising the question was to show that the amplification of 278 into 388 lines was excessive. Take the passage—

> Just in the Gate, and in the Jaws of Hell,
> Revengeful Cares and Sullen Sorrows dwell;
> And pale Diseases and repining Age;
> Want, Fear, and Famine's unresisted Rage.
> Here Toils, and Death, and Death's half-brother, Sleep, > Forms terrible to view, their Centry keep.

Here is another version:—

> Just in the Gate and horrid Jaws of Hell
> Sorrow and Fear and pale Diseases dwell,
> Revenging Cares and discontented Age,
> Invincible Necessity and Rage;
> Labour and Death and Sleep to death akin;
> Then all the false delights of deadly sin.

The author of the second version reaches Death and Sleep at line 301 of his sixth book, thus outstripping his original by only twenty-three lines. "Glorious John" outruns the Virgilian constable by 110 lines. Moreover, the second translator, before starting, gives Dryden four lines law at the commencement of the poem. Dryden begins straightway "Arms and the man I sing;" but his rival prefixes to the "arma virumque cano" a translation of the four apocryphal [?] lines beginning, "Ille ego qui quondam, &c., which Spenser has so magnificently paraphrased in the Invocation to the "Faerie Queene"—

> Lo, I, the man whose Muse whilom did maske,
> As time her taught, in lowly shepherd's weeds,
> Am now enforst, a far unfitter taske,
> For trumpets stern to change mine oaten reeds.

The "other" Virgilian translator writes—

> I who on slender Reeds soft Past'rals plaid,
> Then leaving woods the neighbouring country made
> Obedient to the greedy Villager,
> A grateful work to swains: Now Horrid War,
> Arms and the Man I sing.

But who was the "other" translator? The version in my possession is a small octavo of 400 pages; but the titlepage is lacking. The orthography—"Eclog" for Eclogue, "plaid" for played, "pyrats" for pirates—is evidently of the seventeenth century; and the engravings (cut on brass, I should say) are naïve enough to belong to that part of the reign of Charles II. immediately preceding our invasion by the great French line engravers:—the pioneers of the chaleographic army of which the Duboscs and the Grignions were the subsequent commanders.

I am glad to be in receipt of the "Boys' Own Annual, an Illustrated Volume of Prose and Entertaining Reading," edited by James Macaulay, M.A., M.D., which is the outcome from January to October of the Boys' Own Paper, an excellent little weekly periodical of which twelve months ago, in this column, I heralded the coming, and which I am glad to see now in all the newsvenders' shops in the most populous neighbourhoods. The Boys' Own Paper seems to me to be full of entertaining and instructive reading; the illustrations are plentiful and graphic, and the whole volume has a cheerful, robust, and sensible character. G. A. S.

NOVELS.

Anticipations of something demoniacal are likely to be suggested by the title of The Cloven Foot, by the author of "Lady Audley's Secret" (John and Robert Maxwell), and it will not require a very careful perusal of the three volumes to discover that there is considerable ground for those anticipations. At any rate the story contains a murder of a sufficiently diabolical kind, and with this incident are associated suspicions and realities appertaining to bigamy, the bottle, and delirium tremens. The novel, of course, is clever, bearing witness to the writer's acknowledged skill in the art of story-telling; and, though it has seemed good to work upon a foundation of crime and drunkenness, the moral tone is perfectly unobjectionable. The ball is set rolling in a manner which is less remarkable for originality than for the opportunity it offers of creating such complications as arouse the reader's interest and test the writer's ingenuity. We have at the outset an old gentleman who is on the point of death, and who, having great possessions and only one relative in the world, has summonded that relative "to the death bed." The relative "had begun his career with a small fortune and a commission in a crack regiment;" but, while his years were still comparatively few, had "sold out," and sunk into a state of impecuniosity, so that he naturally receives the summons with mixed feelings, in which grief cannot be said to predominate. Now the rich man had adopted a dead friend's daughter, a beautiful young woman at the commencement of the tale, and the impecunious one, who had seen little or nothing for a long while of the dying Dives, has some ground for fearing that the inheritance will be hers. Dives, however, as is nearly always the case in thrilling romances, has made a will in favour of the impecunious one on condition that the gentleman marries the lady within a year. Thus is established a state of things not altogether unfamiliar to novel-readers, but evidently fraught with enormous possibilities in the direction of entanglements. It is out of the question that the gentleman should be disinclined to accept, even with effusion, such agreeable terms; but then, he may be already married On the other hand, he may be unmarried, and yet the young lady may prefer poverty, and even death, to a hateful union with him; she may, in fact, have a previous engagement with the best and handsomest of his sex. But suppose that she listens graciously to his proposals, falls desperately in love with him, indeed, insomuch that she readily marries him—and the property. Well, even then she may be deserted at the church-door, left with nothing save a mysterious letter to atone for her new-made husband's delinquency. But some fine day the wretch may return, and may succeed in explaining his conduct to the satisfaction of a wife only too anxious to have her scruples satisfied. And so they may enter upon a life of bliss, to be interrupted, however, by unpleasant discoveries. He may be recognised as a suspected murderer, who is believed to have rid himself by violence of an inconvenient wife. But at least, if not a murderer, he must be a bigamist. And, if he did not commit the murder, who did? Well, it may have been the other wife's father, a very nice, affable gentleman, but of somewhat irregular habits, who, having found it convenient to retire from public life, may have suddenly emerged from what was erroneously believed to be his grave, just in time to prey upon his daughter and surreptitiously share her good fortune. But, again, if she married a bigamist, neither he nor she can claim the property bequeathed by Dives. Hence, to set things straight and rehabilitate the hero and heroine, it must be shown that no bigamy was committed by him, and that, though unfortunately a murder was committed, no stain of blood rests upon her name. All this is done in the novel under consideration: how it is done shall not be revealed. Suffice it to say that there is nothing very new in the machinery employed, and that a great deal of space is occupied with details which are amusingly handled, though they seem to have very little bearing upon the main business in hand. The novel probably was not intended to teach anything in particular, but it certainly causes one to reflect how much better it would be if people who have property to leave would abstain from attaching absurd conditions to their bequests—conditions which, for all the testator knows, may be, at the very time the testament is made, impossible of fulfilment. In such a case it seems—whatever the law may be—as if the bequest should take effect without regard for the conditions.

The dramatic handling of "Haworth's," by Frances Hodgson Burnett (Macmillan and Co.), is very impressive, and the whole of the story contained in the two volumes is written with so much force and originality and is in itself so interesting that none but the most stolid and insensible of readers can fail to follow its development eagerly from the beginning to the end. If only the literary execution, which is good enough, but not of a particularly high order, were of equal excellence with the conception and general scheme, then indeed the book might claim a place among exceptionally brilliant phenomena. It is, at any rate, a very striking production. Pleasant it cannot be called, it is rather repulsive; but the repulsiveness is of the kind which paralyses and renders escape impossible. Not that there is a total absence of the humorous and the pathetic; on the contrary, there is plenty of both; but the humour is as provocative of tears as of laughter, the pathos flows from a source which is bitter. The tone, for the most part, is hard and unsympathetic; but, being so, it is quite in accordance with the scenes which it has seemed good to depict and with the characters which it has seemed proper to introduce. Nevertheless, out of the strong comes forth sweetness, out of the cold flashes fire; and the effect produced by love upon two different natures, one strong and gentle, the other equally strong but brutal, is delineated with great power and with truthful discrimination, with a due regard for self-control in one case and for demonstrative, outrageous fierceness in the other. There is a heroine, beautiful and love-provoking, but heartless with an inconceivable heartlessness, partly innate, no doubt, but, if so, certainly encouraged and augmented by the cold, calculating conventionalities of life. That she suffers, however, and discovers too late that she has somewhere within her a spark of humanity and a suspicion of womanly sentiment there is some reason to believe, though it is but obscurely hinted, and though we are left to the last in uncertainty as to her motives, whether they be worthy or unworthy, when she repents or seems to repent. Certainly her punishment is greater, her humiliation is more profound, than a novelist of the sterner sex would have dared, one would think, to inflict upon her. A man would scarcely have had the heart or nerve to represent the repentant heroine, having committed no sin, be it understood, more heinous than heartlessness, as stooping to call in person upon her injured and insulted lover, confessing her transgression, professing her love, and being coldly sent away about her business. No man, one would say, could have had the heart to depict such a scene; but a woman would have, nay, has had, no scruple about doing such poetical justice upon one of her own sex. No doubt she deserved it; she almost deserved the insult she endured at the hands of her other lover, Jem Haworth. He, of course, it is who gives the title to the novel, for "Haworth's" means the manufacturing establishment of which Jem Haworth, a self-made man, had risen to be the head after the lapse of some twenty years from the day when he was picked up, at about nine years of age, frozen and starved, from the snow and carried into the "Works," of which he ultimately became the master. With his character and fortunes the novel is mainly occupied, but there is interwoven therewith a tale of an inventor and a model, a very affecting tale as regards the personages connected with it. The writer very properly does not describe the model or enter into particulars concerning the invention; and the reason why must be sufficiently obvious. The scene of the story is laid in Lancashire, so that a good deal of singular dialect and some strange habits of life, which most readers are likely to find new and piquant, are pressed into service. Of the characters it may be roundly stated that there is scarcely one which is not notable for freshness and individuality, well marked and carefully maintained, and that some of the pathetico-humorous personages are perfect gems of description, especially "Granny Dixon." As for Jem Haworth's good, simple, Christian mother, no more delicate, touching, attractive portrait was ever painted in pen and ink; and there is a whole history, a history to make the heart ache, in the few passages devoted to the inventor's wife. Above all, there is no useless verbiage, nothing to interfere with continuous perusal, nothing to divide the attention and dissipate the interest.

Reminiscences of Punch and the young clergyman and the rough miner, who did not "want to argey, yer beggar," are awakened by the opening scene of The Parson o' Dumford, by George Manville Fenn (Chapman and Hall); but the parson of the novel is a very different sort of parson from him of the London Charivari. The parson of the novel is, of course, "the parson o' Dumford;" and in a few pages we have a very distinct idea of the sort of clergyman whose acquaintance we are making, a clergyman of the muscular and free-and-easy school, who will walk a good number of miles, play a fair game of cricket, smoke a pipe of tobacco on every opportunity, drink his beer or his whisky-and-water like a man, exchange rough remarks bluntly but good-humouredly with surly workmen, rebuke the swearer calmly but emphatically, and, should the rebuke lead to assault and battery, exhibit, no doubt, considerable proficiency in the noble art of self-defence. Such is the opinion we form, at the very outset, of the "parson o' Dumford," who, before we have perused a score of pages, has achieved a moral victory over a rough and ready young workman, and who, before the story is very far advanced, has created a favourable impression among sundry parishioners of his by the effective manner in which he handles his fists. Indeed, the novel is remarkable for the prominent position assigned in it to matters connected with bodily force and physical development, whether blows be actually struck, or whether some strapping fellow simply draws up his shirt-sleeves and displays his formidable arm for the admiration of the reader and to the consternation of all beholders save the muscular parson. This parson, as the title of the novel clearly denotes, is the hero of the tale; and for him, with his corporeal, moral, and intellectual excellence, a foil must, of course, be found. Accordingly, as despicable a young cur as ever united in his own person moral depravity and physical insignificance is speedily introduced; and between him and the redoubtable parson a struggle ensues for possession of a sweet young girl. At the first blush it would seem that the contest is a hopelessly unequal one, and that the contemptible scoundrel can stand no chance against the peerless preacher. But the ways of women are passing strange, and a worthless son may have a powerful ally in a devoted mother, who will employ the most questionable devices for the sake of her unworthy darling. Which of the twain, whether the currish layman or the lion-like man of the church, comes triumphantly out of the conflict, and at what cost, shall not be divulged in this place, for to reveal the secret would materially diminish the interest and surprise with which the uninitiated reader will approach the catastrophe. The scene is laid in Lincolnshire, chiefly among working people, who speak a queer language, who drink, some of them, a great deal too much ale, who "strike" in more than one sense of the word, whose reception of a stranger assumes the form of "heaving half a brick at him," who, however, have their good points, and who, at any rate, have supplied a pleasant and observant writer with a variety of characters, some amusing, some powerful, some admirable, some instructive.

The autumn meeting of the Iron and Steel Institute was opened on Wednesday morning in St. George's Hall, Liverpool. Mr. T. B. Royden, the Mayor, welcomed the institute to the town, observing that it was scarcely possible to over estimate the good which meetings of that kind produced from time to time as they were held in various parts of the country, because there took place at them discussions on matters affecting one of the principal industries of the country, and one upon which our great commerce was pretty nearly founded. The Mayor then referred to the importance of the change which was taking place in the substitution of steel for iron, and expressed the hope that their deliberations would be successful and agreeable to themselves. Mr. Edward Williams briefly thanked the Mayor for the kind welcome, and some formal business was then proceeded with. The congress lasted three days.

POLITICAL.

The Prime Minister, in presiding on the 18th inst., at the dinner of the Bucks Agricultural Association in the Corn Exchange at Aylesbury, compressed all his allusions to foreign affairs into what may be termed the belligerent toast of the evening. Thus, in ringing phrase, the Earl of Beaconsfield said, amid much cheering, "the British Army is the guardian of an Empire, and at this moment it is vindicating the power and the fame of that Empire in two quarters of the globe. We wish it God-speed, and cordially drink the health of her Majesty's troops." The Navy and the Marines were also warmly eulogised; and there was antithetical point in the exclamation, "Gentlemen, I say that the British Army is the Garrison of an Empire, but the Volunteer force of England is the Garrison of our hearths and homes." In proposing prosperity to the association, his Lordship began with a gallant reference to the ladies who graced the assemblage. He first filled the chair "at a period which can be remembered by no inhabitant of the galleries, because it is between forty and fifty years ago." But never had the noble Lord met his friends under "circumstances more difficult and desponding than the present." The show they had witnessed was excepted from this gloomy outlook. Agricultural Depression, however, was made the text of his speech. Again did the noble Lord endeavour to fasten upon the Marquis of Hartington a soft impeachment, which the Leader of the Opposition will not accept at any price. Amplifying the charge he first made public at the Mansion House banquet, the Prime Minister insisted that "a high authority" had declared that our present agricultural system had "broken down." But, so far from allowing this, Lord Beaconsfield entered into an elaborate, and not quite clear, argument, the gist of which was that things could not be much mended whilst, as at present, "three classes are dependent upon the produce of the soil." A Utopian scheme for the institution by Government of a system of peasant proprietorships was quoted only to be demolished. There were 5,000,000 peasant proprietors in France, yet "An acre of cereal produces in England double what an acre does in France." But the noble Lord could hardly go further, and say that the peasant in this country is twice as well off as his French contemporary, we venture to suggest. Canada, with its "illimitable wilderness and a wilderness of fertile land," next came in for his Lordship's praise, in order to point the moral that as "Canada expects to be completely successful in beating the United States from the European markets, it is wise for us not to take any precipitate steps." Reduction of rent was the panacea offered for the existing depression—reduction of rent combined with joint action in the spirit of the Agricultural Holdings Act; and the noble Lord concluded with a sweeping condemnation of the "cockney" agitators who cried out against our "free and aristocratic Government," which "you may get rid of, but you will have then a despotism that ends in democracy, or a democracy that ends in a despotism."

The Marquis of Hartington, on the morrow of his opening the new School of Science and Art at Newcastle-on-Tyne (as illustrated in another page), lost no time in replying to Lord Beaconsfield's personal reference to himself. Some of the Armstrong vigour which is native to that energetic industrial centre of the North of England, seemed to have stimulated his Lordship. Never before had he spoken with so much zest and point. For the long and heavy and unwieldy periods of yore were substituted short, effective sentences. The noble Marquis was, in fine, at his best. Having quietly opened the new Junior Liberal Club on the afternoon of the 19th inst., his Lordship proceeded to the Town-hall. Therein a large and enthusiastic meeting had assembled, and the reception Lord Hartington met with was of the heartiest. The chair was taken by Mr. John W. Pease; and Mr. Joseph Cowen, M.P., and Mr. Thomas Burt, M.P., were among the speakers, but they were for the nonce but as the minor luminaries that shone round the central star. The noble Marquis, to begin with, had no doubt that the Junior Liberal Club, albeit it had begun on a small scale would do much good, as such institutions would form "an important part in the organisation of the Liberal Party." Reviewing the political situation, his Lordship confined himself in his Townhall speech to stating that the equalisation of the county with the borough franchise, and the redistribution of seats, would be merely a question of time; and that Lord Beaconsfield had again misrepresented what he had said in the House on the land question. He denied having asserted that "the land system in this country has broken down." The remarks he had made were entirely called forth by the arguments of those speakers who insinuated that, inasmuch as it was hopeless to get a living out of farming, a Royal Commission might bring about a reimposition of protective duties in the interest of agriculturists. To which dark forebodings the noble Marquis said he had made answer that, if it was meant to imply that our land system had failed, then it might be advisable to inquire whether the laws concerning the transfer and succession of land might not be susceptible of improvement. As for the question of peasant proprietorships, he would be very glad to see a greater number of small farmers, not created through special legislation, but by the operation of natural causes. Several addresses from Tyneside Liberal Associations, all worded in terms of hearty appreciation of his Leadership of the Liberal Party in the House of Commons, were finally presented to the noble Lord. It was for the thronged evening meeting in the Tyne Theatre, however, that the Marquis of Hartington reserved his full oratorical force. This remarkably earnest Liberal meeting was presided over by Lord Durham, and was addressed by the noble Earl himself, by Sir Charles Trevelyan, Mr. Ralph Phillipson (the venerable Town Clerk), and Mr. R. S. Watson before Lord Hartington had the opportunity of delivering his exceedingly trenchant attack upon the Government. He smote them with unfailing vigour all along the line. To summarise the philippic, the noble Lord complained that there was even in this "grave crisis" no sign that the Government intended to appeal to the country, and that it was probable "we shall have more foreign complications, more colonial difficulties, more postponed Budgets—(laughter)—in the hope that before the day of reckoning arrives something may turn up, some passing cry may arise which will cause all these things to be forgotten." Sir Stafford Northcote's dictum that "the name of England had been suffered to sink in the estimation of the world by the late Government" was pointedly denied. Why, even Lord Beaconsfield at the last General Election, could only trump up some imaginary charge about the Straits of Malacca, which story had never been heard of since. This palpable hit was keenly relished by the Tynesiders, as was the noble Lord's retort that there was much in the foreign policy of the present Government that bore "an ominous resemblance to the policy of the Second Empire." His Lordship had his audience with him again when he emphatically disputed that the name of England had been raised by the Marquis of Salisbury's Circular or the Berlin Treaty, the Anglo-Turkish Convention or the Treaty of Gundamuk (with respect to which the Cabul Massacre would some day be placed on the right shoulders), the disorder of our finances, or by the way that the Government had lessened the power of Parliament. In conclusion, his Lordship claimed for the Opposition that it had objected to every phase of the Ministerial policy, which it would be the duty of the Liberal Party to undo, in order to restore confidence at home and abroad. Resolutions framed in this spirit were supported by Mr. Beaumont, M.P., Mr. Cowen, M.P., Sir Wilfrid Lawson, M.P., and Mr. Pease, M.P., Sir Wilfrid Lawson evoking cheers by suggesting the Marquis of Hartington as leader in the Commons, Earl Granville as leader in the Lords, Lord Derby as Foreign Secretary, and Mr. Gladstone at the Exchequer, as the foremost members of the next Liberal Cabinet.

The Earl of Derby and the Home Secretary were the principal speakers on the 18th inst. at the inception and completion of more of those public improvements, which have rendered Southport one of the most popular Watering Places in the kingdom. His Lordship brought his common sense to bear upon the general depression with the hopeful view of showing that things are not as bad as they seem. It was noticeable that Mr. Cross trusted that our "wars would soon be ended," and that they might be able to employ several Sessions in dealing with "matters more nearly touching the hearths and homes of those whose guardians they were." Speaking the same day at Peterhead, Mr. Grant Duff followed up his attack upon the Marquis of Salisbury by delivering an Afghan lecture in order to credit the Ministry, and particularly the Foreign Secretary, with the authorship of the Cabul disaster.

The Marquis of Salisbury meanwhile bides his time till the 17th and 18th of next month, when the Foreign Secretary and several of his colleagues are to be entertained at a banquet in the Manchester Free Trade-hall, to be followed by a popular Conservative demonstration in the Pomona Gardens. The 25th of October has been fixed for the Liberal demonstration in honour of the visit of Mr. Bright and the Marquis of Hartington to Manchester, and on the same day Sir Michael Hicks-Beach is to address a Conservative meeting in Birmingham.

Speech-making by men of mark has not been abundant this week. Colonel Stanley turned his sword into a ploughshare at Ulverston on Tuesday; and on the same day Lord Elcho, at Winchcombe, valiantly defended the Zulu and Afghan policy of the Government, Sir Wilfrid Lawson ruthlessly opposed it in Cumberland, and Mr. Torrens received a vote of confidence from his Finsbury constituents. In Ireland the Dublin convention movement has been discountenanced by Mr. Shaw and other prominent members; but Mr. Parnell is carrying on his provincial campaign with unabated vigour. The hon. member (whose ability was markedly recognised by Lord Hartington) was the principal speaker at a large tenant-right meeting held on Sunday at Tipperary. Reduction of rents and fixity of tenure were the remedies recommended for the prevailing distress in Ireland.

The Conservative and Liberal forces are being actively marshalled for the coming General Election. Sir George Grant's triumph over Brodie of Brodie for Moray and Nairn has infused confidence into the Liberals of Scotland. The Maidstone Liberals will stand by Sir John Lubbock and Sir Sydney Waterlow, the Conservative candidates being Major Ross and Captain Aylmer. Travelling to North Devon, we note that Sir Robert Carden was on Tuesday chosen as the Conservative candidate for Barnstaple.

Major Cavagnari was a bright luminary from the school, and one whom all the boys might emulate."

On Monday afternoon the garden at the eastern end of St. Paul's Cathedral, which has been recently laid out under the supervision of the Coal, Corn, and Finance Committee of the Corporation, was opened by the Lord Mayor. The expense of the work has been about £5000, which has been borne by the Corporation; and among the improvements in the churchyard have been the setting back of the rails upon the south side to afford a "refuge" from the road (the excavations in connection with which alteration have revealed some relics of old St. Paul's, including part of the original Chapter-house, and a pier of the old Church of St. Faith), and the planting of the beds in the grounds with laurels and other evergreens.

There were 2573 births and 1366 deaths registered in London last week. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 165, and the deaths by 30, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths included 1 from smallpox, 27 from measles, 60 from scarlet fever, 16 from diphtheria, 36 from whooping-cough, 21 from different forms of fever, and 92 from diarrhœa. In Greater London 3213 births and 1627 deaths were registered. The mean temperature of the air was 57·6 deg., being 0·5 deg. above the average. The duration of registered bright sunshine in the week was 10·1 hours, the sun being above the horizon during 87·4 hours. The recorded duration of sunshine was, therefore, equal to 22 per cent of its possible duration.

The Zoological Society's new lion-house has received an addition in the shape of a tigress and two leopards, presented to the collection by Lord Lytton. The tigress, which is a fine large animal, is one of the notorious man-eaters, and was recently caught in a pit-fall in the Hazaribagh district of Bengal by a native—Babu Rameswari Prasliad Narain Singh—who devoted himself to the capture and destruction of the man-eater's family in consequence of their having stopped all traffic along one of the public roads of the district. Among the other recent additions to the Zoological Society's collection is a specimen of a bush dog (Icticyon venaticus) from British Guiana, presented by Mr. J. Ernest Tinné. The bush dog of South America is a rare and little known species of carnivorous animal belonging to the dog family.

Mr. W. Rossiter, hon. secretary of the South London Working Men's College, writes:—"May I ask for a few lines to tell your readers the result of the first exhibition of fine arts that South London has had? During the vacation of the Working Men's College and the Free Library, the kindness of friends placed at the disposal of the councils some 500 works of art of a total value of some £12,000, and these were arranged for exhibition by Mr. Wyke Bayliss, one of the council, and visited by nearly 4000 persons, who contributed in pennies about £3 towards the expenses. No damage of the slightest kind, even accidental, has been done to the exhibition during the whole time, though the rooms were open free to any who chose to enter, and were sometimes much crowded. It may also be worth stating, to show how easy it is to open such collections, that the whole expenditure, including insurance, cartage, fitting up, and attendance, is about £40. The responsibility of the expense is divided between the council of the Working Men's College and that of the Free Library, each being, however, in want of funds for its ordinary expenditure."

Mr. Sim gallantly jumped overboard without divesting himself of clothing, and swam to their rescue. John Collins, bumboat-man to H.M.S. Indus, was granted the bronze medal for jumping into the sea at Devonport, and saving the life of a stoker of H.M.S. Indus. Testimonials on vellum were voted to the undermentioned persons:—To George H. Sergeant, for plunging into the sea at Devonport and rescuing J. Caldwell from drowning. To Robert H. Nashford, boatman, Ivy Bridge, Devon, for saving a child in the River Yealm. To A. Belbin, for diving into the river at Ipswich and saving a young girl. To Frederick Kemp, for saving J. Gray at Yarmouth. To David Kewly, of Douglas, Isle of Man, for gallantly jumping in with all his clothes on and saving T. Sheard, who fell between two steamers lying at the Victoria Pier. Kewly has been the means of saving more than twenty lives on different occasions. To Mr. Dugald Blue, of Limerick, for jumping into the Shannon without divesting himself of clothing, and rescuing A. M'Arthur. To John Peeryman for saving Mr. G. Bower from drowning in Cowes Roads. To Mr. H. A. Speechly for attempting to save Joseph Kerr from drowning in the Serpentine on Aug. 1. To Gilbert Bunce, coastguard, for saving H. C. Steel in the River Forth. Votes of thanks on parchment and pecuniary rewards were conferred on several persons, and the meeting terminated with thanks to the chairman, Mr. William Hawes.

THE EAST KENT FIRE BRIGADES.

A competitive exhibition of skill among the fire brigades of different towns in the Isle of Thanet and East Kent was held on the 15th inst., at Broadstairs, for the second time, in the pleasure-grounds of Mr. Edmund F. Davis, at St. Peter's Cottage. That gentleman, who is owner of the manor and estate of Westgate-on-Sea, adjacent to Margate, and of the Granville estate at St. Lawrence-on-Sea, Ramsgate, had invited a large company of visitors and spectators upon this occasion. The recent great improvements and embellishments of the place, which is likely to become a fashionable resort and residence for people who like the sea air, were also inspected and admired. The fire-engines which attended were eight in number, all fully manned; two from Margate, which did not compete, and one from Ramsgate, one from Broadstairs, and one respectively from Deal, Sandwich, Ashford, and Westgate-on-Sea; the Ashford one, a steamer by Merryweather. They marched in procession, under command of Mr. Henry E. Davis, captain of the Westgate, Broadstairs, and St. Peter's fire brigades, through Margate and on to Broadstairs, accompanied by the Margate band of music. The Mayor and Town Councillors of Margate were present. Having arrived, the trials of skill and quickness were begun. They were "dry drills," no water being used with the engines. The programme included four drills, the first with six men, the second with four, the the third with two, and the last single-handed. The engines in each drill were put in complete working order—that is to say, the required number of lengths of hose were got ready, the dam set up, fore-carriage locked, pole and sway-bars unshipped, branch screwed on, and levers turned over. Great accuracy was shown by all the men in their work, scarcely a hitch occurring in the whole course of the proceedings. Besides Captain Davis, his fellow honorary secretary of the Kent Fire Brigade Association, Mr. Sidney Wilmot, captain of the Tunbridge Wells Fire Brigade, and Mr. John Knaggs, from Westgate-on-Sea, overlooked the competition, and assisted in organising the performances. The four drills were got through by the Deal brigade in six minutes and five seconds; the Broadstairs team occupied five seconds longer. At the close of the competition, about sunset, the three prizes (which were provided by Mr. Edmund Davis) were presented in the following order of merit:—1, Deal; 2, Broadstairs; 3, Sandwich. During the day, which appeared to have been kept as a holiday, the band of the 2nd Kent Artillery Volunteers from Faversham, and the band from Margate, added considerably to the enjoyment of the visitors. In the evening Mr. and Mrs. Davis entertained a party of friends to dinner.

LAUNCH OF H.M.S. AGAMEMNON.

This new ship of war, the building of which was begun in May, 1876, at Chatham Dockyard, was launched on Wednesday week. She is a two-turret ironclad, resembling the Inflexible, only smaller, and of the central-citadel type designed by Mr. Burnaby to carry out the recommendations of a committee on ships' designs which sat about eight years ago. The cost of the Inflexible is estimated at about £800,000; the Agamemnon, being on a smaller scale, will cost proportionately less. She has a length of 280 ft., compared with 325 ft. for the Inflexible; a breadth of 66 ft., compared with 75 ft., and a displacement in tons of about 8500 compared with 12,000 for the other vessel. She may be described as consisting of three parts, the middle alone being protected by side armour, the ends fore and aft being left unarmoured, except so far as they are protected by decks of 3-inch iron plating. Within the walls of the citadel are contained the magazines, engines, boilers, and ordnance, with its hydraulic loading gear. The armour which protects the citadel is 18 in. thick, and that on the turrets is 16 in. The armour on the sides of the citadel—extending to 6 ft. below the water-line—consists, as in the Inflexible, of armour-plates in two thicknesses, amounting together to 18 in. of iron and steel plating, bolted to a backing of teak varying in thickness from 14 to 15 in. The two revolving turrets are plated with iron 1½ in. thick. The turrets, which are placed in échelon, will contain each two 38-ton guns, and are both of them revolving. The object of placing the turrets in this manner, instead of being, as in other ships, on a line with the keel, is to enable the four guns to be brought to bear upon a point right forward, right aft, or right abeam—in other words, to enable all the guns to be used at once, or on either beam, or in pairs, in any direction that may be required. With a displacement of 8500 tons, the draught of water, with all her weights on board, is to be 23 ft. forward and 25 ft. aft. The Agamemnon will be propelled by engines of an indicated horse-power of 6000 horses, built by Messrs. Penn and Sons, of Greenwich, capable of propelling her at a speed of thirteen knots an hour. According to the new system of classification of ships, depending on the number of the crew, the Agamemnon, carrying 325 officers and men in her ship's company, will rank as a third-class ship; but in fact she will be one of the most formidable ships in the British Navy, inferior only to the Inflexible, with her four 80-ton guns. The Agamemnon's power of attack will not be limited to her four great guns, for she will be provided with Whitehead torpedoes, to be discharged from ports in the sides of the citadel. There are at present in course of construction at Chatham Dockyard the armour-plated frigate the Conqueror; the Polyphemus, a powerful ram; the Constance, a steam corvette, steel and iron-cased with wood, of 2300-horse power; and the Dottrell, a six-gun composite steam-sloop of 900-horse power, besides torpedo-vessels and others. The Nelson, armour-plated frigate, is completed, and the Northampton, of the same class, is lying in port, and will be commissioned on the 25th of the present month.

The First Lord of the Admiralty, the Right Hon. W. H. Smith, M.P., with his colleagues, Admiral Sir Cooper Key, Admiral Lord Gilford, Sir Massey Lopes, M.P., and the Hon. Mr. Egerton, M.P., went to Chatham for the launch. They were received by Admiral Brandreth, Superintendent of the Dockyard, and the officials there. The ceremony was attended also by Admiral Sir Houston Stewart, Controller of the Navy, Admiral Sir Reginald Macdonald, commander-in-chief at Sheerness, Mr. Nathaniel Burnaby, C.B., Mr. R. P. Saunders, Chief Constructor, Mr. Eames, Chief Engineer, several military officers, the Earl of Darnley, the Rev. Canons Miller and Hawkins, and some gentlemen and ladies of the neighbourhood. Mrs. W. H. Smith performed the act of moving a lever placed on a table at the head of the launching-slip. This motion released some heavy suspended weights, the fall of which struck down the huge props, called "dog-shores," by which, at each side of the ship, it had been kept from sliding down the inclined slippery ways. The launch was preceded with a religious service by the Rev. J. Picton, chaplain to the dockyard. This consisted of a portion of the 107th Psalm, beginning at the twenty-third verse, "They that go down to the sea in ships and occupy their business in great waters;" a collect written by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord's Prayer, and a benediction. Mrs. Smith, as she liberated the great ship, exclaimed, "Success to the Agamemnon." Immediately a slight movement became perceptible; the cry, "She moves! she moves!" burst forth, and the Agamemnon, her rate of progress increasing at every second, glided majestically along the ways, amidst the enthusiastic cheers of the assemblage and of the workmen crowding the deck, the Royal Marine band playing the National Anthem and "Hearts of Oak." In a little over a minute the ship was brought up in mid stream; she was afterwards towed down the river, and has since been placed in dock to be fitted with her armament and engines. After the ceremony the First Lord of the Admiralty and the leading officials and company were entertained at luncheon.

NEW BOOKS.

Members of Parliament who "change sky but not mind" during the vacation, and go travelling and hunting in distant lands, would do well to imitate the example offered in the publication of the handsome volume entitled Wanderings in the Western Land, by A. Pendarves Vivian, M.P., F.G.S. (Sampson Low and Co.), an interesting and exhilarating work, provided with noble and useful maps, and embellished with numerous illustrations, of which it is no exaggeration to say that some are really splendid. This statement will be the easier to believe when it is explained that Mr. Albert Bierstadt, as well as the author, had a hand in the original sketches on which the illustrations are based. It was in August, 1877, that the author set out for "a few months' wanderings in North America," and he might probably, had it seemed good to him, have published his reminiscences long ago; but there may have been excellent reasons for the delay. Better late than never, whatever the reasons may have been. The few months were "spent chiefly in 'hunting' in the Rocky Mountains," as hunting is there understood; and as he was told by good judges that he was "in luck on the hunt," he had additional grounds for making known his experiences to the thousands for whom such narratives have an indescribable charm. And those thousands count among them not only the multitude of practical sportsmen, but many a reader who never felt the kick of a rifle against the shoulder, who never threw a line for trout or salmon. On Aug. 14, 1877, then, our author ran into the harbour of St. John's, Newfoundland, where cargo was landed; thence, in due time, into the harbour of Halifax. From Halifax he started on his hunting expedition with tents, camp utensils, and other paraphernalia, in company with one Sandie Macdonald, "a true Highlander and a good stalker," a colley dog, and an Irish water spaniel. He journeys a long distance on the Intercolonial Railway, both main line and branch, and ultimately arrives at the spot whence he is to sally forth "after bear," having in the meanwhile, apparently, engaged the services of an Indian hunter as Sandie's auxiliary. Not having any success with bear, and it being the close time in Nova Scotia for moose, he moves on, with some companions added to his former train, into "the neighbouring province of New Brunswick, where there are bear," and where, moreover, there is no close time for moose or caribou. After a very little sport, a further move is made to Quebec, on the way to the Rocky Mountains. Niagara and its fascinations, with pertinent anecdotes, are touched upon; and many pages are occupied with many topics, until at last the reader comes upon "the track of a grizzly," a chance is proffered, and "ursus ferox" falls "without a groan" before the Englishman's reputed necessity of "killing something," especially on a fine day. But it is not only of hunting, fishing, canoeing, and so on, that the author discourses; all subjects likely to entertain and instruct the reader are handled at more or less length. Geological matters come in for their share of notice both in text and in map, the latter being coloured according to various formations. So that, altogether, the book is attractive from its very diversity, which tends to the gratification, to some extent, of as many tastes as there are classes of readers. The most exciting part of the narrative, so far as the author is personally concerned, is that wherein he tells the story of his being "lost." It was certainly a terribly trying situation, and he may well say: "This night will be ever remembered by me. The feeling of being lost was a strain on my nerves such as I had never before experienced, and trust I may never again be subjected to, and I can quite understand that a man might lose his senses under such circumstances." To be exhausted and freezing during midwinter and at night in "a most severe climate," and, when day comes and the sun lights up the scene, not to recognise a single outline or feature in the whole landscape is a state of things as dreadful almost as any from which men pray in the Litany to be delivered.

It would be well to read up in an encyclopædia the article devoted to "Buddhism" before entering upon the more agreeable task of perusing The Light of Asia, by Edwin Arnold, M.A., F.R.G.S., &c. (Trübner and Co.), which is a poem scarcely to be properly appreciated without some special knowledge or some special preparation. The smoothness and elegance of the blank verse, and the grace and picturesqueness of the language are, no doubt, within the capacity of any intelligent and cultivated English reader to enjoy, but to enter into the spirit of the poem is another matter altogether. Indeed, the author himself says that "to appreciate the spirit of Asiatic thoughts they should be regarded from the Oriental point of view;" for which reason he has put his "poem into a Buddhist's mouth." The preliminary step, then, is to discover what position would be taken up by the said Buddhist, and what spectacle would be presented thence. The object of the poem is "to depict the life and character and indicate the philosophy of that noble hero and reformer, Prince Gautama of India, the founder of Buddhism." The poem is divided into eight books; and in every book the reader is likely to be struck with the quiet beauty of the descriptions, the mingled humanity and divinity of the doctrines, the elevation of the sentiments, the charming simplicity of the illustrative examples, the easy and musical flow of the numbers. We are told that "four hundred and seventy millions of our race live and die in the tenets of Gautama;" and Christians who read the poem will be constrained to admit that there is a strong fundamental resemblance between those tenets and their own, as regards the rules which should regulate the practice of life. And there are other points of resemblance which invest with a peculiar interest this elegant poem in honour of "Lord Buddha" and his law.

The famous picturesque bit of woodland scenery called "the Burnham Beeches," distant an hour's walk from the Slough railway-station on the Great Western line, which is within an hour's journey from London, has lately been much talked of. Mr. Francis George Heath, the well-known author of several popular books about trees and ferns and other pleasant ruralities, bestirred himself last June to save this interesting remnant of Old England's natural beauty from builders' bricks and mortar. The City Corporation, with the assistance of Sir H. W. Peek, M.P., has secured it, at a moderate cost, for public enjoyment; and Mr. Heath, in a neat little volume, published by Messrs. Sampson Low and Co., presents an agreeable literary memorial of this gratifying transaction. His account of Burnham Beeches may be taken in the pocket, and read in the railway carriage, as one travels from Paddington to Slough for the holiday purpose of visiting that attractive spot, which is near the still more renowned "Country churchyard" of Stoke Poges, and is likewise associated with the tasteful English poet, Gray, familiar to every reader from the earliest studies of verse or prose. Mr. Heath's descriptive and historical notices are accompanied with a small map and eight fine wood-engravings, from drawings by Mr. Birket Foster and photographs by Mr. Vernon Heath.

The Art of Practical Whist, by Colonel Drayson, R.A. (Routledge and Sons), comprises a series of letters addressed to tyros in the art, in which the principles of the game are set forth with a clearness and a precision often found wanting in more pretentious works upon the subject. The letters, or lessons, touch upon all the points of modern scientific play, including the much-abused "blue peter," and its most recent development, "the echo;" but those dealing with "leads" and inferences from leads will be found the most useful to beginners. There is a curious slip of the pen or printer's error on the fourth page of our copy (corrected, we believe, in subsequent editions), a score of three being credited to the holders of three honours. In such a case the score is, of course, two, and this is so universally known that the error is not likely to mislead even the tyro. The book is a valuable addition to the literature of whist.

ADMISSION OF WOMEN TO UNIVERSITY COLLEGE.

The second session since the admission of Women to full rights of students in the classes of Arts and Science at University College, London, will begin next week. Experience of the first session completely justified the boldness with which equal claims of women and men to a liberal education had been met by the College when the time was ripe for such a recognition. Except that the women have a separate common room, with female attendants, and that there are, for different reasons, a few classes open only to women, and a few open only to men, the Faculties of Arts, and Laws, and of Science at University College admit women and men as fellow students upon terms in every respect equal. In the last session, which was the first of the new system founded on ten sessions of experiment, the number of women studying in the college was 211. In the last two of the years during which only male students had been recognised, the annual increase in the number of entries to these Faculties had been respectively eleven and ten. In the first year of the new system the increase of men alone was fifty, which added to the 211 women then first admitted made a total increase of 261. There was no difficulty whatever in the working of the system; the sense and courtesy that regulates society in the outside world, where men and women are accustomed to meet daily, are not wanting in the minds of students; there was no breach of college discipline, nor was there even a breach of courtesy within the knowledge of the Deans. The rapid extension of work done by the College and its associated School is indicated by the fact that the whole number of persons studying within its walls, which, in 1865, was 828, is now more than 2000. Builders are now at work upon an addition to the North Wing, which will cost about £30,000, of which, during the short time since a Building Fund has been established, more than £20,000 have been already subscribed.

The new Preston Railway Station, which has cost £240,000, was opened last Saturday.

The 13th Regiment arrived at Plymouth on the 18th inst. from Zululand, on board the Euphrates troop-ship.

The Birmingham Post states that Mr. G. P. Wragge has appropriated £2000 of the "Ingleby Fund" towards the new works at the General Hospital.

The Southwold Railway, nine miles in length, connecting Southwold with the Great Eastern Railway at Hailsworth, was opened for public traffic on Wednesday morning.

The Blackpool Town Council have availed themselves of the powers conferred upon them by Act of Parliament last session to light the town by electricity. The promenade and piers are brilliantly lighted with six of Siemens' patents.

At a meeting of the committee for erecting a local memorial to the late Sir Rowland Hill, held at Kidderminster yesterday week, it was reported that the subscriptions received amounted to £1696.

Last week's importations of meat at Liverpool from the United States and Canada amounted to 1274 head of cattle and 5537 sheep, besides 4680 quarters of beef and 1264 carcases of mutton.

The Superb, one of the ironclads bought from the Turkish Government, which has since undergone extensive alterations at Chatham, was on Monday floated out of the docks. She will shortly be ready for sea.

Three Congregationalist ministers were struck off the Parliamentary list of voters for the southern division of the West Riding on Monday at the Revision Court, held at Sheffield, on the ground that the trust deeds of the chapels at which they preached did not properly describe their qualification.

The Belgian Tir National was formally opened on Sunday by the Minister of Instruction, the King being unavoidably absent. An attempt to get up an English team to compete with those of Belgium was unsuccessful, so that English workmen will take part only in the "Concours Personnel."

Tuesday's Gazette contains the following:—The Board of Trade has received from the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs a copy of the decree of the French Government permitting the temporary free admission of tissues of silk mixed with cotton or other materials intended to be printed, dyed, or dressed in France, and subsequently re-exported.

An aeronaut, making an ascent from Rostow, on the Don, recently, was about to alight when shots were aimed at him, and on nearing the ground found a crowd armed with scythes, hatchets, and stones, preparing for an attack. On assuring them he was a mortal like themselves, a priest, extending a crucifix, told him to cross himself if he was a man and a Christian. He did so, and presently some one arrived and explained the mystery of ballooning to the people.

"Onesimus," a new Dutch annual devoted to practical philanthropy, gives an interesting history and report of the agricultural colony Netherlands Mettray. Like its French model and namesake (founded in 1840 by Demetz) Netherlands Mettray is an agricultural colony for young criminals, who must not be under ten and not over fourteen years of age. Since the day of its foundation Dutch Mettray has sheltered more than 900 lads. The grounds of the institution, originally a gentleman's estate, cover 62 hectares, and the produce of the soil, together with donations, subscriptions, and legacies, proves sufficient to board and educate from 130 to 140 boys at a time. Most of the lads at Mettray, after they have received the ordinary school instruction, are put to a useful trade, unless they prefer farming or a military career at the Instruction-Battalion. Those who ultimately leave the colony with the full consent of the Directing Body are certain of finding work and assistance. Netherlands Mettray is easily reached from Arnheim.

OPENING OF THE SYDNEY EXHIBITION.

The ceremony of opening the Sydney International Exhibition (as we learn through Reuter's Agency) was performed on the 17th inst., in beautiful weather, by Lord Augustus Loftus, the Governor of New South Wales. The day was observed as a public holiday, and the streets were densely crowded by the townspeople and visitors from all parts.

The proceedings began with a procession of the public bodies, who were followed by Lord Augustus Loftus, the Marquis of Normanby, Governor of Victoria; Sir W. F. D. Jervois, Governor of South Australia; Mr. Weld, Governor of Tasmania, with their respective staffs; the Colonial Ministers, and the military, naval, and civic authorities. The procession paraded the principal streets and reached the Exhibition at noon, where Lord Loftus performed the ceremony of unveiling the statue of Queen Victoria amidst great enthusiasm. His Excellency then proceeded to the dais, which was surrounded by a brilliant assemblage, consisting of the Commissioners of the foreign countries and of the Australian and other colonies which have sent exhibits to Sydney, the colonial members of Parliament, the clergy, Judges, and others. The whole spectacle was of a most imposing character. After the choir had performed an inaugural cantata, the Sydney Commissioners presented an address to Lord Augustus Loftus, asking him to declare the Exhibition open. His Lordship, in replying to the address, congratulated the colony upon the success of its efforts to gather together in its capital a representation of the arts, and of the achievements of the industrial forces of the entire globe. The event, he said, was an epoch in Australian progress. After welcoming in appropriate terms the various foreign and colonial representatives, the Governor formally declared the Exhibition open. The announcement was received with the firing of salutes; and the choir sang the National Anthem.

The Colonial Governors were then conducted through all the courts of the Exhibition, and were introduced to the several foreign Commissioners, who awaited their approach in the sections devoted to the exhibits of their respective countries. The whole ceremony was universally considered a great success. The concourse of people was immense. The main building, which is styled the Garden Palace, is much admired. The exhibits represent the products of England, almost all foreign countries, and the Australian and other colonies.

The Colonial Office has been officially informed by the Governor of New South Wales of the opening of the Sydney Exhibition.

Other information comes to the effect that there is a gigantic display of agricultural implements already in order. The machinery-in-motion department is not yet completely ready; but the preparations are on a great scale, and there is every reason to believe that this department will be of great interest and practical use. The pottery and glass section is very good and extensive. There are 800 British industrial exhibitions and 513 fine-art entries, including photographs. Germany has 695 entries, including 108 fine art; Austria, 170; France, 350 industrial and 168 fine art; Belgium, 236 industrial and 50 paintings; America has 150 industrial collections. Among the best filled sections are railway apparatus and material, steel and cutlery from Sheffield, guns and miscellaneous manufactures from Birmingham, Manchester goods, sewing cottons, cloths, hats, india-rubber manufactures, chemicals, preserved foods, lamps and stoves, paper and stationery.

The British Government collections comprise those of the Admiralty, Science and Art Department, and the School Board for London. The paintings include those lent by the Queen and Prince of Wales, and by the Society of Arts. There are 175 British oil-paintings, 111 water colours, and ninety-seven architectural drawings. At a banquet held to celebrate the opening of the Exhibition, the Queen's health was received with great enthusiasm, and warm acknowledgments were expressed for the appointment by her Majesty of the British Royal Commission for the Australian Exhibitions, an appointment which added so considerably to the prestige of the undertakings.

Much gratitude is felt for the valuable services rendered by the Prince of Wales as President of the Royal Commission; to the Earl of Belmore as president of the London Commissioners; and to Sir Daniel Cooper, the chairman, and to Mr. Edmund Johnson, the hon. secretary, of the London Committee, to whose active initiation of the movement in England it is felt is mainly due its subsequent success in Europe generally.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

The annual prize-meeting of the A (Captain Patry's) company of the 19th Middlesex took place at Epsom on the 17th inst., when several cups and other prizes of value were competed for. There was not much wind, but the light was very bad, and made the shooting, especially at the longer ranges, exceedingly difficult. The Roebuck Cup was won by Sergeant Ramsay, who also carried off the A and B companies' challenge cup. In series A, the first prize (£4) was taken by Corporal Wright, the second, third, fourth, and fifth falling to Sergeant Ramsay, Colour-Sergeant Youngman, Lieutenant Swain, and Private Hooper, while Private Church took the Consolation Prize for the best score at 400 yards.

At Wormwood-scrubbs on the 17th inst. there was a rifle-match between twenty men of the Scots Guards and twenty men of the Westminster Rifles, the former firing with the Martini-Henry, the latter with the Snider. The Guards scored 1485, the Volunteers 1521.

A rifle-shooting competition between the officers of the Edinburgh Volunteers and those of the Robin Hood came off yesterday week on the Nottingham rifle range, and resulted in a victory for the home team by eleven points.

The members of the London Brigade of Royal Naval Artillery competed last Saturday at Child's Hill for a series of prizes presented by Lady Ashley, the wife of the Commandant, the weapon used being the short snider. Chief Petty Officer S. Brooks was the winner of Lady Ashley's prize, and No. 4 battery of the batteries prize.—The annual repository competition of the 1st London Artillery for the prizes presented by the City of London companies came off the same day at Wellington Barracks, in the presence of Captain Morgan, Royal Artillery, who acted as judge, Captain Adams, and other officers. Nine detachments entered, the operation performed being the mounting and dismounting of a 40-pounder. The result was as follows:—Quartermaster-Sergeant Coutt's detachment, 3 min. 26 sec.; Sergeant-Major Ellis's detachment, 3 min. 34 sec.; Sergeant-Major Badger's detachment, 3 min. 43 sec.; and Sergeant Wilshere's detachment, 3 min. 47 sec. Captain and Adjutant Fitzgerald Studdert was in command.—The annual carbine contest of the 2nd Middlesex (her Majesty's Customs) Artillery was held at the ranges at Purfleet. Seventy competitors entered, and fired five rounds at 200 and 300 yards. The first prize was won by Sergeant-Major Lee, and for the second there was a tie between Gunners Watkins and Mair.

On Tuesday the match between teams of the 2nd Middlesex and 4th Surrey Administrative Battalion came off, the Surrey men once more meeting those of Middlesex on the ground of the latter. Captain Reid-Todd was captain of the 2nd, and the 4th were led by Captain Sweeting. The net result of the Middlesex shooting was 784. The eight men of the Surrey team had 563 placed to their account, but the two lowest of Middlesex, as previously agreed upon, being added (130), swelled the total to 693, which thus gave Middlesex a majority of 91 points. Captain Sweeting gained the tankard awarded to the maker of the highest score; and Menpes received a pewter for making the highest score on the winning side.

On the same day, at Wormwood-scrubbs, No. 20 company of the 36th Middlesex, commanded by Captain the Hon. Alan De Tatton Egerton, competed for their annual prizes, which were won as follow:—The Company Champion Badge, Captain the Hon. A. Egerton's Challenge Cup, and the first prize in the company prize fund, by Colour-Sergeant Rowland. Pioneer Doggett received second prize and a cup; and the remainder, in money and 'kind, were awarded to Privates Crown, Barker, Hurle, and Hunter, Corporal W. C. Hunter, and Privates Digby, Nicholds, and Pursey. The commanding officer's (Lieutenant-Colonel Gordon Ives) prizes were won by Colour-Sergeant Rowland, Pioneer Doggett, and Privates Crown and Nicholds.—The prize-meeting of No. 8 company of the same regiment was also held. Series B—First prize and company badge, Private M'Kellar; second, Sergeant Woodley; third, Sergeant Trimnell; fourth, Private Whittamore; fifth, Corporal Waller; sixth, Colour-Sergeant Sharpe; and seventh, Sergeant Brown. Second Series: Commanding Officers' Prizes—First, Sergeant Trimnell; second, Private M'Kellar; third, Corporal Smith; fourth, Private Whittamore.

TESTIMONIALS.

THOMAS FAIRBANK, M.D., of Windsor, referring to Anti-Fat in the "British Medical Journal" of June 7, 1879, says:—
"I gave some of this extract (Fucus Vesiculosus) to a very corpulent lady, who in three months lost three stones in weight without any change of diet. Since then I have frequently given it for reducing weight, depending on the accumulation of adipose tissue, and have never found it fail. I may state that a patient who has been lately taking it as an anti-fat, and who always suffered very much from rheumatic pains about the body, has been entirely free from such trouble while she has been taking the extract, a fact which she quite independently noted."

EDWARD PARRETT, Esq., Chemist, of Market-square, Winslow, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 12, 1879:—
"One lady to whom I have sold Allan's Anti-Fat has decreased 9lb. in four weeks."

THOMAS NEWBOULD, Esq., Chemist, of Bradford, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 11, 1879:—
"The gentleman for whom I obtained four bottles of Allan's Anti-Fat has derived great benefit from the same, and has recommended it to a friend. Please send me one dozen at once."

C. J. ARBLASTER, Esq., Chemist, of Birmingham, writes, under date of June 4, 1879:—
"Have just received a capital account of the effects of Anti-Fat in reducing corpulency."

"23, Redcliffe-street, South Kensington, S.W., June 2, 1879.
"To the Proprietors of Allan's Anti-Fat.
"Gentlemen,—I have tried your wonderful medicine Anti-Fat both in America and this country. Through its use I can thin down at command, closing on an average five pounds per week.—Yours respectfully, "HARRY BRAHAM."

T. L. REEVE, Esq., of Birmingham, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of July 1, 1879:—
"A gentleman having used one dozen bottles of Allan's Anti-Fat, reports a satisfactory reduction."

J. A. STEWARD, Esq., of Worcester, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of June 18, 1879:—
"Three bottles of Anti-Fat have produced a wonderful effect."

HERR F. ARNOTT, of the Elbe, Prussia, writes the Botanic Medicine Company, under date of July 15, 1879:—
"I have much pleasure to inform you that by taking six bottles of your Allan's Anti-Fat I am ten pounds lighter."

Physician to the Westminster Hospital.
"The value of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL as a therapeutic agent in a number of diseases, chiefly of an exhaustive character, has been admitted by the world of medicine; but, in addition, I have found it a remedy of great power in the treatment of many Affections of the Throat and Larynx, especially in Consumption of the latter, where it will sustain life when everything else fails."

DR. PROSSER JAMES,
Lecturer on Materia Medica, London Hospital.
"DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL contains the whole of the active ingredients of the remedy, and is easily digested. Hence its value, not only in Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, but in a great number of cases to which the Profession is extending its use."

LENNOX BROWNE, Esq., F.R.C.S.E.,
Senior Surgeon Central London Throat and Ear Hospital.
"The action of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL has proved, in my own experience, particularly valuable, not only in those diseases for which it was originally employed, but also in many cases of Weakness of the Singing and Speaking Voice, dependent on Bronchial or Laryngeal Irritation, and in all forms of Strumous Enlargement of Glands, and Discharges from the Ear."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S.,
Late Staff Surg., Army, Prof. of Hygiene, Birkbeck Institution.
"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of "hydro-carbons" in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognised."

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL is sold ONLY in capsuled IMPERIAL Half-Pints, 2s. 6d.; Pints, 4s. 9d.; Quarts, 9s.; by all respectable Chemists and Druggists throughout the World.

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS OF THE LATE SIR LOUIS CAVAGNARI.

The following account of personal recollections of the late Sir Louis Cavagnari is from the pen of Mr. William Simpson, our Special Artist in Afghanistan:—

During the first part of the Afghan campaign I was attached to the Peshawur Field Force, which acted on the line of the Khyber, Jellalabad, and Gundamuk. It was to this force that the late Sir Louis Cavagnari was attached in a political capacity; and as I saw a good deal of him during the six months, which was about the time the campaign lasted, the editor of the Illustrated London News has asked me to relate any recollections I have of the man, thinking that they would be of interest just now to the public. My first introduction to him, at that time Major Cavagnari, was at Ali Musjid on Nov. 21 last year. The guns of the Afghan fort had opened fire, and were continuing it against our artillery, which had begun to reply from the Shagai heights, and while the usual civilities, which such engines send to each other, were knocking about, Major Cavagnari, seeing that I was sketching the ground, introduced himself to me, to point out the village of Lala Cheena and all the spots connected with the stoppage of Sir Neville Chamberlain's Mission, which had occurred in the September previously, and to which Mission, it may be remembered, he was attached. When we advanced to Dakka my tent chanced to be placed next to Major Cavagnari's, and although our stay at this place was short, it gave me some experience of the man. It was here I made the sketch of him holding a Jirgah, held just behind our tents, with the Shinwarries, an illustration of which appeared at the time in the Illustrated London News. I began also at this place to see evidence of his activity and devotion to the functions of his appointment. I found at times in the morning that Cavagnari was gone, his tent was empty, and he was reported to have started during the night on some expedition or another. It might be a raid, or an attempt to capture the Mir Akhor, or a rush off with a small escort to arrange with some Afghan chief about guarding the roads.

Sir Samuel Browne's head-quarters reached Jellalabad on Dec. 20. On the morning of our entry I started off early with Major Cavagnari, Major Sanford, and one or two more of the head-quarter staff. I dropped behind before we reached the town, so that I entered by myself a few minutes later than the others. Up to that time we had had no experience of Ghazis—those who hope to reach Paradise by killing Kaffirs or Infidels, but their attempts a few days later upon the lives of our soldiers led to the order given afterwards that no one was to enter Jellalabad without a sufficient escort. So I rode in that morning at the Peshawur Gate and through the Bazaar, all alone, thoughtless of danger, returning the salute of "Salaam Alaikoom" to the Mahomedans, and saying "Ram, Ram" to the Hindoos, who seemed delighted, for to them our occupation of the place was a gratifying event. The same day Major Cavagnari received a letter from Shere Ali announcing his departure from Cabul. On my expressing a desire to see and sketch the seal of the Ameer, Major Cavagnari at once submitted the letter to me for inspection. The document was written in Persian, on the usual brownish Oriental paper. The seal was in the Torgha character, and about the size of a sixpence.

During our long stay at Jellalabad, my intercourse with Major Cavagnari became more intimate, and when he learned that I was desirous of making explorations in some of the Buddhist Remains in that region, he at once provided a working party for such operations, on the condition that all sculptures and coins were to be the property of Government. He rode out with me one morning, shortly after the digging had been commenced, to the Ahin Posh Tope, where the men were at work; and on seeing remains of architecture beginning to appear which had been buried for at least a thousand years, he desired me to have more men put on, and gave orders to double the number. The final result of all this, after about two months' work, was that I brought to light important details of the ancient Buddhist architecture, all being quite new to students of that subject, and I was fortunate enough to come upon a deposit of twenty gold coins, every one dating from about the first or second centuries of the Christian era, and a gold relic-holder, all of which I handed over to Major Cavagnari, who sent them on to Lord Lytton at Calcutta. The natives hearing of these explorations came and reported the existence of other remains, regarding which they told their own traditionary belief, and offered to show the places to Major Cavagnari. Instead of going himself he asked me to do so, and I went on more than one of these inquests. One was a cave at Hada, which, according to the native who reported it, went under ground to an unlimited distance. I had had experience of tales of this kind before, and consequently knew what to expect; but, being anxious not to allow anything which might be important to escape notice, I went, and found, as I anticipated, that the cave had nothing remarkable about it. Another excursion of this kind I made was across the Cabul River, and up the Kunar Valley, about fourteen miles, to see some Buddhist remains in that quarter. At Kona-deh, there is an old tope, which the Khan said we might explore; but I judged it useless to go such a distance to work when we had better ground nearer at hand in the Jellalabad Valley. This was a very pleasant visit, for Major Cavagnari had arranged that Major Stewart, of the Guide Corps, should go with me, and his familiarity with the language was most useful in getting information; and Ahmed Khan, of Shewa, one of the chiefs, went about with us, and treated Major Stewart and myself to a repast in the Afghan style of hospitality, sitting under the mulberry-trees close to the door of his village.

A day or so after the advance to Gundamuk, General Gough made a reconnaissance as far as the Surkhpool, on the Surkhab. I went out with this party, and Major Cavagnari also accompanied it. We had General Maunsell and a number of the head-quarter staff with us; and Sirdar Wali Mohammed Khan was also in the party. On our return we came by Ishpan, and visited the Ziaret of Shaik Raheem Dad, known as the Dabad Ziaret, from its having the reputation that cases of rheumatism can be cured at it. A sketch of this shrine appeared in the Illustrated London News two weeks ago. Seeing me making a sketch, Major Cavagnari called my attention to a chuprassie, his constant attendant, who was circumambulating the grave with the most serious aspect, at the same time beating his limbs with a bunch of dried reeds. He said, "put him in, I never saw him before saying his prayers, but I suppose the bare possibility of a cure for his rheumatism is too good a chance to be lost." As I saw a good deal of this man, I have been watching the late news from Cabul to see if it might contain any news of his fate. I am inclined to fear that the poor fellow's rheumatism will not now trouble him. The people in the district about Gundamuk, hearing of our explorations at Jellalabad, brought in objects which they said had been discovered in topes; one of these was an old brass lamp, which they affirmed had been got in a tope near Nickar Kheyl. From the ornament on it I was inclined to doubt that its antiquity could possibly be so far back as the Buddhist period. It was some time before we managed to get anyone able to make out what appeared to be letters, but at last Major Lovett was able to decipher on it Allah il Allah, and its post Buddhist character was settled. Before this had been made out Major Cavagnari had determined to present it to the Royal Asiatic Society in London, and for that purpose he sent it home to the care of Colonel Yule, and this interesting relic will now be preserved. This lamp led to an excursion. It became important, while the date of the object was under discussion, to see the tope in which it was said to have been found. For this purpose Major Cavagnari made the arrangement for me to go and see the place, and he also made one of the party himself, taking with him Haider Khan, one of the principal chiefs of Gundamuk. The occasion was considered favourable for giving the survey officers a chance of fixing some of their points; so we had them, and Colonel Jenkins, commanding the Corps of Guides, and one or two officers of the 10th Hussars also accompanied us. Thus we formed a large party. We ascended the Suffaid Koh, on the eastern side of the gorge, from which the Murkhi Kheyl stream flows out of the hills. At about 8000 ft. I stopped to make a sketch of the country, looking across the Ishpan Plain to Jugdulluk, which gave a very fine view, with glimpses of the Hindoo Khush in the far distance beyond. The surveying officers and most of the others went up about 1000 ft. higher, and reached the snow; but Major Cavagnari remained with me while I sketched, and his faithful chuprassie kindled a fire of wood, for it was cold at that height. We had an old man with us named Mullik Meer Alum, a Khugiani, belonging to Murkhi Kheyl, who remembered all about the former war; and while Cavagnari was sitting here he kept up a conversation with him about the details of the retreat from Cabul in 1842. This old fellow told how the few stragglers made their last fight on the hill near Gundamuk, and that they fought like devils. No one would go near them while their ammunition lasted, but when that was done the attack was made. The position on Sept. 3 last in the Residency at Cabul was so similar, as a life or death contest, to what was described to us sitting on the sides of the Suffaid Koh on that day, I cannot help thinking that it must have come back to the mind of Cavagnari even in the midst of the tumult and excitement of the last dreadful struggle. When our party came down the hill, Haider Khan led us to one of the villages, where we all sat down to an ample feast. It was in Afghan fashion; we used our fingers as forks; and a thick chupatie, or cake, served as a plate, while a large thin chupatie did duty as a table-napkin, or could be eaten as bread, according to taste.

On the day that the Treaty of Gundamuk was signed I went over in the morning to Major Cavagnari's tent, and found that he had been up till two o'clock in the morning writing out himself the English version on the two copies of the treaty; and on my entrance I found Bakhtiyar Khan busy on one of them, writing the Persian translation, while Mirza Mahommed Nabi Khan, the private secretary of Yakoob Khan, was flat on the ground with the other copy beneath him, to which he was adding the Persian version. Habibullah Khan, the Mastaufi, was on his knees carefully watching that no mistakes were being made by this writer, while Cavagnari and Mr. Jenkyns were on the other side keeping a look out for the same purpose on Bakhtiyar Khan. That same afternoon the Treaty of Gundamuk was signed by Yakoob Khan, on the one hand, and by Major Cavagnari, for the Government of India, on the other; and Mr. Jenkyns during the night started with them for Simla—riding back to Peshawur in an incredibly short space of time—for ratification by the Viceroy. One copy would be retained by our Government, and the other handed over to Yakoob Khan. (Our Special Artist's Sketches, engraved for this week's publication, show the scene in Major Cavagnari's tent when the Secretaries were writing out the Treaty, and the subsequent act of signing the Treaty, at Gundamuk, on May 26, by the Ameer and Major Cavagnari.)

This ended the Second Afghan War. As I had entertained hopes of visiting the colossal figures and city of caverns at Bamian before I came home again, I felt anxious to know what Major Cavagnari's movements were likely to be, and in this I found him with his usual frankness as to giving information. He was to return to India, and then, after a month, or perhaps two, he was to proceed to Cabul. Had his orders been to return to Cabul with Yakoob Khan, I should have asked to go with him, and I have no doubt but I should have accompanied him, my desire being strong. I also offered to go with Yakoob Khan, or with any of his people, but this could not be arranged. What my fate might have been had I gone, who can tell? I can only repeat what a native of India would say, "Khuda Jana," or "God alone knows."

These notes of my contact with Sir Louis Cavagnari will show that he was a man with sympathies beyond his own particular duties; for they tell that while he was busy carrying on a complicated and important political campaign he found time to interest himself in other matters. I have seen it lately stated in one of our leading journals that he was an over-sanguine man. From what I saw of him I would not indorse the statement. To be sanguine is one of the necessary conditions of success. At least a couple of months before the Treaty of Gundamuk was arrived at he told me that he would bring the whole matter to a peaceful solution. This he accomplished. He was sanguine; but when a man realises his intentions, the words "over sanguine" do not apply. If any one thinks that Sir Louis Cavagnari went to Cabul and was unconscious of danger, I should say he was mistaken. He went there perfectly well aware of the risk, but he was a brave man, and ran the risk. I always found him quiet and collected, and never seeming as if there was anything of the slightest importance going on. Always open in giving information, when he could do so, and if he could not, equally frank in saying that he must be silent. The campaign became a political one; there was no real army to fight with, so the generals had no chance of distinguishing themselves. The whole onus of the campaign centred at last in Major Cavagnari, and by the able manner in which he managed the duties cut out for him, he won for himself the only reputation of note which was made during the late war. The ability and judgment which he manifested was honoured at last by knighthood, and it is deeply to be regretted that that ability and judgment have not been spared for the use of his country in a region where such high qualifications are likely to be much needed in the future.

The other officers who have nobly fallen along with Sir Louis Cavagnari had also become familiar friends during the late campaign. Mr. Jenkyns was a master of the Persian language, and interested in all the dialects of Central Asia. He caught a nimcha at Jellalabad, and made an effort through him to get down some of the Siah-Posh Kaffirs, so as to get details of their language. These Kaffirs were long supposed to be the descendants of Alexander's Macedonians, but the study of the language seems to be destroying this theory. This nimcha, as the name implies, had been born a Kaffir, but had been converted to Mohammedanism. I was indebted to Mr. Jenkyns for getting a Sketch of this man's physiognomy, which lately appeared in the Illustrated London News. Mr. Jenkyns was a man who, had he lived, would have made his mark in the profession to which he belonged. Lieutenant Hamilton might have been described, with his fair, almost beardless face, as a mere boy, but he was a lion at heart. He was already a V.C., from his gallantry at Futtehabad, and his charging the mob of assailants in Cabul three times, carrying death with his own hand as he dashed among the enemy, is enough to show the kind of stuff he was made of. Dr. Kelly, of the Guides, was also well known to me. Returning evil for good is not a happy sentence to have recorded. But it must be written in this case. Dr. Kelly had opened a dispensary in Cabul, and was doing all he could for the good of those who required his services. At Gundamuk he attended to many of the men who had been wounded in the Futtehabad engagement; in some cases I know he performed operations. And after all these humane services he has been murdered as his reward.

[We shall give the portraits of Lieutenant Hamilton and Dr. Kelly; that of Mr. W. Jenkyns was given last week.]

THE TOWN AND CITADEL OF HERAT.

The news of a military insurrection at this place, and of the murder of the civil and military officers of government there representing the Ameer Yakoob Khan, must be regarded as very serious, with a view to Afghan political complications. Herat, which is situated near the western or Persian frontier of Afghanistan, and not far from Merv and the country of the Tekke Turcomans, where a Russian expedition is now on foot, has long been considered an important stepping-place to conquests in Central Asia. It commands the roads from the Caspian Sea to Candahar and to Cabul, though distant three or four hundred miles from either of those cities. The Shah of Persia has in former times repeatedly contended with the Ameer of Cabul for the possession of this frontier fortress. Just before our Afghan war of forty years ago, Herat endured a ten months' siege from the Persians, when its successful defence was mainly due to the assistance of an English officer of the Royal Engineers, Lieutenant Eldred Pottinger. In 1856, again, the Shah sent an army under General Hassan against Herat, and on this occasion, after a four months' siege, the Persians had better fortune. It surrendered on Oct. 25 in that year. War at once ensued between England and Persia. An expedition under Outram was sent to the Gulf, and a Treaty of Alliance was concluded with Dost Mahomed. The Persians were defeated in several encounters, and our army marched inland. The Shah hastened to repair his mistake. He sued for peace, and withdrew his troops. The Treaty of Paris, concluded in March, 1857, placed a seal on the renunciation of Persia's claims to Herat, and a nephew of Dost Mahomed was intrusted with the charge of this all-important place. For the second time England's active interference had saved it from becoming Persian, and since then the Shah, adhering to the stipulations of the Treaty of Paris, has not made any distinct move upon it. His policy has been limited to underhand intrigues, which up to the present have proved ineffectual. The more recent history of Herat may be briefly described. Sultan Jan, the Dost's nephew, intrigued with Persia, and drove his cousin Shereef Khan out of Ferrah in 1862. The same year the Ameer marched against him, and laid close siege to Herat, which surrendered after a ten months' siege. Sultan Jan died shortly before and Dost Mahomed a few days after the conclusion of the siege. From that time until 1868, when he left to lead his father's armies in the field, the present Ameer Yakoob Khan was Governor there. In 1870 he returned, and from 1871 to 1873 he ruled there in semi-independence, while his father was proclaiming Abdullah Jan as his heir. In 1874 Ayoob Khan was left as Governor during his brother's visit to Cabul; and when he was thrown into prison Shere Ali's authority was restored. A chief of the name of Omar Mahomed Khan was appointed Governor, and he remained there until he was dismissed by Ayoob, who returned from Persia as soon as Shere Ali had fled, last Christmas. Nothing is known of the authorities at Herat. They are presumably those who were nominated by Shere Ali.

The position of Herat in the centre of a country of great natural fertility is peculiarly felicitous. But it is doubtful if it has thoroughly recovered from the effect of those wars which have already been described. Pottinger, writing of the war of 1838, said that "the late war and its consequences have so changed the entire neighbourhood of the city that under its present appearance it would not be recognised by its former visitants." The size of Herat is generally considered to be a mile square, and its population is probably fifty thousand. The rampart which surrounds the town is of great thickness, and there is a wet ditch. Through these walls there are five gates—one authority says seven, but the two additional ones are probably only posterns—and the city lies wholly within this boundary. It is divided into four quarters, and Pottinger gives the following description of the town:—

"The interior of the city is divided into four nearly equal divisions by two streets, which at right angles cross each other in the centre of the city. The principal one joins the gate of Candahar to the Pay-i-Hissar, and was formerly covered by a succession of small domes springing from arches which cross the streets. About two thirds of this magnificent bazaar still remain, but so choked up with rubbish and so ruinous that it has lost much of its attraction to the eye. This bazaar was about 1300 yards long and six in width. The solidity of the masonry of this work should have ensured its stability; but unfortunately the arches are all defective—not one has a key-stone. They are built, as all others are in this country, with a vacancy at the apex filled merely with bits of broken bricks. The whole of the lower floors on each side are used as shops."

The walls are made of hard earth, a great quantity of which has been dug out from the interior of the city, and on these another rampart or screen has been constructed connecting the towers with each other. On an average, the height of the earth rampart may be taken at 90 ft. It is supported by a counterpart of brick, and in front of it lies a ditch, which can be filled or emptied at pleasure. The towers on the ramparts are separated from each other only by 50 ft., and those at the corners are massive and very strong. Ferrier says that guns can be mounted only in the corner towers. There are also two covered ways, or faussebrayes, one commanding the other, cut out of the thickness of the rampart, and these add greatly to the strength of the fortification. They were in existence when Captain Marsh visited Herat in 1872. Kaye calls them the real defences of Herat. The citadel or ark of the town, which in old days was called Kella-i-Aktyar-Eldyn, was by itself a formidable construction, and, although it has long been neglected, it still possesses an important place in the list of the defences of this city. It is situated in the north, where the ground is most elevated, and forms a prominent object in the landscape for miles around. This fortress within a fortress stands on an artificial mound, which is more elevated than the ramparts, and its walls of burnt brick, with towers upon them, are not less formidable in appearance than those of the city wall. It is surrounded by a wide ditch, and, were it repaired and armed with proper artillery, it would be impossible for an enemy to take it. There are two heights within a thousand yards of the walls at Thalehbengy and Mosulla, whence it would be possible to bombard the outer walls; but, as those places are only on a line with the ramparts, and, consequently, considerably below the foundation of the citadel, it would be impossible for an enemy to establish his batteries upon them if the citadel of Herat itself were properly armed.

It has been mentioned that the recent mutiny and revolt of the Ameer's soldiers at Cabul, followed by the massacre of the British Envoy and his companions in the Residency, began with two regiments just arrived there from Herat. Our Special Artist late in Afghanistan, Mr. W. Simpson, furnishes the sketch of two Heratee cavalry soldiers. He writes us the following note:—"Shere Ali Khan died at Mazar-i-Sharif, near Balkh, on Jan. 21 last, and Yakoob Khan sent a messenger to Jellalabad to give formal information of the event. The official who bore the message was Shahgassi Shah Sowar Khan, and he had a couple of sowars with him as an escort. These men had large black sheepskin caps, the long hair of which came down over the eyes and face, giving a wild look to the wearers. They said this was the Turcoman style of headdress, and that it was common with the troops at Herat and along the northern border of Afghanistan; these men stating that they were Heratee soldiers. While sketching, I noticed that one of them had Russian boots on, and he was very much astonished when this was pointed out to him. He looked quite frightened at me, as if I was something supernatural, having the power of attaining such knowledge. One of these men belonged to Herat, and his name was Byram, but the other was called Futteh Mohammed; he belonged to Kelat-i-Ghilzai. One of them carried Shahgassi Shah Sowar Khan's binoculars slung over his shoulder."

LORD HARTINGTON AT NEWCASTLE.

The opening of the Schools of Science and Art at Newcastle-on-Tyne, on Thursday week, was attended by the Marquis of Hartington and by Lord Lambton, the latter representing his father, the Earl of Durham, with Mr. Joseph Cowen, Sir Henry Havelock, Mr. Burt, Colonel Gourley, Mr. Lowthian Bell, Mr. C. M. Palmer, and other members of Parliament. These schools are situated in Bath-lane, Corporation-street, and seem calculated for real usefulness, more especially in assisting the elementary studies preparatory to that technical instruction which is so important to the industrial classes of the population in a town like Newcastle. After the opening of the schools, and singing of an appropriate choral song by the children, Lord Hartington walked through the building and looked at the exhibition of drawings and other articles, amongst which he found a bust of himself, modelled by the school teacher of the modelling class. At half-past one there was a banquet or luncheon in the large school-room, which had been decorated for the occasion. Mr. Cowen was in the chair, and among the gentlemen present, besides a dozen members of the House of Commons, were the Mayors of Newcastle, Gateshead, Sunderland, Tynemouth, and Morpeth. The health of the Marquis of Hartington, as the principal guest, was proposed by Lord Lambton, and was duly honoured. This scene is the subject of our Illustration. In reply to the toast, Lord Hartington acknowledged the compliment which had been paid him; but reserved his speech upon the object of the proceedings for another meeting, which took place in the evening of the same day. He then delivered a sensible address on the principles of modern popular education. Next day he spoke at a political meeting in the town of Newcastle.

BURNS MONUMENT AT KILMARNOCK.

This busy manufacturing town of Ayrshire, as we see, bears no ungrateful memory of the Scottish lyric poet, whose mention of "Kilmarnock wabsters," as of "Mauchline belles," is not quite so tender as that of his native place,

> Auld Ayr, which ne'er a town surpasses
> For honest men and bonnie lasses.

The town of Ayr, within two miles of which is the cottage where he was born, in 1759, with Alloway's ruined kirk, haunted by Tam o' Shanter's witches, has long since possessed its neighbouring Burns Monument, a classic Grecian structure of circular form upheld by nine Corinthian columns, and utterly inappropriate to the character of Burns. Kilmarnock has now provided itself with a Burns Monument, which was on Saturday week inaugurated by Colonel Alexander, M.P. for South Ayrshire. This edifice, which is in the Scottish baronial style of architecture, contains in an alcove a highly successful statue of the poet after the portrait by Nasmyth, by Mr. W. G. Stevenson, of Edinburgh. Colonel Alexander delivered an eloquent panegyric on Burns, and defended him against the charges of immorality and irreligiousness which have from time to time been brought against him. Additional interest was given to the proceedings by the handing over of a park of forty-three acres on the estate of the Duke of Portland, which has been provided for the town by means of a bequest left by Mr. Kay, of Glasgow.

THE PRINCE IMPERIAL'S DEATH IN ZULULAND.

We are favoured by Colonel Davies, of the Grenadier Guards, commanding at Fort Newdigate, in Zululand, with a Sketch drawn at his request by Major Marter, of the King's Dragoon Guards (the officer who has captured King Cetewayo), showing the simple memorial constructed by Corporal Sully and a few soldiers under his orders to mark the spot where the French Prince Imperial was killed, or where his body was found next morning. It is about six miles from Fort Newdigate, in the valley of the Ityotyosi; and views of the place, from Sketches by Mr. Melton Prior, our Special Artist, have already appeared in this Journal. The stones composing this monument, which in form resembles one of the ordinary flat gravestones in an English churchyard, were shaped by the men in garrison at Fort Newdigate, and were carried to the spot in an ox-waggon. The headstone and those forming the cross and the letter "N" are white, the others of a dark colour. The length of the tomb, if it may be so called, is about 8 ft., the breadth, 3½ ft.; the breadth of the donga or ditch in which it is placed is 16 ft., and the height of the banks on each side about 7 ft. To the left of the sketch is shown an easy way through the donga towards the kraal near which the party was when fired upon. Major Marter says, "Having seen the body myself lying in the donga and marked the spot, I know that the work is correctly placed." We give a portrait of this officer on another page.

Mr. E. Dwyer Gray, M.P., has forwarded to Mr. Charles Kirkham, ex-Fenian prisoner, £1200, subscribed by several prominent Irishmen and by a national subscription on his behalf. The testimonial is presented in recognition of Mr. Kirkham's "personal character and literary genius." Mr. Kirkham was one of the leading writers in the Irish People, the journal suppressed by the Government in 1865, and has written "The Untenanted Graves," "Knockmaford," and other stories of Irish peasant life.

HOP-PICKING.

A brief announcement tells the time of year—"Cheap trains for Hop-pickers;" cheap early-morning ones to Kent and Sussex; though, as the growth of hops this season is almost a failure, few of our working classes will be able to avail themselves of the offer; and thus many to whom a good "hopping" means more comfort in the winter will fare but badly when cold weather comes. Even now, that lack of work begins to tell, as we see by the statistics of our unions and by the reports, too, from the labour agencies, many of the latter not sending out one picker, whereas they usually send about 800 each.

This state of things will, however, be felt far more in London than in the rural districts; as in the latter, not only from the lessened hop area, are fewer pickers wanted, but those who are hired take the work as a holiday for health and change, and not from necessity, as they do elsewhere, as they are chiefly girls from Staffordshire—girls only, with a woman as a "ganger"—who, in "the Black Country," have employment on the pit-banks for the whole year round. Still, though, in a pecuniary sense, they will suffer less, through the scantiness of the crop, than will their East-End sisters, their own inability to go hop-picking will be, perhaps, more felt, as their grimy occupation in a dingy atmosphere, makes them long still more for that much-looked-for time when, for some weeks at least, they shall be able to exchange brown streams, and leafless trees, and black surroundings for blue sky, green hills, vast woods, and sparkling water, and all the glories of the Teme Valley.

Hop-grounds are there called "yards;" and, as compared with Kent, they are of small dimensions, as from sixty to eighty "pickers" will suffice for most of them, and 200 are enough for the largest grower. In Kent, however—where the term is "gardens"—whole farms are very often "under hop;" hops not being there an extra, as elsewhere, with hay, corn, fruit, and roots. The number of "hands" which is required down there is, therefore, very great—from 600 or 700 to even 1000, or we may say more, as is evidenced by a letter from a Maidstone man that was in the Daily News, where, alluding to the crop, he says, "My hops are not good for much; so, instead of 1800 pickers, I shall want, perhaps, 300—a poor look-out for East-Enders." Poor, indeed! and for the grower too; for though the price must, of course, be high, the smallness of the yield will prevent hops paying expenses; and so apparent is this that many of the farmers, in each hop county, will not now gather them, as they will not pay even the cost of picking, the blight on them being more general than it was in 1829, when so many men were ruined; and, as bearing on this fact, it may here be mentioned that, in Worcester, at the usual "Hop fair" on Saturday last, four pockets only, of that county's growth, were shown, whereas, on the corresponding day in the previous year, 800 pockets of it were shown and sold. Now, as our own hop-acreage is about 70,000—of which two thirds are in Kent and Sussex—the loss this year must be very great; so great, that it is considered it will not be less than £1,500,000—one million and a half!

The first pocket that came this year to the London market was sold, on Aug. 20, for the unusually large sum of £28 per cwt; that price being £4 more than the best hops fetched in the very scarce year of 1860. The largeness of the price and the earliness of the sample—which simply consists of a few ripe hops picked from a whole hop-farm—must not, in any year, however, be taken as a proof that picking has begun, or that the price then obtained will continue. Picking, to be general, is in one month after; and, as we see by this week's quotations, prices per cwt now range thus:—"Mediums, £5 to £8; fine, £10 to 15 guineas." The risk with hops is constant; in fact, nothing is more hazardous than hop cultivation, as hops may not only be spoiled by one night's high wind, which makes them brown and "foxey," but, even when you have sold them, they may be thrown back on your hands, if, through bad stowage in the warehouse, they then get damp; added to which they must—if they are to pay a fair margin on their cost of growing—fetch, one year with another, quite £5 per cwt, even though that cost is now lessened by "kyanising" the sharp ends of the poles, which, by keeping them from rotting, makes them last much longer.

Hops are of many sorts—"Whitebines," "Redbines," "Grapes," "Jones's," "Goldings," "Colegate's," and others; and, though some suit one soil and some another, the "Cooper-Whites" are mostly selected for early hops, and the "Mayfield Grapes" for late ones; and the best counties for them are Kent and Worcestershire, the Worcester hops being preferred by all the pale ale brewers, as ale brewed with them keeps best in India. Hops were first introduced into this country from Flanders in 1525; but as their growth was petitioned against as a "wicked weed" in three years after, it was the middle of that century before they came into cultivation, and the end of the following one before that culture was general. Their growth per acre depends not only on the season, but on the manner of poling too. In Kent, where they use three or four poles to a "hill," the hops will grow more than a ton to the acre, while, where but two poles to a "stock" are used, the acreage will seldom be more than about 12 cwt. "Hill" and "stock" are synonymous terms for each separate clump of hops, and the poles have, in Kent, to be stronger. In forming a hop-yard the land, say meadow-land, is "double dug"—that is, two spadefuls deep—so as to get fresh soil, the last spadeful being placed on the top, and the hop-"sets"—two, three, or four shoots, as the case may be—are planted in November, in squares or triangles, six feet apart, and poled in June with short sticks four feet high. That year they may, perhaps, bear slightly, though they will not grow a crop till the next, when they will have attained sufficient strength to need, in April, some strong high poles so as to follow the work of March. Then, in May, they will be ready for their first rush-tying, which has to be repeated from time to time, step-ladders being used by the women when the "wires" have got high up the poles. Between the first stirring of the ground in March and the end of July, when the hops are "linking," the soil is kept on the move, and the air let into the roots by the constant ploughing, harrowing, scuffling, and forking which goes on up the rows; and work in the hop-yard scarcely ceases until the hops are fit to pick and the pickers are there, which usually is early in September.

Then begins "hop harvest," and a busy scene it is. The hop-wires being cut and the poles moved to the "bin," the pickers soon fill it with clean-picked hops, no leaves being ever allowed, which, being afterwards put in bags and carted to the kiln—"oast-house," is the term in Kent—are there slowly dried by being spread evenly on the kiln-hairs of the open flooring, through which the steam comes from the coke-fires below—the vapour from it escaping through the cowls; and they are then removed to the hop-room and turned out on the floor; rolled, when cool, and bagged, the "bagger"—in the absence of machinery for that purpose—getting into the bag, and treading them down firmly and evenly, as they are raked towards him; and the bags, thus filled, are sewed up and weighed; and, being sold to the hop merchant, are passed on to the brewer, who gives us the flavour of the hops in his "Old October."

WORK AND WAGES.

THE TRADES' UNION CONGRESS.

The opening of this congress at Edinburgh was announced in our last issue. On the 17th inst. Mr. R. S. Wright, barrister, gave an address, suggesting the formation of local boards such as the Nottingham board for settling wages, and the establishment of a central board of appeal in London. He said the great obstacles in the way of land reform were mainly the enormous and disproportionate legal cost of dealing in it, and the system which in many places so tied up land that there was scarcely ever any transactions in it. Mr. Hall moved a resolution that the reform of the land laws be at once added to the Congress's Parliamentary programme. This having been adopted, Mr. Guile (London) read a paper by Mr. Howell on the codification of the criminal law. It was then resolved, on a motion by Mr. Kennedy (Glasgow), seconded by Mr. Dover (Durham), to urge upon the Government to pass a satisfactory code next Session, the one laid before Parliament, although a great step in the way of reform, being by no means perfect. A resolution was also passed in favour of affording seamen the same protection in the matter of contract as was enjoyed by men in other employments.

Discussion was continued next day on the question of the appointment of additional sub-inspectors under the Factory and Workshops Acts. It was agreed that these situations ought to be open to women as well as to practical working men. Mr. James Bradshaw (Manchester) addressed the Congress on Central Africa as a field of enterprise in view of the trade depression of England. Resolutions were passed in favour of the Patent Laws being placed on a more satisfactory footing, of the Abolition of Imprisonment for Debt, and of wages up to £5 being made a first charge on any bankrupt's estate. Thanks were passed to Mr. Burt for his Parliamentary conduct; and a deputation was appointed to wait on the Archbishop of Canterbury to point out to him the injustice of certain statements respecting Trades Unions made in books used in national schools.

A letter was read on the 19th showing the progress being made at Nottingham towards bringing about a confederation of trade societies, and the congress afterwards proceeded to discuss a motion by Mr. Knight, of Liverpool, in favour of action being taken by the congress towards a confederation, the object of which should be the formation of a fund for the maintenance of the present nine hours' system. The president read a letter from the Rev. W. Cunningham, Lecturer on Political Economy at the University of Cambridge, stating that a body of the clergy had been for some time engaged in an effort to get eliminated from school books the passages which were so justly censured at the previous day's sitting. The Congress adjourned at one o'clock for an excursion to Dalmeney Park, the seat of the Earl of Rosebery, to which they had been invited by his Lordship.

Last Saturday resolutions, among others, were adopted advocating the maintenance of friendly relations between that Congress and the Co-operative Congress, the extension of the hours of polling throughout the kingdom to the same time as in the metropolis, the reduction of the county franchise to the level of the borough, the representation of labour in Parliament, manhood suffrage, and the holding of an international labour congress. Dublin was selected as the place of meeting next year.

A meeting of the Parliamentary Committee of the Congress was held last Monday, at which Mr. Slatter, of Manchester, was elected chairman for the year; Mr. John Burnett, of London, treasurer; and Mr. George Shipton, of London, vice-president. In arranging the business for the year it was agreed that the following should form the bases of action:—A revision of the land laws, including the present laws of entail and primogeniture, and the power of tying up lands by deeds of settlement, the institution of an effective and inexpensive system of registration and conveyancing, the abolition of the existing game laws, the cultivation of waste lands, security of tenure and compensation to tenants for unexhausted improvements.

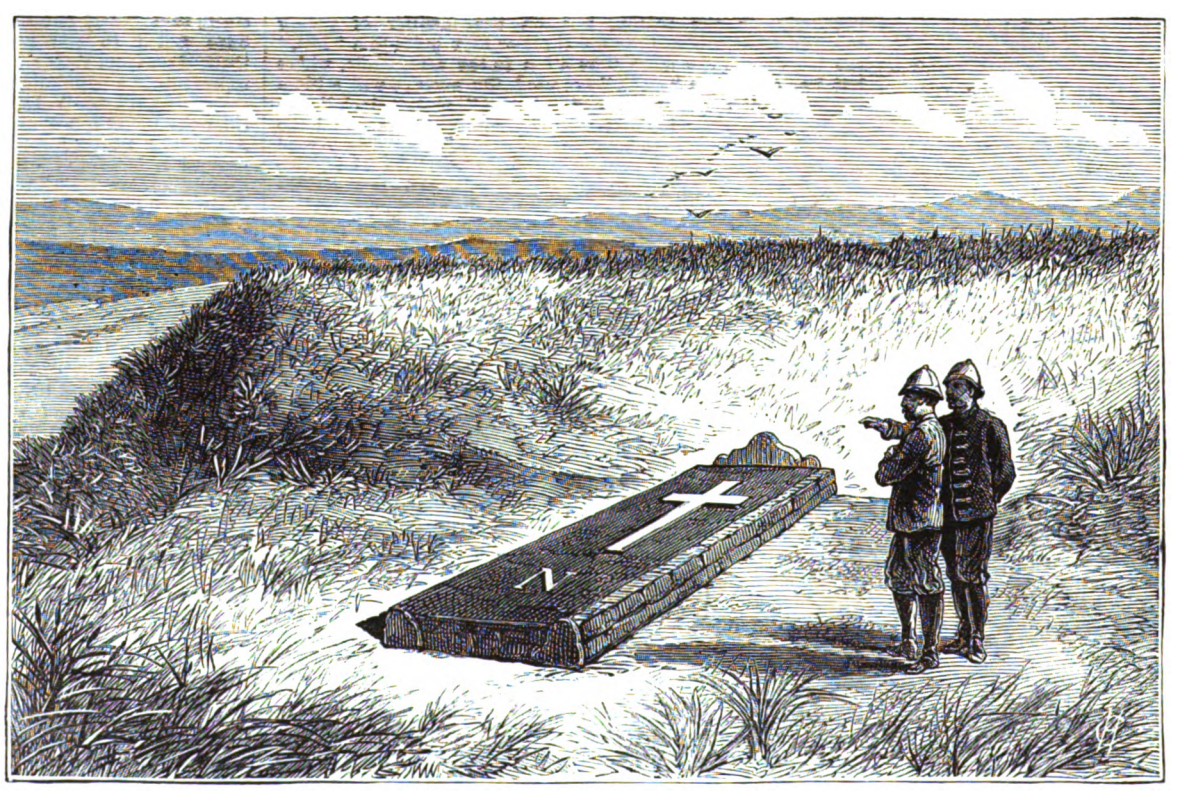
The Lord Provost and magistrates of Glasgow and the parochial boards met on the 18th inst. to consider a scheme for the relief of the unemployed, of whom there are many thousands in the city at present. The object of the authorities is to have the funds administered by officers of the parochial board so as to prevent imposture. Last year the work was done by ward committees having no experience of the deserving poor or their wants. Those committees were frequently misled, and large sums of money misapplied. A basis of operations for the ensuing winter is now under consideration, the principle of which is that the magistrates shall supply all the funds, as the class to be relieved are not paupers, and consequently not under the jurisdiction of the parochial boards. The depressed state of trade in the city, and the great numbers of men and women out of employment, cause grave apprehensions. As showing the amount of distress in Glasgow a local journal states that nearly one-third of the householders in that city have failed to pay poor rates, and have so disqualified themselves from voting. The number of defaulters is 28,013, representing a population of considerably over 130,000.

The award of Mr. David Dale, who had been asked to consider the wages question by the North of England Iron Trade Arbitration Board, has been made known. In the matter of a general reduction of 6d. per ton and 5 per cent on forge and mill wages, Mr. Dale abstains from awarding a reduction, such decision to last for three months, but he awards a reduction of 12½ per cent on the wages of forge rollers, heaters, and shearmen in plate and sheet mills in the manufactured iron trade of the North of England. The rollers, shearmen, and shinglers of the North of England have generally struck against Mr. Dale's arbitration award, reducing their wages. This action throws out of work a large number of other ironworkers.

About 4000 persons were relieved yesterday week at the Townhall, Middlesbrough, the food distributed being herrings, bacon, oatmeal, and bread.

Some thousands of workmen out of employ assembled on Monday afternoon in Sunderland, and marched, accompanied by a band of music, to Sunderland Moor. A resolution was passed expressing a hope that as they were driven by great distress to appeal to the public, their fellow men at work and the public would render all possible assistance.

A mass meeting of colliers on strike was held at Silverdale, North Staffordshire, on Monday morning, when the option was given to about 800 men to resume work at the terms which the men have been contending for. The offer was accepted.



The colliers' strike at Stoke-on-Trent, after a struggle of nearly seven weeks, has terminated in favour of the men, who have prevailed upon the masters to withdraw the notices of a 10 per cent reduction, and to allow work to be recommenced on the old terms.

At a mass meeting of South Wales colliers, held near Swansea last Saturday, the question of joining the National Miners' Union, or of forming an association for South Wales exclusively, was discussed, and eventually the latter course was decided upon. This decision, with the results of meetings in other districts, will afterwards be submitted to a general meeting for adoption or otherwise.

MUSIC.

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

The twenty-fourth series of Saturday afternoon performances will begin next week. Eleven concerts will be given before Christmas and twelve afterwards, these dating from Jan. 31 to April 17 inclusive; the usual supplemental concert for the benefit of Mr. Manns, the conductor, taking place on April 24. Besides many standard classical works, some that are new to these programmes will be introduced, including Hofmann's symphony "Frithiof," Raff's "Spring" symphony (No. 8), Liszt's symphonic poem, "The Ideal;" scenes from Wagner's "Meistersinger," arranged for concert-room performance by the composer; Verdi's overture to "Aroldo," and the ballet music from his "I Vespri Siciliani;" the overture to Mancinelli's "Cleopatra," and a selection from the incidental music of the opera; Bazzini's overture to "King Lear," selections from Berlioz s "Roméo et Juliette" and from his "La Damnation de Faust;" M. Saint-Saëns's "Le Rouet d'Omphale," Svendsen's "Carnaval de Paris" and fourth "Rhapsodie Norvégienne," and a second series of Slavonian Dances by Dvórak.

The English school is to be represented by various compositions, including the prelude and funeral march from Sterndale Bennett's music to "Ajax;" an orchestral prelude and fugue by Mr. G. E. Davenport; a "Scherzo" by Mr. A. C. Mackenzie; a pianoforte concerto by Mr. C. H. H. Parry (to be performed by Mr. Dannreuther); in addition to which, an instrumental piece is to be supplied by each of the four composers who have held the Mendelssohn Scholarship—Dr. Arthur Sullivan, Dr. C. Swinnerton Heap, Mr. W. Shakspeare, and Mr. F. Corder.

All Beethoven's nine symphonies are to be given in chronological order, and the first movement of an unfinished violin concerto by that master is to be produced. Schumann's four symphonies are likewise to be played in regular succession; Mendelssohn's "Antigone" music is to be performed, conducted by Mr. Henry Leslie with the co-operation of his excellent choir; and a special concert is to take place on Jan. 31 in commemoration of the birthday of Schubert.

The opening concert will include Schumann's first symphony; the "Cortége de Bacchus" and "Divertissement" from Delibes' ballet "Sylvia," and Mendelssohn's violin concerto played by Maurice Dengremont, from Paris—a very youthful violinist, and whose performances have attracted much notice abroad.

The Covent-Garden Promenade Concerts are approaching the close of their season—the final performance, for the benefit Messrs. Gatti, the lessees, being fixed for Oct. 4. Last Monday's programme continued the weekly serial performance of Beethoven's symphonies; No. 7 (in A) having been then given. Mr. Charles Halle's refined pianoforte playing has been an attractive feature on several recent occasions. For Wednesday, another classical night was announced.

THEATRES.

THE COURT.

This house reopened on Saturday under the management of Mr. Wilson Barrett, who has already conducted with remarkable success several provincial theatres, including the Grand at Leeds, assisted by Miss Heath, whose classic style of acting reminds us of the days of Mrs. Charles Kean. The impersonation of Jane Shore in Mr. Wills' play of that name has made her popular with a large class of playgoers. The drama in which she has now elected to appear is Mr. Sutherland Edwards' version of "Fernande," by Victorien Sardou. The version is not altogether new, and was performed about nine years ago at the St. James's, then under the management of Mrs. John Wood. On that occasion Mrs. Hermann Vezin acted the part of Clotilde in a manner which must be fresh in the recollection of many playgoers. Miss Fanny Brough was the Fernande, daughter of a gambling saloon-keeper, now undertaken by Miss Rose Kenney, a young lady of some natural talent, but wanting yet in the requisite stage experience. The performance of the play suffered on this account, but it was more than redeemed by the thoroughly artistic style of Miss Heath. The spirit of the ancient drama survives in her. Mr. Charles Coghlan, as André, the lover and husband, played admirably. Mr. Wilson Barrett, too, made his appearance as the sententious Pomerol, and acted with great elocutionary power and much refinement of manner. There was abundance of good acting in the piece, but it was not equal throughout. A blot in the nature of the interest will always interfere with its complete popularity. But the lover of great plays and the exhibition of great passions will always ensure the successful representation of M. Sardou's elaborate drama. The scenery is finely and ambitiously executed, and ought of itself to secure a prolonged run.

LYCEUM.

Mr. Henry Irving has resumed the management of the theatre in which his reputation was won, and been received with a cordial welcome. He was manifestly in robust health, and returned the greeting of the audience with an ardour that left no doubt of his sincerity. Again he appeared as the guilty burgomaster in "The Bells," a drama which by his acting he quickened with a lasting life. We may be sure that his performance was not deficient in vigour, and in many respects he played with more than his usual finish. A more truthful picture of remorse for crime committed and remaining unpunished was never realised; and his death-scene was full of terror. A new and successful comedietta, written by Mr. A. W. Pinero, entitled "Daisy's Escape," completed the entertainment. To-night "The Iron Chest" will be revived.

An alteration has taken place in the performance at the Olympic of "H.M.S. Pinafore." Madame Pauline Rita now sustains the rôle of Josephine, with an amount of grace, talent, and musical skill that will ensure her popularity. Sir Joseph Porter, too, has another representative, Mr. Fleming Norton, who promises to become a satisfactory interpreter of a difficult part. At present he shows signs of nervousness—an index, in general, of superior merit.

The performance of a series of old comedies is projected by the managers of the Imperial, commencing with George Farquhar's comedy of "The Beaux's Stratagem." Miss Litton is to be applauded for having made the experiment, which has every prospect of being successful. It has been accompanied by the production of scenery rich in archæological associations, which add a peculiar value to the revival. Mr. James Stride, long known in connection with Drury Lane and other London theatres, has taken a complimentary subscription benefit at the Imperial Theatre this week.

A benefit on Wednesday next for Mr. Calvert's family will take place at the Prince's Theatre, Manchester. It is to be hoped that it will be extensively patronised.

Mr. Cross, the Home Secretary, is expected to open the winter lecture session of the Edinburgh Philosophical Institution with an address about the beginning of November.

AN ANGLO-FRENCH WATERING-PLACE.

The humours and fashions of that piquant social mixture and medley of holiday folk, with the more or less picturesque, and sometimes uncouth, native element of population, which one sees at certain marine watering-places on foreign shores, have frequently excited the notice of their visitors. One place is apt to differ in many of its tricks and habits from another, if we survey the Continental seacoast, from the German Ocean down the Channel to the Bay of Biscay and the Atlantic, with a minute observation of various classes of residents and occasional sojourners at the favourite points of summer entertainment. The small town of Granville, situated about thirty-three miles south-east of Jersey, near Avranches, which is not less agreeably situated, but apart from the sea, and the romantic structures of Mont St. Michel, has its peculiar attractions for some English people, who desire novelty with a touch of quaintness. "There are good hotels," says a correspondent, "plenty of amusements, and the bathing is characteristic of a free and easy disposition." The sands and the Casino Gardens are thronged with spectators at the usual bathing hour. Instead of machines, to be drawn from the beach out into the water, each lady or gentleman has to enter a small portable cabinet, made of canvas upon a frame, not unlike a sedan-chair, in which he or she will undress, and put on a prescribed bathing-dress, and then come out and walk down to the sea, perhaps loitering on the way to chat with his or her friends. For the use of swimmers and divers, as the depth of water changes greatly here with the tide, sometimes rising and falling as much as 40 ft., there are poles set up, with stepping-blocks at their side, to afford a convenient foothold and place of rest. These arrangements of the Granville bathing-place are shown in our page of Sketches, with the example of a more passive method of taking the benefit of the sea water, preferred by an elderly Frenchman who is not ambitious of natatory display. Lovers and other loungers, an Anglo-Indian officer adjusting the veil or "puggaree" to his straw hat, a young lady of artistic taste making a study of native costume among the granite rocks, and a collection of expressive heads with curious head-gear, fill up the remaining space.

ASTRONOMICAL OCCURRENCES IN OCTOBER.

(From the "Illustrated London Almanack.")

The Moon is near Saturn during the morning hours of the first day; she is near Mars during the night common to the 4th and 5th; she is near Venus on the mornings of the 13th and 14th; she is near Mercury on the 16th; she is near Jupiter during the evening hours of the 24th, and to the left of the planet on the 25th; she is near and to the right of Saturn during the night hours of the 27th and morning hours of the 28th, and left of the planet during the evening and night hours of the 28th; and she is near Mars a second time in the month during the evening hours of the last day. She is nearest the Earth on the 16th, and at her greatest distance on the 4th and 31st. Her phases or times of change are:—

Last Quarter	on the 8th	at 43 minutes after	1h.	in the	afternoon.
New Moon	„ 15th	„ 9	„	3 „	afternoon.
First Quarter	„ 22nd	„ 18	„	6 „	morning.
Full Moon	„ 30th	„ 10	„	2 „	morning.

Mercury is not favourably situated for observation. He sets on the 2nd nearly at the same time as the Sun, and afterwards after the Sun—on the 8th by 8 minutes, on the 18th by 15 minutes, and on the 28th at 5h. 1m., or 22 minutes after sunset. He is in superior conjunction with the Sun on the 6th, near the Moon on the 16th, in his descending node on the 16th, and at his greatest distance from the Sun on the 27th.

Venus is a morning star, rising on the 1st at 5h. 21m. A.M.; on the 8th at 4h. 31m., or 1h. 43m. before the Sun; on the 18th at 3h. 42m. A.M.; and on the 28th at 3h. 13m. A.M., or 3h. 35m. before sunrise. She is stationary among the stars on the 12th, near the Moon on the 13th, and at her greatest brilliancy (a second time this year) on the last day of the month.

Mars rises on the 7th at 7h. 0m. P.M.; on the 17th at 6h. 16m. P.M., and on the 27th at 5h. 26m. P.M., or three quarters of an hour only after sunset; but is visible afterwards throughout the night. He is near the Moon on the 4th, and again on the last day, and stationary among the stars on the 6th. He is due south on the 1st at 3h. 9m. A.M., on the 15th at 2h. 13m. A.M., and on the last day at 1h. 54m. A.M.

Jupiter is an evening star, and on the 9th sets at 2h. 19m. A.M., on the 19th at 1h. 37m. A.M., and on the 29th at 0h. 57m. A.M., and is visible from sunset till these times. He is near the Moon on the 25th, and stationary among the stars on the 29th. He is due south on the 1st at 9h. 45m. P.M., on the 15th at 8h. 46m. P.M., and on the last day at 7h. 42m. P.M.

Saturn, at the beginning of this month, rises nearly at the same time the sun is setting, and afterwards he rises in daylight. He sets on the 6th nearly at the same time as the Sun rises, on the 9th he sets 20 minutes before sunrise, on the 19th he sets at 5h. 12m. A.M.; and on the 29th at 4h. 29m., or 2h. 21m. before the Sun rises; and he is visible throughout the night till these times. He is near the Moon on the 1st, and again on the 28th; and in opposition to the Sun on the 5th. He is due south on the 1st at 0h. 14m. A.M., on the 15th at 11h. 10m. P.M., and on the last day at 10h. 3m. P.M.

A colliery explosion occurred early on Monday morning at one of the pits of the Ebbw Vale Company, and three men and sixteen horses were killed.

At Nottingham, on the 18th inst., Lady Belper, supported by Lord Belper, Earl Manners, Viscount Newark, and Sir James Oldknow, opened Morley House, which has been dedicated to Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., as a café, and for use by local religious and moral institutions.

Lord Derby cut the first turf of the Southport Promenade Extension yesterday week; his Lordship subsequently laid the foundation-stone of a new market-house; and in the evening he spoke on agricultural and commercial depression at a banquet—Mr. Cross, the Home Secretary, and Lord Houghton speaking on the same topic.

The next examination of candidates for admission to the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, will begin in London on Thursday, Nov. 27; the medical examination taking place on the previous day at the Royal Military Academy. The successful candidates will be required to join the Royal Military Academy in March next.

The official liquidators of the West of England Bank have had their calls responded to in full by 75 per cent of the 2000 shareholders, and 150 of the proprietors have made payments on account, or are proposing a compromise. There are, however, 450 proprietors, holding 10,000 shares, who have not yet made any payment, and it is anticipated that 200 of these are entirely destitute of means. The shareholders who have met the call are calling for pressure to be put upon the 250 proprietors who, having means, have failed to meet their liability, and it is said that legal proceedings will be at once taken against the defaulters.—At a meeting at Exeter on the 18th inst. it was announced that the fund for the relief of the destitute shareholders amounted to £9200. Eighty-one applicants had been relieved, and thirty fresh cases had to be dealt with.

It was resolved at a meeting held last Saturday at the Royal Hotel, Plymouth, the Earl of St. Germans presiding, to invite Major Chard to a banquet on his return from Zululand, and at the banquet to present to him a sword of honour.—The members of the Wanderer's Club, Pall-mall, will invite the defenders of Rorke's Drift who are decorated with the Victoria Cross to a dinner to be held on Oct. 9. The chair will be taken by Lord Headley, the president of the committee.—A centrepiece of the value of £600 will be presented to Colonel Buller, C.B., V.C., at the banquet which will next week be given in his honour by the county of Devon. A sword of honour was first spoken of, but a silver trophy is thought to be more appropriate. The Duke of Somerset, the Lord Lieutenant of the county, will preside at the banquet.

FINE ARTS.

A biographical notice of Mr. Poole, R.A., who died on the 22nd inst., appears in our Obituary Column.

A memorial statue by Mr. J. E. Boehm, somewhat larger than life-size, of Leopold, the late King of the Belgians, has been placed by the Queen in St. George's Chapel, Windsor Castle, near the cenotaph erected to the memory of Princess Charlotte, the late King's first consort. On the base of the memorial is a tablet bearing the following inscription:—"Erected by her Majesty Queen Victoria in loving memory of Leopold the First, King of the Belgians, her maternal uncle, who was as a father to her, as she was to him as a daughter."

Mr. Guido Schmitt has submitted to us several photographs from his works, which evince accurate careful drawing and modelling; though of course we cannot, in the medium of black and white, speak to their merits in other respects. Fancy portraits of a girl and child are particularly pretty.

Mr. W. D. Keyworth, jun., has completed a bust of the late Sir Rowland Hill, from a cast which the sculptor was permitted to take after death; also a marble statue of the late Alderman Bannister, for the Town-hall, Hull; and the model of a recumbent statue of the late Archdeacon Musgrave, to be placed in the parish church, Halifax.

The restoration of Tewkesbury Abbey is now so far completed that an octave of services in connection with its reopening commenced on Tuesday last. The architecture of the abbey is mainly in two styles of architecture—Norman, of a very plain plan, but very fine in its proportions; and a beautiful variety of Middle Decorated. The restoration has been effected chiefly since 1875, the choir having been undertaken in the first instance, and subsequently the nave, which has now been completed. The total cost of the work hitherto has been a little over £9000, and nearly £7000 more is required for the completion of the restoration in accordance with the recommendations of Sir Gilbert Scott.

A typical example of the mutilations to which our ecclesiastical monuments are continually exposed through the want of taste and parsimony of vestries and churchwardens is furnished, as pointed out by Mr. J. P. Seddon in a letter to the Times, in the case of the Church of St. Mary-le-Strand, the masterpiece of the architect Gibbs, and a church so perfect in its proportion and details that no fraction can be spared. It appears that some of the external ornamentation having become decayed orders were given, not to repair or reinstate, but simply to abolish the same. Already two tiers of the exquisite steeple have been stripped of the vases on their angles which gave such life to the sky-line and refinement to the design. The charming balustraded parapet that surmounts the body of the church was also condemned to be removed, though its destruction has been stayed for a season.

The death is announced of Mr. Edwin Edwards, who as a lawyer obtained a large practice as examining proctor, and also wrote several works on legal subjects; and who, at a comparatively advanced age, devoted himself to painting and etching with considerable success. His large etching of London from Greenwich-hill was one of the most remarkable works of its kind in this year's Royal Academy Exhibition.

We have already said that the fountain of the Ponte Sisto, against the demolition of which "Ouida" raised such an outcry, is to be re-erected near the Farnese. We now hear that yet another great fountain is to be erected shortly at Rome, in the Piazza Venezia. It is to be no less than twenty mètres high and twelve wide. The design, which is by Mr. Hooker, an American artist, includes in the inferior basin a gondola and gondolier and the lion of St. Mark, in reference to the old palace of the Venetian Republic, whose blank walls and machicolations frown on the piazza to which it gives its name. Above are two statues, symbolising the rivers Tiber and Aniene, which supply Rome with water. On one side are oars and an old Roman contemplating the ruins of old Rome. The whole is crowned by the figure of Victor Emmanuel presenting a sword to Religion and Italy. The elements of the composition seem as heterogeneous and risky as they appear difficult to reconcile and arrange symmetrically.

Another of the most characteristic features of Rome is to disappear—the Jews' quarter, the historic but filthy Ghetto—to make place for the New Palace of Justice. The Jews who continued to live there since the olden time when they were locked up at night, and subject to all kinds of insults, inquisitions, and extortions will have to find other and cleaner quarters. The Ghetto, with its slums, was certainly a stain upon the city and injurious to public health. The artist will miss some "bits" of a peculiar picturesqueness; but the antiquarian will lose little, if anything, of importance and interest. The Italian Government is certainly to be commended in this matter rather than otherwise; and when we remember the many handsome additions which have been made to Rome within recent years; how habitable, commodious, and comparatively healthy the city now is, or is fast becoming; and how much of ancient Rome has been guarded and preserved during the alterations and additions necessitated to meet modern requirements and those of a capital, we cannot but feel somewhat indulgent towards some alleged errors and "Vandalism" so called.

The well-known French architect and art critic, M. Eugène Emmanual Viollet-Leduc, died of apoplexy at Lausanne on the 17th inst, aged sixty-five.

Herr Johann Kracker, a German engraver of ability, died recently at Munich, aged fifty-six years.

A report of the committee of the Dublin Corporation having charge of the question of the site for the Gough statue has been issued. The committee recommend, in accordance with the resolution of the council of the 13th inst., "that the portion of Sackville-street now occupied by the carmen's shelter and coffee-house, or thereabouts, adjoining the Rotundo, be granted as a site for the statue."

The Committee of Privy Council on Education have issued a voluminous report of the proceedings of the Education Department during the past year for the promotion of elementary education in England and Wales. They state that in many important respects the progress made since they presented their last report has been extremely satisfactory. The inspectors, in the year ended August, 1878, visited 16,293 day schools, to which annual grants were made, furnishing accommodation for 3,942,337 scholars. Of these 1,189,557 were infants under seven years of age, 2,158,179 were between seven and thirteen, and 148,156 were above thirteen. The average daily attendance throughout the year was 2,405,197; and, while 938,058 passed the examination in reading, writing, and arithmetic, 86·59 out of every 100 examined passed in reading, 79·59 in writing, and 72·24 in arithmetic. These figures show a considerable improvement upon the returns quoted in the last report. The accommodation has increased by 288,919 school places, the scholars on the registers by 340,919, those present at inspection by 310,929, and the average attendance by 254,514, while the number of children individually examined has increased by 227,126.

OBITUARY.

THE RIGHT REV. DR. BARING.

The Right Rev. Charles Baring, D.D., late Bishop of Durham, whose decease, which occurred on the 16th inst, was briefly recorded in our last number, was the fourth son of Sir Thomas Baring, second Baronet, M.P., by Mary Ursula, his wife, eldest daughter of Charles Sealy, Esq., of Calcutta, barrister-at-law, and was brother of the late Sir Francis Baring, created Lord Northbrook Jan. 4, 1866. Dr. Baring was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, where he obtained a double first class in 1829, and he became successively Curate of St. Ebbe's, Oxford, Rector of All Souls' Church, Langham-place, and of Lumpsfield, Surrey. He was consecrated, in 1856, Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, and was translated to Durham in 1861. He supported strenuously the Evangelical section of the Church. Dr. Baring was twice married; first, in 1830, to Mary Ursula, only daughter of Colonel Charles Sealy, H.E.I.C.S. (which lady died in 1840), by whom he leaves an only surviving son, Thomas Charles Baring, Esq., of High Beach, M.P. for South Essex; and, secondly, in 1846, to Caroline, daughter of the late Thomas Read Kemp, Esq., of Dale Park, Sussex, by whom he leaves one son and two daughters.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL HERBERT.

Lieutenant-General Charles Herbert, C.B., formerly commanding the 54th Regiment, died on the 19th inst. at Thames Ditton, aged seventy-four. He obtained his first commission in the Army as ensign in November, 1825, and commanded the 75th Regiment during the operations against Delhi, and was wounded in the action of June 8, and again at the assault of Delhi. For his services in India he was nominated a Companion of the Order of the Bath in 1858, and had received the medal and clasp for Delhi. The late General was one of the officers in the receipt of a reward for "distinguished or meritorious services."

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL INGLES LOCKHART.

Lieutenant-General Archibald Inglès Lockhart, C.B., formerly commanding the 92nd Gordon Highlanders, died on the 17th inst. at Edinburgh, aged sixty-nine. He entered the Army in 1828, and obtained the commission of Lieutenant-General Oct. 1, 1877. In 1858 he served in many actions in Central India, and in that year received a medal and was made a Companion of the Bath.

MR. POOLE, R.A.

We have to record the death of Paul Falconer Poole, Esq., R.A., which took place at his residence, Uplands, Green Hill, Hampstead, on the 22nd inst. This true artist, one of the few poetical painters of the English school, was born at Bristol in 1810. He first exhibited at the Academy, in 1830, "The Well: a Scene at Naples," but did not exhibit again till 1837—"The Farewell." His subsequent works range themselves distinctly asunder, between rustic and domestic subjects and illustrations of the poets and history. The latter are always distinguished by originality of conception and romantic feeling in colour and effect, rather than by accurate draughtsmanship. Among the principal works of this class are "Herman and Dorothea at the Fountain" (1840), "By the Waters of Babylon" and "Margaret at the Spinning-Wheel" (1842), "Solomon Eagle Exhorting the People to Repentance" (1843), "The Beleaguered Moors" (1844), and "The Visitation of Sion Monastery" (1846). In this year he was elected an Associate of the Academy, and an Academician in 1861. In the Westminster Hall competition of 1847 his large painting, "Edward III.'s Generosity to the People of Calais," gained a prize in the second class of £300. His best known succeeding pictures are "Arlète, first discovered by Robert le Diable" (1848), three scenes from "The Tempest" (1849), "Job and his Friends" (1850), "The Goths in Italy" (1852), "The Song of the Troubadour," "Philomela's Song by the Beautiful Lake," "The Escape of Glaucus and Ione," "The Parting Moment," "The Ordeal by Water," "The Last Scene in 'Leah,'" "A Suburb of Pompeii," "A Midsummer Night," Lighting the Beacon at the Appearance of the Spanish Armada" (1864), "Imogen before the Cave of Belarius," "The Phantom Hunter," "The Banishment of Constance," "The Lion in the Path," "The Banquet Scene from 'The Tempest,'" and other works which will be fresh in the reader's recollection. Many of Mr. Poole's finest works are in the noble collection of Mr. David Price, Queen Anne-street. A portrait of the artist appeared in our Number for Feb. 23, 1861.

The deaths have also been announced of—

Captain Henry Coryton, R.N., at Pentillie Castle, Cornwall, on the 16th inst., aged sixty-nine.

Francis Leslock Beaufort, Esq, Bengal Civil Service (retired), on the 7th inst., at Dunkeld, Perth. He was second son of the late Admiral Sir Francis Beaufort, K.C.B.

Mark Boyd, Esq., J.P., late of Merton Hall, in the county of Wigton, on the 12th inst. at 16, St. George's-place, Hyde Park. He was born in 1805, the third son of Edward Boyd, Esq., of Merton Hall, D.L., by Jane, his wife, eldest daughter of Benjamin Yule, Esq.

Peregrine Royds Dearden, Esq., on the 12th inst, at Swinton, Manchester, aged sixty-six. He was the youngest son of the late James Dearden, Esq, of Handle Hall and of The Orchard, and was brother of the present James Dearden, Esq., J.P., of Rochdale Manor, Lancashire.

Adolphus Frederick Connell, Colonel on the Staff, and Commanding the Royal Artillery at Gibraltar, at Tangiers, on the 9th inst. He entered the Royal Artillery in 1842, served at the Siege and Fall of Sebastopol, and had received the Crimean Medal with clasp and the Turkish Medal. He attained the rank of Colonel in 1871.

Lionel Lawson, Esq., one of the principal proprietors of the Daily Telegraph, on the 20th inst., after a brief illness, at his residence in Brook-street, Hanover-square. He was well and favourably known in society, had been for years a liberal patron of the drama, and his loss will be deeply regretted by his many relatives and friends in London and Paris.

Robert Clutterbuck, Esq., J.P., of 8, Great Cumberland-place, W., and Hinxworth, Herts, on the 16th inst., at 17, Grosvenor-square, aged eighty. He was son of Robert Clutterbuck, Esq. (author of the "History and Antiquities of Herts"), by Marianne, his wife, eldest daughter of Colonel James Capper, Bengal Artillery.

Isaac Spooner, Esq., M.A., J.P., late Stipendiary Magistrate for South Staffordshire, on the 16th inst., at Tixall Cottage, aged sixty-nine. He was the son of Isaac Spooner, elder brother of the late Richard Spooner, banker, M.P. for Birmingham, and afterwards for North Warwickshire, and was grandson of Isaac Spooner, Esq., by Barbara, his wife, sister of Henry, first Lord Calthorpe.

Henry Neild, Esq., of The Grange, Worsley, Lancashire, on the 20th inst. As a practical agriculturist Mr. Neild had acquired a reputation which was not merely local. His chief work was in connection with the Royal Manchester, Liverpool, and North Lancashire Agricultural Society, of whose council he had long been an active member. He was also a member of the Central Chamber of Agriculture from its commencement.

Solution of Problem No. 1855.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. B to Q Kt 2nd	B takes B
2. Q to Kt 4th (ch)	P to B 4th
3. P takes P en pas., discovering checkmate.

If Black play 1. B to Q Kt 5th, then 2. Q takes B (ch); if 1. B to Q B 4th, then 2. Q to Q 8th (ch); if 1. R to B 4th, then 2. B takes B (ch) (and 3. Q to Q Kt 2nd); if 1. K to K 2nd, then 2. Kt takes Kt (ch); if 1. K to B 4th, then 2. Kt to Q 3rd (ch); if 1. B takes Kt, then 2. B takes B (ch). White mates in every case on the third move.

PROBLEM No. 1858.
By J. J. Watts.
BLACK.

WHITE.
White to play, and mate in three moves.

A Game played at the Buda-Pesth Chess Club between Dr Jakody and Herr E. Kemény.—(King's Gambit declined.)

WHITE (Dr. J.)	BLACK (Herr K.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th
2. P to K B 4th	P to Q 4th
3. P takes Q P	P to K 5th
4. Kt to Q B 3rd	Kt to K B 3rd
5. B to Kt 5th (ch)	P to B 3rd
6. P takes P	P takes P

6. Kt takes P, bringing another piece out, is the correct move here.

7. B to B 4th	B to Q B 4th
8. Kt to K 2nd	B to K B 4th
9. P to Q 4th	P takes P en pas.
10. P takes P	Castles
11. P to Q 4th	B to Q Kt 3rd
12. Castles	R to K sq
13. K to R sq	B to Kt 5th
14. Q to Kt 3rd	R to K 2nd
15. R to Q sq	B takes P
16. B to K 3rd

Highly ingenious. Of course, 16. R takes B would have been bad, because of Black's reply, 16. Q takes R, and mate, should the Queen be captured.

16.	P to B 4th

If 16. R takes B, White wins the K B P and recovers the piece at once.

17. B takes B	P takes B
18. R takes P	Kt to Q 2nd
19. Kt to Kt 3rd	R to Kt sq
20. Q to B 2nd	Q to Kt 3rd
21. Kt to Kt 5th

Too hazardous. 21. R to Q 2nd seems preferable.

21.	P to Q R 3rd
22. R to Q 6th	Q to B 4th
23. R to B 6th

He must now submit to the sacrifice of a Rook and two minor pieces for the Queen, or the loss of a clear piece.

23.	Q takes R
24. B takes P (ch)	K takes B
25. Q takes Q	P takes Kt
26. P to B 5th	Q R to K sq
27. P to R 3rd	R to K 6th

A very pretty combination is here initiated, but it is unsound; and White, happily, hits the blot at the right moment.

28. K to R 2nd	Q Kt to K 4th
29. Q takes P

The saving clause.

29.	B takes B P
30. Kt takes B	Q Kt to Kt 5th (ch)
31. P takes Kt	Kt takes P (ch)
32. K to Kt sq	R to K 8th (ch)
33. Q to B sq	R takes Q (ch)
34. R takes R	R to Q R sq
35. Kt to R 6th (double ch), and wins.

The "mechanical chessplayer," Mephisto, has removed from the Strand to Brighton, and his perceptive faculties appear to be just as susceptible of the beneficial influences of change of scene as those of ordinary mortals. The following brilliant little Game was won by Mephisto a few days ago when opposed by an Amateur of considerable force.

(Allgaier Gambit.)

WHITE (Mephisto).	BLACK (Amateur).
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th
2. P to K B 4th	P takes P
3. Kt to K B 3rd	P to K Kt 4th
4. P to K R 4th	P to Kt 5th
5. Kt to Kt 5th	P to K R 3rd
6. Kt takes P	K takes Kt
7. P to Q 4th	P to Q 4th
8. B takes P	Kt to K B 3rd
9. Kt to B 3rd	B to Kt 5th
10. B to K 5th	Kt takes P

Black pays dearly for this premature assault.

11. B to Q 3rd	Kt takes Kt
12 Castles (ch)	K to Kt sq

Obviously, 12. K to K sq is little better.

13. Q to K sq	Kt to K 5th
14. Q takes Kt

A very fine coup; whether the Queen is taken or not, Black is without resource.

14.	P takes Q
15. B to B 4th (ch)	K to R 2nd
16. R to B 7th (ch)	K to Kt 3rd
16. R to Kt 7th (ch)	K to R 4th
18. B to B 7th (ch)	K takes P
19. K to R 2nd, and Black resigned.

We have been requested to state that the Morphy Chess Club has removed from the Mason's Hall Tavern, Guildhall, to the Moorgate Station Restaurant, and that the club is open to receive a few members without entrance-fee until the end of the current year.

Lord Chelmsford yesterday week visited his brother, Lord Justice Thesiger, at Lymington. The Mayor and Corporation presented him with an address, in response to which Lord Chelmsford said he was not the broken-down man he had been represented to be, although he needed repose after his labours. The town was decorated with flags and triumphal arches. A procession of about a hundred carriages of the local gentry accompanied the late Commander-in-Chief from the station.

Joseph Angus, D.D., the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £50,000. The testator bequeaths the copyright of his Annotated Paragraph Bible, with explanatory notes, to the Religious Tract Society; to his wife, Mrs. Harriet Gurney, £200 and all his household furniture and effects; legacies to his children, and ten guineas each to certain members of his staff at Abingdon-street. The testatrix bequeaths £1000 each to Hackney College, otherwise called Hackney Theological Seminary, and the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, the Home Missionary Society, and the Little Boys' Home at Farningham, Kent; £500 each to the Congregational School at Lewisham, Kent, Lady Huntingdon's College, Cheshunt, Herts, and the London Missionary Society, Blomfield-street, Finsbury, for the widows' and orphans' fund, and a further sum of £200 for the Zenana Missions in India and China, in connection with the said society; £200 each to the Mission School for Daughters of Missionaries at Walthamstow, the London City Mission, the Sunday School Union, the Sea-Bathing Infirmary, Margate, the Orphan Asylum at Reedham, the Orphan Working School at Haverstock-hill, the House of Industry, Spitalfields, of which Miss Annie Macpherson is principal, the East London Training Institute, of which the Rev. The chairman and secretary of the Central Chamber of Agriculture have issued a circular to the local chambers stating that it is very desirable that assistance should be rendered by those chambers to the Royal Commission on Agriculture, and pointing out that attention should be drawn to any special hindrances to successful agriculture in particular districts.

A demonstration of tenant farmers was held at Tipperary on Sunday, and was attended by several thousand persons. Resolutions were passed calling for the reform of the Irish land system, asking the Government to establish relief works, and pledging Irish tenants not to occupy farms from which evictions had been made. Mr. Parnell said the tenants were not in a condition to pay any rent whatever, and recommended that, in order to coerce the landlords, none should be paid.
